I would like to describe some of the toilets of the ladies, but I am not posted in the mysterious names of a lady's wardrobe and being alone, "All alone by the sea-side he left me," I fear I would get it considerably mixed. I heard one lady remark, "basques and over-skirts are the most popular," and I give you the full benefit of that startling asservation. A lady passed me just then wearing a red bird on her hat, which recalls to my mind a little incident I witnessed the other day. I stopped in at a taxidermist, that is one who stuffs birds, the other day, and was horrified. There is no lady deserving of the name who could witness without a feeling of horror the process of preparing for use the feathered beauties which form such conspicuous ornaments in the present style of women's hats. If those who wear such ornaments knew the tortures to which these helpless little creatures are subjected, and the heartless cruelty with which the business is carried on, they would shrink from even indirect complicity in it. Of course the impression prevails that all birds used for personal decoration are killed immediately when caught and prepared in the ordinary way by taxidermists; but here is just where the mistake is made. The birds are taken alive, and while living the skin is skillfully stripped from their quivering, ghastly bodies. By this process it is claimed the feathers retain a firmer hold on the skin. Such is the method by which all birds used in the decoration of ladies' hats are prepared. Think of the exquisite humming bird, the blue bird, the cardinal bird the oriole, and numberless others of beautiful plumage, struggling beneath the knife of the heartless operator; think of this, tender-hearted ladies as your admiring gaze rests on the latest novelties in fashion by which our city belles are crowned! Hundreds of thousands of birds of the brightest plumage are literly flayed alive every year, and so long as our ladies will consent to wear such ornaments, just so long will this cruel business continue.

Now, ladies, its no use talking, I must write a little politics, its in the air, and the yeomanry must not be ignored.

I had not time last week to tell you of our trip to Philadelphia. A merrier party than went over to the "City of Brotherly Love" from this town of "magnificent distances" cannot well be imagined. If Tom Scott wishes to run his railroad through Pennsylvania avenue, and to accommodate him it becomes necessary to remove the Capitol and Treasury department, by all means let us not stand on triffes, but vote for it early and often.

Everybody, with their wives and daughters, (and other people's wives and daughters,) accepted Mr. Scott's invitation. We Americans do not do things by halves. Everybody became very attentive to their wives and daughters, (and other people's wives and daughters) North and South clasped hands, and things jubilated generally.

The American Senate, however, preserved its dignity. We were glad of this because that relieved the rest of us. The American Senate appeared bodily, clothed in its purple and fine linen, thoroughly washed and starched for the occasion. Not so with the House, Gen. Banks, of Massachusetts, with his northern placidity and coolness, sat next Gen. Robbins, of North Carolina, a brave and ardent rebel general.

The Illinoisan and Michigander were grouped together, evidently bent on a bender. The clerk of the weather had ordered rain specially to settle the dust for us. Mr. Scott aware of the enthusiasm for beauty (?) among the members, set us winding through the romantic valleys and hills of Maryland and Pennsylvania.

Nature bedecked herself in festal array; woods and orchards blossomed for us; every individual leaf had on its fresh, luscious spring green that we might look enchanted.

Crowds assembled everywhere to greet us. It was odd and exhilarating to look at the sea of upturned faces. Every woman adjusted her bonnet and frizzes, bethinking herself she might be mistaken for Mrs. Dom Pedro. Good-looking, gray-headed gentlemen stepped out on the platform, smiling down with "a smile that was childlike and bland" upon the curious eyes.

There was such a demand at every town, station and water-tank for Dom Pedro, the Emperor, that at last, in self defense, it was resolved to furnish him. The party that conceived this happy thought agreed to take turns in representing his august majesty of Brazil. It was jolly good fun to see Gen. Banks solemnly escort to the platform in response to the wild cries, and note the enthusiasm that responded to his dignified bow. The best Dom Pedro we had however, was Mr. Farnsworth of Illinois He not only bowed, but made a little speech that so impressed the crowd that one pug-nosed, blonde six-footer roared out:

"I say, Dom, stay with us and we'll elect you President. We want a candidate mighty bad."

It would be a little odd were this distinguished visitor to turn out the "great unknown."

This week has not been very eventful. Up to the present writing the impeachment question has not been settled, though the luminaries of the Senate are shedding the rays of their wisdom in secret session over the general gloom of the place. The judicial and sublime Conkling mission to the Vermont senator, who resembles linked sweetness long drawn out, that he (the blonde) had faults, but they were not chronic. Until this candid confession was made, which I suppose is due to the recent revival in our long-suffering city, no one dared to think the judicial and instinct ing Conkling had a fault.

The great conundrum of the day is, "Who is going to be President?" Every one has a different answer. I have been rushing around with that conundrum for two weeks, but I have as yet found no solution. The moment the head of a candidate appears above water every one "goes for him," and in a few days his character looks as if the fly-wheel of the great Corliss engine had struck it.

The result of the Ohio convention was considerably talked about here, and the extreme inflation ideas, are, to say the least, not popular. Thurman's defeat there is gaining him friends here, and he is a stronger Presidential candidate to-day than ever.

I went in to see Judge David Davis, in the Supreme Court the other day, and was never favorably impressed with the man. He is a large dignified looking old gentleman, and I believe would make a strong candidate. But I believe Hendricks is still in the advance according to the sentiment here. He was here last week, and was cordially greeted by many of his admirers. Tilden is cold, repelling in his nature, and is not personally popular. The nomination is evidently between the gentlemen named.

When the present Congress met to organize we heard from all parts of the Southern side and some Western Democrats of the House, a demand for place in behalf of Fitzhugh. We had been knocking about over this earth for many years, but it had never been our fortune, good or bad, to either see or hear of Fitzhugh, and so we were moved to ask who was this man, and then we learned that he was the grandson of Patric Henry and the nephew of John M. Botts.

"Yes, sah, be gawd, sah, fust family of Verginny, sah, make him doahkeepah yes, sah, be gawd, sah."

He wrote a miserably foolish letter to a friend, after he was elected door keeper, and he is now threatened with dismissal.

Washington is a political circus, a great ring where all kinds of performing is going on. We have our ring-masters, our bare-backed or bare-faced riders. It is sawdust and houp-la from beginning to end. Every one rides his trained horse and jumps through the political hoops covered with the paper of accumulation blindly, but practice making perfect, they generally land on the trained horse of success on the other side. We have always our favorite clown. The one at present is Fitzhugh the great Texas letter writer. I understand Josh Billings is going to sue the "biger man" for infringing on the copy-right of spelling. This is a free country and if a man wants to be a little eccentric in the matter of spelling why not? Fitzhugh is being investigated now, but I fail utterly to see, for want of an established precedent, why bad spelling should make a man not eligible to any position in Congress; and I suppose Fitzhugh would rather be a door-keeper in the House of Representatives than a first-class speller in a Sunday school. Serious speaking, we laugh at Fitzhugh because he hastened to write himself down, not as ass, but a half a dozen of them. We laugh at him, but the contempt and scorn is reserved for the best (for it would be base flattery to call him a man) who could so far forget and violate every feeling of delicacy and honor as to publish, or allow to be published, a letter, no matter how foolish, written to him as from one friend to another. His excuse, which he gives in a letter over his own signature, that it was not strictly a private letter, but a business one, only makes him more of a coward and sneak.

Sheriff Meese was set on track of a fellow named Geo. Clark-not our Geo.-for stealing a horse. After a few days' search the Sheriff captured the lark-e at Hudson, Mich , and now he lies quietly within the bars at Flint, Ohio. He plead guilty, and that sent him for four years.

A tin can tied to a purp's narrative, was the sport of some of the boys of this place one night last week. The last we heard of the poor fellow, he was going up Jackson street at a 2:40 pace howling at the top of his voice every jump he made.

Edward Putt, foreman of the Garrett City News, was in town over Sunday. He had to stay over to see his—lady. Well, Ed. is a good fellow, and a good looking fellow and if he wants to go with our Auburn belle, we have no objections, if the other gals ain't.

Correspondents of this paper will confer a favor upon us, especially during the campaign, if they will make brevity the soul of their wit. During these bellticial war times we have use for all our available space at the same time desire to give all the local news we can get.

This is significant from the Plymouth Democrat: A new game called Granger Seven Up is announced. It is said to be a much more exciting game than draw poker. It is played in this way: Three persons play for a can of oysters; the first man out gets the oysters, the last man out gets the can and the "middle man" don't get anything!

Mushroon hunting is a common thing among those who relish them. We walked about seven miles the other day and got a mess—it was a very small one however. There was six on'em, about a week old. They was good, but since that time we traveled just like a fellow walking on eggs. It makes our feet sore to ride.

Further and more definate notice will be given in due time

We want to rise and say that Kahn, our popular clothing man, is a natural born genius. Last week he made an apparatus, which we have attached to our job press, that counts every paper that is worked off. It works similar to an old fashion wooden clock, and will count just as correct as you could do it yourself. Our devil says it is like Geo. Washington, all but the hatchet

Last Friday night the Hook and Ladder company made a bon-fire to practice on. They started around the square with the speed of a cammel-back engine and when turning the last corner they frightened a horse which broke loose and in jumping sideways lit on Grant Griswold, resulting in severe wounds about his head and face. Grant is large and stout, but he could stand it better to jump on a horse, than to have a horse jump on him.

The base ball panic is inclined to be languid this season, for reasons which we do not fully comperhend. Not that the game is wholly abandoned but it doesn't fill the community with the measure of excitement as in the days of old. The air isn't full of broken noses, ragged fingers and front teeth, as in former times, but we hope the boys will come to time and scare up a first-class nine. Nearly every town in the county will have a base ball club and we ought to keep pace with them, sure.

The man who stopped his paper sometime ago because it was of no use to him and cost two dollars a year besides, called in the other day, inquire why Belknap had traded the Black Hills to Bismark for a mule contract and to find out whether the Cubans belonged to the Modocs or were a separate tribe of Indians by themselvs. Our manner was firm but kind, as we directed him to the nearest drug store, where they supplied him with a fresh almanac, and he departed for home to master its pleasant varieties.

We received a communication from Concord Corners this week which we can not, in justice ourselves, publish. It is simply a puff for two men, and were we to give them a notice gratis many others would expect the same. We cannot publish a paper without money, and our patrons all pay us 10c a line for locals that benefits none but themselves. Any man that wants a puff through the COURIER must expect to pay our regular rates for it. It takes money to make the mare go, and it takes money to make a paper go.

Mr. William Brown, living east of town about four miles, met with a terrible accident last Friday night at about four o'clock. He was intending to visit friends in Bowling Green, Wood county, Ohio, and his son John took him to the train, and not making the train he expected for his journey, he stayed over at Mr. S. Lawhead's, and started for the train at 2 o'clock A. M. The accident was unknown by all parties on the train, and after arriving at Garrett the discovery was first made of his death. Mr. Brown was well known in the county, and was one of the oldest citizens. He has many friends to mourn his loss, and the best of wishes of the community are extended to his family in the loss of a faithful father. He had lived for a long number of years, his age being 71 years, 8 months and 25 days.

MR. COURIER: If you blease, you vill pe so kind und allow me to dresspass on de columns of your infaluaple paper, to de extent of a handful of remarks on de great questions of de tay—inflation oder outflation? Condraction oder extraction of our currency, mit a gold basis for specious payments?

I pelieve some peoples knows too much apout sometings, (I vas not mineself vone of dose kind of peoples,) und for dot reasons dere ought to be a society for de suppression of useless knowledges; und so soon as dot happens, dere vould be immediately a royal road to learning—sometings or oder apout sometings.

Some of dose fellers vot knows all apout de finances by France und England und Egypt und de king of de Cannonball Islands, also vot kind of money Adam und Eve used to go out shopping mit—some of dose shmart fellers might be, perhaps possobably surprised at deir own extonishment to find out how much I don't know apout finance. But dot's shust vhere de hen pinches—I mean vhere de boot shcratches. You see I vas not brejudiced apout dis question by too much knowledges of de supshect und, derefore vot I say—if I may say so, vas of importance; I say if I may say so, I say so.

De solution of specious basis of de finance question vas more simpler as de easiest sum in addition contraction und multiblication. The ting vas so blaine you can see de boint mit your naked eye or hear it mit your naked ear. Uhd not only vas it visible to de eye sight und ear sight, but in fact it vas visible to efery one of de five senses, in cluding common sense und even nonsense; und I hat not some doubt I can confict anybody dot vas open to confiction dot paper money vas more better as gold und silfer money, on account of de following reasons namely to vit:

Firstly. If you carry gold und silfer in your pockets around dot makes a hole derein you lose a quarter dollar dere out and you den say sometings to your wife apout for vhy she don't keep de holes out of your pockets. Den she gets mad und makes your head on de proomshtick and you got to sphend anoder quarter dollar shticking-plaster, also Mr. Soothings Vinslow syrup, twenty-fife cents. Totel, sefenty-fife cents losed on account of hard money.

Secondly. Dose fellers vot owns dem "Big Banaua" silfer mines vants silfer currency. But the gofernment has got not some right to do sometings vot vill make de rich more richer und de poor more poorer. Dere vas no brifate corporations vot owns a paper mines, and derefore money should pe made from paper out, because it vas more sheaper, und economy vas de pest policy.

Lastly, (but not leastly.) It vas a sin to put a carriage horses mit de plow, or to make fire-wood out of a malogany tree. You don't can make gold und silfer vatches und shpoons und trinking implements &c., from paper out, but you can make money—und de pest kind of money vot you vant—mit paper; und dot vould make gold sheaper and onpody vould haf to vear prass shewelry any more, on account of de superior sheapfulness of it.

Now, if I am de Dreasury from United States I vould make paper de basis of de foundation upon vhich de financials of de gofernment vould dake a rest; und dot vould settel de question. For inshtincts, no more vould I make some money from gold out und silfer, vhenefer dot goferuments vas in need of a couple of tousands dollars, or two dree seferal millions pillions dol'ars, shust took some of dose pank-nots paper und cut him in little peces up, and brint on dem and make a whole lot pills out of dem, as following: "Dis pieces of paper vas vone dollar of de Unite States py America," or dwenty dollars, as de cases may pe so.

Vell, den, if de Gofernment made all de money dot vay, und ve didn't haf any gold and silver to bodder us, dot vould put right away a head on all dose contentions apout inflation und outflation. Eferypody vould be happy as a pig sun-flower, und dot goose vould hang higher as a kite: also lager bier vould pe only dree cents de glass.

Respectfully, I am yours.
VON BOYLE.

P. M.—If dot don't settle de whole peesness you will hear from me some more.

TO THE DELINQUENT TAX-PAYERS —OF— DeKalb County.

Be it known that the Delinquent List from the Tax Duplicate of 1875 is now in my hands for collection, and will pass into the hands of my Deputy, T. J. Saxton [who will collect the entire county]

On Saturday the 10, day of June '76

Until the taxes may be settled at the Treasure's office with the simple penalty of ten per centum and interest added. Afterwards there will be other costs and charges added, whether payment be made to the Collector or in person, or at the Treasure's office.

There will be further charges in case of collection by the sale of Goods and Chattles, and the legal fees for posting notices. Bear in mind that no tax can be settled without the lawful fees after reaching the deputy's hands.

In compliance with the late law of the State of Indiana, the Deputy Collectors will be compelled to enforce payment at once upon receipt of the lists. The new law further provides that the Deputies as well as the Treasurer have the power at all times to levy upon personal property wherever such may be found, to satisfy both land and chattle tax. The law provides that when property fails to sell where first offered, it may be removed to some other township, and again exposed to sale.

Deputies will be responsible under bond and oath for the return of every dollar collected by law. The new law compels Treasures to collect the tax of Delinquents where there is personal property that he can levy on to make such tax.

Now let me kindly urge each Delinquent Tax payer to avail himself of this timely notice, and call and settle his tax account before the 10th day of June 1876 as the Treasure's are bound under the new law to show no favors to any one

Very Respectfully your obedient Servant
NICHOLAS ENSLEY,
May 9, '76 Treasurer, DeKalb Co. Ind

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

THE EAST.

The Centennial Commission has very sensibly done away with the regulation requiring a fifty-cent note or a fifty-cent silver piece to secure admission.

The Chicago Tribune's Philadelphia correspondent telegraphs as follows: "The reaction in public sentiment regarding the numerical success of the Exposition is best shown by the action of one of the leading hotels, the Girard, which to-day reduced its price to $3.50 a day, the old rate. The hotel-keepers throughout the city are becoming alarmed as the days pass by without bringing any of that vast crowd of foreign visitors which they have been confidently expecting. There are scarcely more outside people stopping in Philadelphia than can be counted in Chicago any day in the week."

Philadelphia papers are growling about the "limited numbers and saving economy of the visitors to the Exposition," and complain that the business of "providing for the entertainment" of guests has been overdone....The managers of the big Centennial show, becoming alarmed at the outcry against extortion, and the depressing effect it was having upon the attendance, summoned before them the restaurateurs on the grounds and compelled them to reduce their enormous rates. The lager beer venders have also been forced to reduce the price of the beverage from ten to five cents.

At a meeting of the Centennial Commission, last week, it was decided to make arrangements on a grand scale for a series of Fourth of July celebrations, to cover a period of six days. It is intended to make it the most extensive and brilliant affair of the kind ever touched off.

Henry C. Bowen has been expelled from Plymouth church.

Gen. Joseph R. Hawley has been re-elected President of the Centennial Board of Commissioners....A Philadelphia correspondent telegraphs that hotel and lodging-house keepers are lowering their prices, and there is plenty of room for all who come. In many instances persons who expected to rent their rooms for high figures and go to the seaside on the proceeds find themselves thus far without a single lodger.

THE WEST.

The bruisers Tom Allen and Joe Goss have been matched to fight for $2,500 a side and the championship of the world. The mill is to come off on September 7, within 100 miles of Cincinnati.

Advices from the Black Hills report that three men were recently killed by Indians while prospecting near Custer City....The sentence pronounced by the United States court at St. Louis against William McKee and Con Maguire has been carried into effect, both being incarcerated in the county jail. All efforts to obtain pardon or commutation of the sentence were unavailing, the President remaining firm to the last in his refusal to interfere.

SOUTH.

A telegram from New Orleans says: "The latest dispatches report everything quiet at Bayou Sara, Laurel Hill, and Woodville. Reports of the trouble were exaggerated. One white man and two negroes killed and several negroes wounded cover the casualties as far as known."....Ex-Gov. Bullock, of Georgia, has been taken back to Atlanta under a requisition from the Governor, after an absence of five years.

The Emperor of Brazil visited the Naval Academy at Annapolis, Md., the other day. It was the intention to have a splurge in honor of the event, but the Emperor reached the Academy by steamer instead of by railroad, as was expected, thereby avoiding the proposed infliction....New counterfeit tens of the State Bank of Terre Haute, Ind., and of the First National bank of Louisville are in circulation.

The forty-sixth general assembly of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church of the United States convened at Bowling Green, Ky., on the 18th of May; and on the same day the Old School Presbyterian general assembly met in New York city....Hon. S. S. Burdett, the Commissioner of the United States general land office at Washington, has resigned, owing to ill health....The schooner Thomas C. Sweet was recently capsized by a squall in Lake Erie, and six of her crew drowned....The steamer Pat Cliburne exploded one of her boilers on the Ohio river, near Shawneetown, Ill., a few nights since. Five or six persons were killed, and several others injured.

WASHINGTON.

Returns of the redemption of fractional currency show that $4,421,000 in silver had been paid out up to the 15th inst.

There is no doubt that Richard Harrington, under indictment in the Washington safe burglary case, has fled the country. He is thought to be in Canada. The extradition treaty with England does not apply to the offense of conspiracy with which he is charged....Final action has been taken in Washington in reference to the powerful movement in behalf of Executive clemency for William McKee and Con Maguire, the convicted and sentenced whisky-ringsters of St. Louis. The President, having been waited upon by the parties in interest, referred the matter to Atty. Gen. Pierrepont, who declined to interfere, but decided that the law must take its course.

At a Cabinet meeting the other day the Louisiana riot formed the principal theme of discussion. The result of the conference was the sending of a telegram to Gen. Augur, commanding the United States forces in Louisiana, instructing that officer, on requisition of the Governor, and it appearing that the local authorities are not able to preserve order, to give such aid as in his discretion may be necessary to prevent bloodshed and violence....New estimates for War department appropriations have been sent to the House of Representatives by Secretary Taft. The sum total is $5,607,605 less than the estimate furnished by Belknap.

The Senate Judiciary Committee has reported a bill to amend the Enforcement act to obviate the objections suggested in the Supreme court's decision. The Republican Senators intend to pass a bill at an early day.

POLITICAL.

Atty. Gen. Pierrepont, in conversation with a friend, has expressed the opinion that Gov. Hayes will be the Republican candidate for President....A New York dispatch says: "The Union League Club had a special meeting last evening for the election of new members. Among the names proposed was that of Secretary Bristow. There were 118 votes cast for Bristow, and 12 blackballs. Immediately after the result was made known the wildest commotion ensued. Every man jumped to his feet and exclaimed against the vote, at the same time protesting that he had no hand in the plot to defeat the election of the Secretary of the Treasury. The blackballing was not the result of any political opposition to Bristow, but was caused by personal feeling."

William H. Barnum, Democrat, has been elected United States Senator from Connecticut, to fill the unexpired term of the late Senator Ferry....Uninstructed delegates were elected to the St. Louis convention by the Nevada Democrats. Tilden is understood to be their first choice, and Thurman second.

The "Liberal" conference called by William C. Bryant, Horace White, T. D. Woolsey, A. H. Bullock, and Carl Schurz, met in New York last week, about 300 prominent gentlemen answering the call. Theodore Woolsey was elected president, and one vice-president chosen from each State represented. Sidney Thomas, of Chicago, offered a resolution putting forward Charles Francis Adams as a candidate, but it was rejected, the sentiment of the conference being in favor of naming no man, but of looking to the Cincinnati and St. Louis conventions for a candidate, and if both failed to give them a suitable candidate, then to nominate an "Independent Reform" ticket. An executive committee, with Carl Schurz at its head, was appointed, and an address to the American people, calling upon them to support the reform movement was adopted.

The Alabama Republican State convention has appointed delegates to the National convention. They are not instructed, but are said to be in favor of Bristow for President. Thomas M. Peters was nominated for Governor....The Ohio and Iowa Democratic State conventions were held on the 17th of May. The Ohio convention adopted a soft money resolution, and instructed the delegates to St. Louis to vote for William Allen, and nominated the following State ticket: Secretary of State, Wm. Bell, of Licking county, by acclamation; Judge of Supreme Court, Wm. E. Finch, Perry county; Member of Board of Public Works, H. E. Clough, Butler county. The Iowa platform favors an early return to specie payments, but demands the repeal of the resumption act of 1875. The delegates to the National convention were instructed to vote as a majority of the delegation shall direct....The Tennessee delegation to Cincinnati is said to stand as follows: For Bristow, eleven; Morton, nine; Blaine, three....The New Jersey Republican State convention assembled at Trenton, on the 17th of May, and chose delegates to the National convention, a majority of whom are said to be favorable to Blaine....The National Prohibition convention assembled at Cleveland, on May 17, adopted a platform, and nominated Green Clay Smith, of Kentucky, for President, and G. T. Stewart, of Ohio, for Vice-president.

The delegates to Cincinnati were instructed to support Bristow....The Delaware delegation to the Cincinnati convention is said to be solid for Blaine....The National Independent Executive Committee has organized by electing Moses A. Field, of Detroit, Chairman, and Thomas J. Durant, of Washington Secretary.

FOREIGN.

Ricard, French Minister of the Interior, is dead....A telegram from Constantinople says that a general panic prevails there. The low classes of Mohammedans are purchasing daggers and revolvers with money supplied by persons who are plotting the overthrow of the Sultan and the Government, and the massacre and plundering of Christians. The Mohammedans insult and threaten the Greeks and Armenians, bidding them prepare for imminent death. Travelers are leaving en masse. It was opposed by the Government, and he was recommitted for ten days longer. Free ingress or egress is impossible....A Berlin dispatch says everything points to a complete understanding having been arrived at by the representatives of Germany, Austria and Russia, in connection with the Turkish question. They are clearly agreed upon a pacific policy. The decisions arrived at have been communicated to the English, French and Italian ambassadors.

Cholera is raging fearfully in Mandalay, India. It is rumored that the plague has appeared in Muscat. The authorities at Bombay and other Indian posts have established stringent quarantine for vessels coming from Muscat.

The London Times' Berlin dispatch says the result of the conference of the ambassadors of Russia, Germany, and Austria is a resolution of the three powers to ask the Sultan for additional guarantees for the execution of the reforms. The scheme, if approved by the Western powers, will be recommended by the Porte in a note. If the Porte wishes the desired concessions, the scheme will not be submitted to the insurgents, who will be requested to lay down their arms. If the above project falls through in any of its successive shapes, a conference of all the powers will possibly be proposed.

The bill introduced in Congress by Mr. Randall to provide for the issue of silver coin is as follows:

Section 1. In addition to the amount of subsidiary coins authorized by law to be issued in redemption of fractional currency it shall be lawful to manufacture at the several mints and issue through the Treasury and its several offices such coin to the amount of $25,000,000.

Sec. 2. That the silver bullion required for this purpose shall be purchased from time to time at market rate by the Secretary of the Treasury with any legal-tender notes in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and the resulting coin may be issued in the ordinary disbursements of the Treasury, or in exchange for legal-tender notes at par; but no purchase of bullion shall be made under this act when the market rate for the same shall be such as will not admit of its coinage and issue or exchange as herein provided without loss to the Treasury, and any gain or seignorage arising from this coinage shall be accounted for and paid into the Treasury as provided under existing laws relative to the subsidiary coinage.

The bill introduced in the House by Mr. Wells, of Missouri, to provide for issue of subsidiary silver coin is as follows:

Any owner of silver bullion may deposit the same at any coinage mint or the assay-office at New York, and receive payment therefor in subsidiary silver coin at the rate of price per standard ounce to be fixed and announced from time to time by the Director of the Mint, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury; such price to be passed on the market value. The cost of coinage shall devolve on the seller of the bullion, and the profit or seignorage arising therefrom shall accrue to the Government, provided that the total amount of silver coin issued under this act shall not exceed the sum of $25,000,000.

Eyes and Cold Water.

The American Journal of Health and Medicine says: "The aquatic furor has become so general that, for the simple reason that cold water is pure, natural product, it is claimed to be a universal and beneficial application. Arsenic is a pure, natural and simple product; so is prussic acid, as obtained from a peach kernel. A single drop of tobacco oil will kill a cat or dog in five minutes.

"Many persons are daily ruining their eyes by opening them in cold water, mornings. Cold water will roughen the hands, and much more will it do so to the manifold more delicate covering of the eye; or the eye will, in self-defense, become scaly in the manner of fish; that is, the coats of the eye will thicken, constituting a species of cataract, which must impair the sight. That water, cold and harsh as it is, should be applied to the eye for curative purposes in place of that warm, soft, lubricating fluid which nature manufactures just for that purpose, indicates great thoughtlessness or great mental obliquity. Nothing stronger than lukewarm water should ever be applied to the eye, except by medical advice, and under special medical supervision."

How Much Butter We Make and Consume.

Statistics were originally compiled here some two years since, and first published by the Butter and Cheese Exchange. They place the number of milch cows in the United States at 13,000,000, and credit them with a product of, in round numbers, 1,400,000,000 pounds of butter. They were arrived at first by an estimate made by an old and very intelligent butter merchant of this city, who has given much thought and careful study to the subject, and whose investigations led to the following calculation: That of our population, 5,000,000 would consume one pound of butter each per week; 10,000,000 would consume three-quarters of a pound each; 10,000,000 would consume one-half a pound each, and 10,000,000 would consume one-quarter of a pound each, making a total consumption of 1,040,000,000 by 35,000,000 people. This, it is calculated, is for table use alone, and one-third is added for culinary purposes, giving an aggregate consumption of nearly 1,400,000,000 pounds, the difference being made up by the exports.—From the Grocer.

The Washington correspondent of the Boston Herald sets the fortunes of the various Presidential candidates down at large figures. Mr. Blaine is the richest.

PASSING EVENTS.

The Knoxville Tribune thinks the delegation from Tennessee to St. Louis will vote primarily for Hendricks.

There is really a famine of small change in the country. People hoard their fractional currency to buy silver, and then hoard silver under an absurd impression that it may rise in value.

The New York Tribune prints lists of delegates already chosen to the National convention, and holds that Blaine will inevitably have the largest number of votes on the first or second ballot.

A London correspondent understands that the reason why the Queen did not read her own speech at the opening of Parliament was that she is now unable to read without glasses, and it was thought that the sight of the sovereign in spectacles would look a little unmajestic.

Virginia contributes some interesting historical portraits to the Centennial. Mr. William Wirt Henry sends a portrait of his grandfather, Patrick Henry, and the Historical Society sends portraits of Pocahontas, Lafayette, Gov. Percy, who succeeded John Smith, and others. Efforts have been made to obtain from the State Library the portraits of Governor and Lady Spotswood and the parole which Cornwallis gave at his surrender, but, as there is a question of law in the matter, it is doubtful if it will succeed.

The French financiers have undertaken a colossal task in agreeing to convert the funded and floating debt of Egypt into seven per cent. stock, redeemable in sixty-three years. In the event of the transaction being completed, the total debt is to be $450,000,000, requiring an annual interest of $31,000,000. The Khedive has signed a decree establishing a Board of Control, and introducing the other reforms suggested by Mr. Cave, the British Commissioner. Besides this, money is cheap, and there are grave political and financial reasons for maintaining the Khedive's credit.

Mr. Thomas Fletcher, of Irvine, Estill county, Ky., had a grim sense of humor, which, carried once too far, brought him into serious trouble. He was attending a social gathering in front of the corner grocery, and, seeing a young man whom he disliked, he said in his grimly humorous way: "Dance or die," at the same time cocking his revolver and taking aim. The young man danced until he was about to drop with exhaustion. Then Mr. Fletcher smiled, and said: "You may stop." He uncocked his pistol and put it in his pocket. The victim immediately plucked up spirit, pulled out his own revolver and shot Mr. Fletcher dead.

It would be gratifying to know just how many centenarians there are in the country. They keep turning up with astonishing frequency. Their names pop out in the newspapers like corn out of the ashes on an old-fashioned hearth. They appear here, and then there, and then in a dozen places all at once. The country seems to be speckled all over with these excellent people who are holding over. It is really worth the while to know how many old folks we have on hand this year, and there should be no difficulty in ascertaining. Let every one who is a hundred years old or upward rise and stand till he is counted.

A traveling salesman of a St. Louis establishment has sued a hotel-keeper, a newspaper, and a railroad company for negligence in causing him to miss a train. The railroad company furnished an incorrect time-table, the newspaper printed it, and the hotel man failed to wake his guest up as directed. There seems to be at this point a revival of the famous defense in the kettle case, when the defendant alleged that the kettle was cracked when he borrowed it, whole when he returned it, and, finally, that it never was in his possession; for, if the hotel-keeper had waked the man up as directed, while the time-table was wrong, what would it have profited him? And if the time-table had been right, what good would it have done a man in the arms of the drowsy god? The St. Louis drummer asks $5,000 damages for one day's delay.

The facilities for transit by street and steam cars in Philadelphia during the Exhibition are said to be excellent. The roads are represented as ready for any emergency, and in a condition to transport at least 25,000 per hour. The Chestnut and Walnut street company have sixteen miles of track, and will run 120 cars; the Fourth, Eighth, and Girard avenue a like number, capable of carrying 65,000 persons to the gates daily. The capacities of the other lines will be equally great, not counting the wagon and stage routes. However, the figures are not, we regret to say, based upon the philanthropic idea of giving every passenger a seat. A good deal of hanging on by the straps may be anticipated.

A New Political Organization.

A political campaign organization called "The National Reform League," with headquarters in New York city, has been formed by gentlemen prominent in law and literature, but not much known in politics. Its inception dates from early April, and it already numbers about 100 members, distributed through thirty different States. The address of the executive committee to the country is dated New York, May 3, 1876, but it was finally approved at a meeting which was held in that city a few days ago. There were present Henry Randall Waite, editor of the International Review, who has been specially active in organizing the League; Samuel C. Anderson, of New Jersey, Gen. Franz Sigel, Kinahan Cornwallis, George Cary Eggleston, and others. Resolutions were adopted designed to further the organization of branch "national reform leagues" throughout the country, and an address of the executive committee to the people of the United States. It is signed by Henry Randall Waite, J. G. Holland, Franz Sigel, George H. Putnam, R. Heber Newton, George Cary Eggleston, and Kinahan Cornwallis, of New York; James Freeman Clarke, Henry T. Cheever, and Henry F. Bishop, of Massachusetts; M. S. Dudley, of Connecticut; Samuel C. Anderson, and R. W. Weeks, of New Jersey; John Sill, of Pennsylvania; James D. Browne, of Virginia; R. Brinkerhoff and M. D. Harter, of Ohio, and John W. Hoyt, of Wisconsin. The address declares that "the members of the National Reform League will stand pledged to the use of all legitimate means for securing the nomination and election to the Chief Magistracy of the nation, and to all minor offices, national, State and local, of men who shall worthily represent the people and the institutions of the United States."

RIOTING IN LOUISIANA.

Serious Fighting Between Whites and Blacks in West Feliciana Parish—Contradictory Reports.

[Dispatch to Associated Press.]

New Orleans, La., May 15.—A New Orleans Times special, dated Summit, Miss., May 15, says: "Information was received here last night of a row between negroes and whites at Laurel Hill, in West Feliciana parish, near the Mississippi line. On Friday night about thirty negroes went to the store of a white man in that vicinity and called him to the door and riddled him with bullets. A posse from Bayou Sara went out on Saturday for the body, but the negroes would not give it up. A fight ensued, and three negroes were killed; two white men are missing. The negroes are gathered, and 1,100 are said to be under arms. The whites are going down from the neighboring counties in Mississippi, and a serious fight is expected."

A special to the Republican from Bayou Sara, La., May 15, reports: "Eight colored men have been shot dead and four hanged. About twenty were wounded. No whites were killed. Persons from the scene report sixty blacks killed, but this statement I consider as exaggerated. Twenty colored men are reported held as hostages. Their fate is uncertain, but the supposition is that they will be killed; also, that the number of negroes killed will never be ascertained, precautions being taken to remove the dead secretly. The number of regulators under arms is said to be 500, from East Baton Rouge and East and West Feliciana and Wilkinson county, Miss. The colored people are said to be arming in self-defense. On Saturday and Sunday night a number of colored men crossed to Point Coupee to escape those who are hunting them."

Still another dispatch from Bayou Sara says: "There has been a regular engagement at Laurel Hill between white and colored men. Three whites are reported killed. God only knows where this will end. The country is ablaze with excitement. All the whites are armed and in the saddle."

Acting Gov. Antoine received the following dispatch from Dr. Kaufman, Sheriff of East Feliciana parish, dated Bayou Sara to-day: "In reply to your telegram I have to say that seventeen colored men are killed and many wounded on the line of Mississippi and Louisiana. A large number of armed white men are approaching this town. I cannot summon and secure a posse comitatus for the support of civil authority and the suppression of riots and the prevention of further bloodshed. Nothing but military authority will keep the peace. Therefore, I respectfully request that military aid be placed at my disposal."

These dispatches have been laid before Gen. Augur, commanding the department, who has referred them to Washington.

The Boston Fiend.

The horrible murder of the little girl Mabel Young, in the belfry of the Warren Avenue Baptist church, in Boston, a few months since, is still fresh in the minds of our readers. This child of five years old was enticed into the belfry, a few minutes after the close of the Sabbath school, and beaten to death, as was supposed, with a bludgeon in the hands of the sexton, Thomas W. Piper. The latter was seen in company with the child a short time previous, and was arrested for the deed and tried, the result being a disagreement of the jury. A second trial resulted in his conviction. Shortly after the latter occurrence he stated that he saw the child go into the belfry, and followed to warn her that the trap-door was dangerous; that just before he reached her he heard a scream and the noise of the trap falling. He ran forward and found that the heavy door had fallen on her head and crushed it. Fearing that he would be accused of murdering her, he shut the doors and ran away.

Although this story looked quite improbable, the more so as the fracture in the child's skull seemed made with a blunt instrument instead of the sharp corner of the trap, it seemed still more improbable that this man would deliberately murder a little child like this without any motive for such a deed; and no possible object for its commission by him could be imagined. Efforts were being made by his counsel for a new trial, with fair prospects of success, when, on Sunday, the miserable wretch astounded the lawyer by a full confession of the horrible crime. He assigns no motive save pure fiendishness, such as actuated the boy murderer Pomeroy, who still lingers in prison, awaiting the signing of his death warrant by the Governor. Piper not only confesses to the murder of the little girl, but also to the murder of a domestic named Bridget Landergan, who was clubbed to death in Dorchester about three years ago. He also admits that it was he who made a deadly assault on one Mary Tyner, in Oxford street, Boston, about two years ago, which came very near resulting in the death of the girl. No motive is assigned for these crimes more than that already given in the case of the child. It almost surpasses belief that there exists on earth a wretch so utterly devoid of all human feeling as to deliberately commit such horrible deeds from a simple love of murder. We do not think that outside of Boston such cases have been known, and it is not surprising that the good people of that city begin to ask themselves whether his majesty the Devil has taken up his permanent abode there. Piper is condemned to suffer death on the 26th inst., and the people will breathe freer when this human monstrosity shall be out of the world.—Inter-Ocean.

Kisses by Telegraph.

The New Orleans Picayune, which is always picking up good news, between time in the troubles of its city, says that the telegraph art has reached such perfection that long courtships have been maintained between persons hundreds of miles apart, and some love-sick telegraphist has even invented a telegraphic sign for love's first sweet kiss.

THE COUSHATTA TRAGEDY.

Particulars of the Attack on Senator Twitchell and Mr. King.

[Coushatta (La.) Cor. St. Louis Globe-Democrat.]

The particulars of the shooting of Senator W. H. Twitchell, and the killing of his brother-in-law, George H. King, will doubtless prove of interest to the readers of the Globe-Democrat. At quite an early hour this morning a stranger was noticed riding into town. His peculiar attire and appearance attracted considerable attention. The collar of his rubber coat was turned, and the rim of his soft felt hat turned down. He also wore green goggles, and it was his evident intention to conceal as much of his face as possible. He was spoken to by several citizens during the morning, but allowed no one to get a good look at his features.

The stranger was armed with a repeating rifle and six-shooter. He visited the blacksmith shop, and after asking the price of shoeing, said that his brother would be along soon, and that he would wait for him before deciding whether he would have heavy or light shoes put on the horse. He said that he would sit by the window of the shop until his brother came. This window commanded a view of the river for some distance up and down, and there he remained for some time—an hour or two—and was spoken to by several parties, to whom he replied in such a manner as to imply that he did not care to converse, and at no time did he uncover his face fully. About 9 o'clock, Senator Twitchell and his brother-in-law, G. A. King, rode down to the ferry and crossed. The stranger mounted his horse and slowly jogged toward the point where the skiff must land, and when the skiff had reached the middle of the river he was 100 yards from the landing. The man here dismounted, tied his horse and walked toward the the river bank in a careles manner. As the skiff struck the bank, or landing, he commenced firing upon the party with his rifle. The first shot missed, the second struck one of Twitchell's arms. King had by this time drawn his pistol and was firing in return, when the stranger changed his fire and killed King, who fell in the boat. The negro who was rowing, had managed to get the skiff thirty or forty feet from the bank by this time, and Twichell jumped overboard and hung to the side of the skiff with his remaining arm, and was struggling to protect himself with a board. The stranger, however, kept up the shooting with clock-work precision, and managed to break Twichell's other arm, and he drifted away from the boat, helpless and drowning. At this time, Gen. Mudgett, who was awaiting the return of the skiff to cross, commenced firing at the stranger, but did not hit him, and he apparently paid no attention to him. Several persons in town had run over to see what was the matter, and had been ordered back. Finally the stranger walked toward his horse, reloaded his rifle, mounted, and was about leaving when he saw the negro boy pulling Twichell in the boat under the directions of a lady who stood on the bank. He rode to the bank and again commenced firing, this time with his revolver. One shot hit Twichell in the leg, and another struck the negro in the hand. The lady begged of the man to desist, but apparently he paid no attention to her. The lady asked the negro if Twichell was dead, and upon his replying in the affirmative, the stranger turned and rode out of town. He passed several parties who knew nothing of the shooting, but their attention was attracted to him for the reason that he kept them covered with his six-shooter until he had passed them some distance. Meanwhile the negro had reached the bank from whence they had started. Twichell was shot three times, King three or four times, and the negro once.

Remedy for Burns.

Take newly slacked lime, or if previously slacked, that which has not been exposed to the air, as from the center of the box which contains it; sift through muslin or something very fine. Mix one ounce of lime with four or five of fresh lard or butter, sweet oil and mutton tallow, melted together (equal parts); spread on cloth and apply, renewing as the oil substance becomes absorbed. This will give perfect ease in a few minutes, whether the skin is off or not and soon cures; if the skin is off keep the cloth on well. Sufferers try this.

Since 1858, when the British divorce act went into operation, the number of petitions has averaged 388 a year.

DAVID C. BRODERICK'S DEATH.

A California Chief-Justice and a Senator on the Dueling Ground.

(From the San Francisco Post.)

The prominent and peculiar part played by David C. Broderick in California politics, the hold he obtained on the public heart, and the circumstances preceding his unhappy end, unite to enhance the tragic character of his fate. After struggling for years against odds which would have overborne a man of less energy and determination, he triumphed over all the powerful foes arrayed against him, winning the object of his ambition, a seat in the United States Senate. After the adjournment of Congress he returned to this State and entered upon the memorable campaign of '59, leading the Douglas wing of the Democracy. David S. Terry, Chief-Justice of the Supreme court, was a candidate for renomination, and in one of his speeches he said in relation to the rival wing of his party:

"They have no distinction; they are entitled to none. They are the followers of one man, the personal chattels of a single individual. They belong body and soul and breeches to David C. Broderick. They are yet ashamed to acknowledge their master, and are, forsooth, Douglas Democrats."

To this passage, which is certainly not more offensive than the average oratory of which it is a class, Broderick attached undue weight. Reading it at the breakfast table of the International hotel in the morning, he became highly incensed, and spoke in great anger and bitterness of Terry, saying that he regretted having assisted him when in the hands of the vigilance committee. D. W. Perley, formerly the law partner of Terry, being at the table, resented the slur upon his absent friend, and sent Broderick a challenge, which the latter declined on the ground of social and political inequality between them, and that Perley being a foreigner had not the political rights to lose by fighting that he (Broderick) had. In the course of the correspondence the Senator also announced his unalterable determination not to respond to any challenge until after the election. Terry, who it was understood was on the point of coming to San Francisco to demand instant satisfaction, was deterred by this intimation from Broderick. He cherished the remembrance of the insult, and resigning his office, on election day took the boat for San Francisco, stopping at Stockton for his surgeon, Dr. Aylett, and his dueling pistol. On the next day he called Broderick to account.

Senator Broderick and the Chief-justice met on Davis' ranch, about two miles southeast of Lake Merced. The weapons were dueling pistols, distance ten paces. The choice of position and weapons were decided by the toss of a half dollar, being won by the seconds of Terry. The latter's weapons were, of course, chosen. The principals took off their overcoats and stepped to the positions assigned them. Broderick, who wore a light wool hat pulled down over his forehead, had a presentiment of his fate, but was sustained by his iron will. Terry stood firm, with the air of a practiced duelist. At the word the weapons were raised. In his nervous hurry Broderick's was discharged prematurely, the bullet striking the ground in front of his antagonist. Terry aimed deliberately and fired, exclaiming: "The shot is not mortal. I have struck two inches to the right." Broderick, on receiving the shot, turned suddenly to one side, braced himself for a moment, and retaining his pistol in a convulsive grasp, sank to the earth. After lingering seventy-four hours, the Senator expired on the morning of September 16.

Judge Terry was indicted for murder. He procured a change of venue to Marin county, and previous to the trial he took rooms at San Rafael and kept open house to all who chose to come, entertaining them liberally, and thus making friends of as many as possible of the people where he was to be tried. The hour fixed for the beginning of the trial was 9 o'clock in the morning, an unusually early hour for the opening of a court. On the morning named, Alexander Campbell, who had been employed to conduct the prosecution, accompanied by the witnesses for the prosecution, started at 7 o'clock in the yacht Restless for San Rafael, but they did not reach their destination until noon. Meantime the court opened punctually at 9, and notwithstanding the absence of the Prosecuting-attorney and his witnesses, proceeded with the farce of a trial, and there being no witnesses, the Judge soon directed the jury to render a verdict of acquittal, which they did with great alacrity. When Mr. Campbell arrived with his witnesses, he found Judge Terry and friends in high glee over the acquittal. Judge Terry has since given his attention to practicing law, and is a leading member of the bar at Stockton, his old home.

Those Same Boys again.

Early yesterday morning a well-dressed woman called at the Central Station court, asked if "the head police gentleman" was in, and when the captain came forward she said:

"Sir, an outrage was perpetrated at my house this morning, the like of which was never recorded, and I called to inquire if the majesty of the law is not powerful enough to overawe such desperate criminals?"

"I guess she is," replied the captain, preparing himself to hear of a stabbing affray at least.

"This morning, soon after the sun had ascended the horizon," continued the lady, "and while I sat at my window, buried in reflection over the wonders of nature, a carrier boy came along."

"Came along," repeated the captain, as she paused.

"Came along, and as he observed me he halted and bent his gaze in my direction. My glance rested upon him without my realizing for a moment that he was there. As I looked down upon him he made up a face, like this, and put his finger on his nose, like this. What foul, fiendish motive prompted him I know not. Recovering in a measure from my surprise, I raised the window and commanded him to be gone. He said he'd be darned if he'd begone for any behanged woman in Detroit."

"Woman in Detroit," echoed the captain.

"Actuated by a spirit of devilish malice," continued the woman, "the young fiend from the suburbs of perdition asked me if I was ever arrested for stealing a dog. My indignation knew no bounds, but I was helpless. All I could do was to hurl a stick of wood at him, and he dodged it and hurled it back, splitting the panel of the front door."

"Panel of the front door," repeated the captain.

"Here is his description, and now I demand his speedy arrest, trial and conviction. I am a free-born American lady, entitled to the full protection of all laws, and I demand protection from the fiendish, malicious and unprecedented persecutions of that young fiend, whose conduct stamps him as one of the most depraved wretches history has ever known."

The captain promised to shoot the boy as soon as found, and the woman went away feeling much easier in her mind.—Detroit Free Press.

A Touching Scene in a Kentucky Court-Room.

On Friday last we had quite a touching scene in our court-house. Old John Garner, an old, gray-headed man, was arraigned for the crime of grand larceny—horse-stealing. He pleaded guilty, and presented himself to the jury in a brief and touching address. He said:

"GENTLEMEN OF THE JURY: I am an old man, and my race is nearly run. This is the first time in my life I have ever been before a jury. I have never even been a witness in a magistrate's court. I was born in 1816, and have been a hard-working and honest man all my life until now. I am a stranger to every man in this house, except his honor who sits on that bench. He has known me for nine years, and he will tell you I have been an honest man and a good citizen. This jury looks like a set of honest and intelligent men, and I wish you to deal with me the best you can. I read in the paper that the prison at Frankfort is an awful place—that it is so crowded that one can scarcely live there. From the accounts of that place I suppose I could not live there long. You see I am old and feeble, and I ask you to do the best you can for me. Gentlemen, if I could have got work I could have supported my family and not been here. But I want to tell you—I am a very poor man and have to work to live. Well, last year the times were very hard indeed, and I could not get work much of my time. I am a mechanic, and I went to Clarksville, Fairview and many other places, but I could not get any work. The times were very hard, as you all know, and but few men had money to to pay for labor. I traveled around till I spent all that I had but a bed and a chair. I was tired and out of heart, and my family suffering for food and clothing. I heard then that I could get work in North Logan, and I sold my kit of tools to get my family up there. I paid $75 for my tools in Louisville and had to sell them low. After paying for moving I had $15 left. I got a place for my family for a little while, and started again for work. I tried hard to find it but could not. I went back to my family broken down in spirit, thinking I would have to starve or beg. Gentlemen, my little boy, about six years old, got in my lap, and put his little arms around my neck and asked me if the good Lord would let us starve. I love my family as well as any man, and could not think of their starving."

The prisoner became overwhelmed with emotion, and, pausing for a few moments, he pleaded for as light a verdict as the jury could give him. The occasion was exceedingly solemn. The prisoner told his story without reservation. Age and care had whitened his locks and furrowed his brow. He had seen better days, but he was now a broken reed. The jury, the attorneys, the judge, and the spectators were touched by the homely recital of the suppliant prisoner. The jury gave him two years in the penitentiary, and the judge, jury and lawyers then signed a petition to the Governor for his pardon. —Elkton (Ky.) Witness.

An Act of Courtesy.

According to a well defined rule of etiquette, it is a lady's place to bow first to a gentleman who has been presented to her. But many ladies wait for the first demonstration to come from the opposite sex. "I can't take the initiative, and bow to a comparative strange gentleman," says Miss Precision. "How embarrassed I should be if he failed to recognize me!" If any number of women feel thus, the point of etiquette should be changed in order to save their sensibilities. In truth, however, the objection is not well made. There is not the smallest danger that any man, presuming him, of necessity, to be a gentleman, at least in respect to his observing the ordinary forms of courtesy, would refuse or hesitate to return the acknowledgment of a woman, even though he might not have the remotest recollection of ever having seen her before, or though he were convinced she had confounded him with somebody else. And the fact that he had been recognized by a woman would be the strongest presumptive evidence that he had been presented to her. The truth is, women are so accustomed to men paying court to them, that they cannot reconcile themselves to making the first advances in anything—not even in every-day courtesy.

A Veteran Pedestrian.

Mr. George W. Dietz, the seventy-nine year old veteran, who left New Albany, Ind., to walk to the Philadelphia Centennial, passed through Cincinnati the other day. The Cincinnati Gazette says: Mr. Dietz wears such a suit of clothes as a farmer would have on when a circus comes to town, or the plow horse trots around the half-mile track of a county fair. He carries a cane and a small 'gripsack,' his heavier baggage being transported by railroad. He does not walk the track, but seeks the ordinary roads, and spends his nights were he happens to be when the sun gets down. Mr. Dietz does not care much when he gets to the Centennial Exhibition, as he is under no agreement to be there by any specified time, but he likes to make about twenty-five miles a day. He manifests an interest in the man who is wheeling a barrow full of Missouri minerals, the similarity of their undertaking creating a bond of sympathy between them. As Mr. Dietz has no encumbrances, the man with the wheelbarrow will no doubt be left far behind in the Centennial walk."

The Home Doctor.

FOR SICK HEADACHE.

Two teaspoonfuls of finely powdered charcoal, drank in half a tumbler of water, will often give relief to the headache, when caused, as in most cases it is, by a superabundance of acid in the stomach.

BURNS AND SCALDS.

For burns and scalds take the white of an egg and apply immediately as a plaster, and the pain will cease almost instantly. This receipt is nearly always on hand in most families, and nothing can be found better.

TO BREAK UP CHILLS.

Take gum camphor, one ounce, fill a small flannel sack, and wear it on the breast. It may be pinned to the underclothing and worn next to the skin. The camphor soon evaporates, when the sack should be refilled, if necessary. I have cured chills with this when all ague remedies would have no effect.

TO CURE WHITE SWELLING OR SCROFULA.

Scrape common elder bark, bitter sweet, mullein leaves—equal parts. Boil together in a little water; then put in a little golden seal. Stew all in fresh butter and mutton tallow, equal parts, until well done. Then strain and put back in pot, and put in beeswax and pine tar. Stew them all together. For use, spread on a cloth and apply as a poultice.

SWEET OIL FOR POISON.

A farmer writes to the College Courant: It is now over twenty years since I heard that sweet oil would cure the bite of a rattlesnake, not knowing that it would cure other kinds of poison. Practice and experience have taught me that it will cure poison of any kind, both on man and beast. The patient must take a spoonful of it internally, and bathe the wound for a cure. To cure a horse, it takes eight times as much as for a man. One of the most extreme cases of snake bite occurred eleven years ago. It had been of thirty days' standing, and the patient had been given up by his physicians. I gave him a spoonful of the oil, which effected a cure. It will cure bloat in cattle caused by fresh clover. It will cure the stings of bees, spiders, or other insects, and persons who have been poisoned by a low running vine called ivy.

BABIES' BATHS.

A physician says: "For the 'wind in the stomach' children are thought to have, for their tiresome crying, and for their restlessness and worrying at night with which they are afflicted, if the warm bath were resorted to oftener instead of using soothing syrups and worse nostrums, it would be far better for the children." In preparing warm baths for infants, great care should be taken not to have the water too hot. A lady remarks on this subject: "When my child was sick one night the doctor ordered the hot bath. The lady who was with me got the water ready, and said it was all right. Just as she was going to put the child in I said, 'Put your elbow into the water first.' She did so and found it altogether too hot. In washing my babies I often find the water that is agreeable to my hands not so to my flesh that is kept covered with clothing, which leads me to think oftentimes babies are tortured, and even injured, by giving them a bath in water that is too hot."

THE TREATMENT OF DIARRHŒA.

In a paper in Virchow's Archiv, Dr. Hartsen observes that diarrhœa of all sorts goes along with an irritable state of the intestinal canal, and any increase of this irritability is to be carefully avoided. He considers that the more usual astringents are, in addition, irritants; and he instances among them the salts of lead, zinc, and bismuth. In all cases soothing means should first be adopted; and of these, warm applications to the abdomen, in the form of bread poultices, or fomentations, are perhaps the best. The chief medicine recommended is opium, which soothes, but, in large doses, interferes with digestion. If the diarrhœa be so violent as to hinder the absorption of opium introduced into the stomach, then morphia should be injected subcutaneously. Of equal importance is the diet. If the person be strong, everything, both solid and fluid, should be withheld; but, where this cannot be done, the food should be of the lightest and simplest. The author especially refers to rice and arrowroot as simple vegetable diets, while any animal food given should be free from fat. Milk should not be too much used, and in any case should be boiled.

A New Use for Musk.

At the late session of the Indiana Institute of Homeopathy, at Indianapolis, Dr. Bray Fogle, of Louisville, read a report upon the case of Miss Snead, of that city (the well-known correspondent, "Miss Grundy.") She had become addicted, through the advice of her physicians, to use stimulants, and to absorbing an ounce of hydrate of chloral per diem, and the doctor, being called in, cured her in ten days by large doses of musk. It was a most interesting case, and evoked a spirited discussion.

CHAPPED hands, face, pimples, ringworm, saltrheum, and other cutaneous affections cured, and rough skin made soft and smooth, by using Juniper Tar Soap. Be careful to get only that made by Caswell, Hazard & Co., New York, as there are many imitations made with common tar, all of which are worthless.

THE Times says Dr. Walpole has lost his beautiful chestnut mare. She died suddenly in harness, it is supposed from bots or pin worms. If the Doctor had used Sheridan's Cavalry Condition Powders, he would, no doubt, have had his mare to-day—they are death on worms.

Xantippe.

It seems that the memory of this woman, like that of her renowned husband, is likely to be kept alive to the end of time. She is said to have possessed a very irritable temper, and her name has become a synonym of "vixen," or "scold." It is more than possible, however, that the judgment passed upon her by mankind has been too severe. A more charitable disposition would undoubtedly have discovered in her many good qualities, and have attributed her failings more to physical infirmities than to moral obliquity. The party most intimately acquainted with her, and therefore best able to form a correct opinion, gives her credit for many domestic virtues. It is now well known that many of the diseases to which women are subject, have a direct tendency to render them irritable, peevish, cross, morose, unreasonable, so that they chafe and fret over all those little ills and annoyances that a person in health would bear with composure. It is fair to infer that most of the tantrums of Xantippe were due to these causes alone; and could Socrates, as he returned from the Senate, the Gymnasium, or the Atheneum, have stopped at Pestle & Mortar's Drug Store and carried home a bottle of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, now and then, no doubt he might have evaded many a "curtain lecture," allayed many a "domestic broil," made it much pleasanter for the children, and more enjoyable for himself, and rescued his wife's name from the unenviable, world-wide, and eternal notoriety it has attained. Thousands of women bless the day on which Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription was first made known to them. A single bottle often gives delicate and suffering women more relief than months of treatment from their family physician. In all those derangements causing backache, dragging-down sensations, nervous and general debility, it is a sovereign remedy. Its soothing and healing properties render it of the utmost value to ladies suffering from internal fever, congestion, inflammation, or ulceration, and its strengthening effects tend to correct displacements of internal parts, the result of weakness of natural supports. It is sold by all druggists.

CHAPPED hands are very common with those who have their hands much in water. A few drops of Johnson's Anodyne Liniment rubbed over the hands two or three times a day will keep them soft and white. Fishermen, sailors, and others will do well to remember this.

THE attention of all lovers of the horse is called to the advertisement of E. C. Stone, in another column.

TO ALL, particularly invalids, spring is a trying season. Indications of sickness should at once be attended to. Fatal diseases may be caused by allowing the bowels to become constipated, and the system to remain in a disordered condition, until the disorder has time to develop itself. An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure, is an old and truthful saying. Therefore, we advise all who are troubled with the complaints now very prevalent—headache, indigestion, disordered liver, want of appetite, nausea, or feverish skin—to take, without delay, Schenck's Mandrake Pills. We know of no remedy so harmless and decisive in its action. It at once strikes at the root of the disease and produces a healthy tone to the system. People never need suffer from any disease arising from a disordered condition of the liver if they would take this excellent medicine when they feel the first indications of the malady. Families leaving home for the summer months should take three or four boxes of these pills with them. They have an almost instantaneous effect. They will relieve the patient of headache in one or two hours, and will rapidly cleanse the liver of surrounding bile, and will effectually prevent a bilious attack. They are sold by all druggists.

"THE VIBRATOR" 2000 SOLD LAST SEASON WITHOUT ONE FAILURE OR REJECTION. This is the famous Threshing Machine that has "swept the field" and created such a revolution in the trade, by its marvelous Grain-Saving and Time-Saving principles.

THE NICHOLS SHEPARD & CO. VIBRATOR

THE ENORMOUS WASTAGE of grain, so inevitable with other styles of Threshers, can be SAVED by this Improved Machine, sufficient, on every job, to more than pay all expenses of threshing. FLAX, TIMOTHY, MILLET, HUNGARIAN and like seeds are threshed, separated, cleaned and saved as easily and perfectly as Wheat, Oats, Rye or Barley. AN EXTRA PRICE is usually paid for grain and seeds cleaned by this machine, for extra cleanliness. ALL GRAIN, TIME and MONEY wasting complications, such as "Endless Aprons," "Raddles," "Beaters," "Pickers," etc., are entirely dispensed with; less than one-half the usual Gears, Belts, Boxes, and Journals; easier managed; more durable; light running; no costly repairs; no dust; no "litterings" to clean up; not troubled by adverse winds, rain or storms. FARMERS and GRAIN RAISERS who are posted in the large saving made by it will not employ inferior and wasteful machines, but will insist on this improved Thresher doing their work. FOUR SIZES made for 6, 8, 10 and 12 Horse Powers. Also a specialty of SEPARATORS, designed and made EXPRESSLY FOR STEAM POWER. TWO STYLES OF HORSE POWERS, viz.: our improved "Triple Gear," and our "Spur Speed" (Woodbury Style), both "Mounted" on four wheels. THE NEWS CONDENSED.

THE EAST.

The Centennial Commission has very sensibly done away with the regulation requiring a fifty-cent note or a fifty-cent silver piece to secure admission.

The Chicago Tribune's Philadelphia correspondent telegraphs as follows: "The reaction in public sentiment regarding the financial success of the Exposition is best shown by the action of one of the leading hotels, the Girard, which to-day reduced its price to $3.50 a day, the old rate. The hotel-keepers throughout the city are becoming alarmed as the days pass by without bringing any of that vast crowd of foreign visitors which they have been confidently expecting. There are scarcely more outside people stopping in Philadelphia than can be counted in Chicago any day in the week."

Philadelphia papers are growling about the [illegible] of the visitors to the Exposition," and complain that the business of "providing for the entertainment" of guests has been overdone.... The managers of the big Centennial show, becoming alarmed at the outcry against extortion, and the depressing effect it was having upon the attendance, summoned before them the restaurateurs on the grounds and compelled them to reduce their enormous rates. The lager beer venders have also been forced to reduce the price of the beverage from ten to five cents.

At a meeting of the Centennial Commission, last week, it was decided to make arrangements on a grand scale for a series of Fourth of July celebrations, to cover a period of six days. It is intended to make it the most extensive and brilliant affair of the kind ever touched off.

Henry C. Bowen has been expelled from Plymouth church.

Gen. Joseph R. Hawley has been re-elected President of the Centennial Board of Commissioners.... A Philadelphia correspondent telegraphs that hotel and lodging-house keepers are lowering their prices, and there is plenty of room for all who come. In many instances persons who expected to rent their rooms for high figures and go to the seaside on the proceeds find themselves thus far without a single lodger.

THE WEST.

The bruisers Tom Allen and Joe Goss have been matched to fight for $2,500 a side and the championship of the world. The mill is to come off on September 7, within 100 miles of Cincinnati.

Advices from the Black Hills report that three men were recently killed by Indians while prospecting near Custer City.... The sentence pronounced by the United States court at St. Louis against William McKee and Con Maguire has been carried into effect, both being incarcerated in the county jail. All efforts to obtain pardon or commutation of the sentence were unavailing, the President remaining firm to the last in his refusal to interfere.

SOUTH.

A telegram from New Orleans says: "The latest dispatches report everything quiet at Bayou Sara, Laurel Hill, and Woodville. Reports of the trouble were exaggerated. One white man and two negroes killed and several negroes wounded cover the casualties as far as known."... Ex-Gov. Bullock, of Georgia, has been taken back to Atlanta under a requisition from the Governor, after an absence of five years.

GENERAL.

The Emperor of Brazil visited the Naval Academy at Annapolis, Md., the other day. It was the intention to have a splurge in honor of the event, but the Emperor reached the Academy by steamer instead of by railroad, as was expected, thereby avoiding the proposed infliction.... New counterfeit tens of the State Bank of Terre Haute, Ind., and of the First National bank of Louisville are in circulation.

The forty-sixth general assembly of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church of the United States convened at Bowling Green, Ky., on the 18th of May; and on the same day the Old School Presbyterian general assembly met in New York city.... Hon. S. S. Burdett, the Commissioner of the United States general land office at Washington, has resigned, owing to ill health.... The schooner Thomas G. Sweet was recently capsized by a squall in Lake Erie, and six of her crew drowned.... The steamer Pat Cliburne exploded one of her boilers on the Ohio river, near Shawneetown, Ill., a few nights since. Five or six persons were killed, and several others injured.

WASHINGTON.

Returns of the redemption of fractional currency show that $4,421,000 in silver had been paid out up to the 15th inst.

There is no doubt that Richard Harrington, under indictment in the Washington safe burglary case, has fled the country. He is thought to be in Canada. The extradition treaty with England does not apply to the offense of conspiracy with which he is charged.... Final action has been taken in Washington in reference to the powerful movement in behalf of Executive clemency for William McKee and Con Maguire, the convicted and sentenced whisky-ringsters of St. Louis. The President, having been waited upon by the parties in interest, referred the matter to Atty. Gen. Pierrepont, who declined to interfere, but decided that the law must take its course.

At a Cabinet meeting the other day the Louisiana riot formed the principal theme of discussion. The result of the conference was the sending of a telegram to Gen. Augur, commanding the United States forces in Louisiana, instructing that officer, on requisition of the Governor, and it appearing that the local authorities are not able to preserve order, to give such aid as in his discretion may be necessary to prevent bloodshed and violence.... New estimates for War department appropriations have been sent to the House of Representatives by Secretary Taft. The sum total is $5,607,605 less than the estimate furnished by Belknap.

The Senate Judiciary Committee has reported a bill to amend the Enforcement act to obviate the objections suggested in the Supreme court's decision. The Republican Senators intend to pass a bill at an early day.

Postmaster General Jewell denies that he intends resigning.... Speaker Kerr is regaining his health.

POLITICAL.

Atty. Gen. Pierrepont, in conversation with a friend, has expressed the opinion that Gov. Hayes will be the Republican candidate for President.... A New York dispatch says: "The Union League Club had a special meeting last evening for the election of new members. Among the names proposed was that of Secretary Bristow. There were 118 votes cast for Bristow, and 12 blackballs. Immediately after the result was made known the wildest commotion ensued. Every man jumped to his feet and exclaimed against the vote, at the same time protesting that he had no hand in the plot to defeat the election of the Secretary of the Treasury. The blackballing was not the result of any political opposition to Bristow, but was caused by personal feeling."

William H. Barnum, Democrat, has been elected United States Senator from Connecticut, to fill the unexpired term of the late Senator Ferry.... Uninstructed delegates were elected to the St. Louis convention by the Nevada Democrats. Tilden is understood to be their first choice, and Thurman second.

The "Liberal" conference called by William C. Bryant, Horace White, T. D. Woolsey, A. H. Bullock, and Carl Schurz, met in New York last week, about 300 prominent gentlemen answering the call. Theodore Woolsey was elected president, and one vice-president chosen from each State represented. Sidney Thomas, of Chicago, offered a resolution putting forward Charles Francis Adams as a candidate, but it was rejected, the sentiment of the conference being in favor of naming no man, but of looking to the Cincinnati and St. Louis conventions for a candidate, and if both failed to give them a suitable candidate, then to nominate an "Independent Reform" ticket. An executive committee, with Carl Schurz at its head, was appointed, and an address to the American people, calling upon them to support the reform movement was adopted.

The Alabama Republican State convention has appointed delegates to the National convention. They are not instructed, but are said to be in favor of Bristow for President. Thomas M. Peters was nominated for Governor.... The Ohio and Iowa Democratic State conventions were held on the 17th of May. The Ohio convention adopted a soft money resolution, and instructed the delegates to St. Louis to vote for William Allen, and nominated the following State ticket: Secretary of State, Wm. Bell, of Licking county, by acclamation; Judge of Supreme Court, Wm. E. Finch, Perry county; Member of Board of Public Works, H. F. [illegible], Butler county. The Iowa platform favors an early return to specie payments, but demands the repeal of the resumption act of 1875. The delegates to the National convention were instructed to vote as a majority of the delegation shall direct.... The Tennessee delegation to Cincinnati is said to stand as follows: For Bristow, eleven; Morton, nine; Blaine, three.... The New Jersey Republican State convention assembled at Trenton, on the 17th of May, and chose delegates to the National convention, a majority of whom are said to be favorable to Blaine.... The National Prohibition convention assembled at Cleveland, on May 17, adopted a platform, and nominated Green Clay Smith, of Kentucky, for President, and G. T. Stewart, of Ohio, for Vice-president.

The Kansas Democratic convention, in session at Topeka last week, adopted a resolution demanding the repeal of the specie-resumption act and instructing the delegates to St. Louis to vote for Hendricks.... The Kentucky Republican convention was held at Louisville last week. The delegates to Cincinnati were instructed to support Bristow.... The Delaware delegation to the Cincinnati convention is said to be solid for Blaine.... The National Independent Executive Committee has organized by electing Moses A. Field, of Detroit, Chairman, and Thomas J. Durant, of Washington Secretary.

FOREIGN.

Ricard, French Minister of the Interior, is dead.... A telegram from Constantinople says that a general panic prevails there. The low classes of Mohammedans are purchasing daggers and revolvers with money supplied by persons who are plotting the overthrow of the Sultan and the Government, and the massacre and plundering of Christians. The Mohammedans insult and threaten the Greeks and Armenians, bidding them prepare for imminent death. Travelers are leaving en masse. European residents are sending away their families.... Advices from Panama report that fighting has been going on between the troops of Guatemala and Salvador, and that the loss on both sides is heavy.... The report that ex-President Dominique, of Hayti, had died of his wounds, is untrue. He is now at St. Thomas.

The ten days for which Winslow, the Boston forger, was recommitted having expired, the application for his release was renewed in London on the 13th inst. It was opposed by the Government, and he was recommitted for ten days longer. The Attorney-general said that if Secretary Fish's answer to Lord Derby's note had not been then received, the Government would not raise any further objection to his case.... The Servian frontier is completely lined by a cordon of Turkish troops. Free ingress or egress is impossible.... A Berlin dispatch says everything points to a complete understanding having been arrived at by the representatives of Germany, Austria and Russia, in connection with the Turkish question. They are clearly agreed upon a pacific policy. The decisions arrived at have been communicated to the English, French and Italian ambassadors.

Cholera is raging fearfully in Mandalay, India. It is rumored that the plague has appeared in Muscat. The authorities at Bombay and other Indian posts have established stringent quarantine for vessels coming from Muscat.

The London Times' Berlin dispatch says the result of the conference of the ambassadors of Russia, Germany, and Austria is a resolution of the three powers to ask the Sultan for additional guarantees for the execution of the reforms. The scheme, if approved by the Western powers, will be recommended by the Porte in a note. If the Porte wishes the desired concessions, the scheme will not be submitted to the insurgents, who will be requested to lay down their arms. If the above project fails through in any of its successive shapes, a conference of all the powers will possibly be proposed.

House.—Cox was elected Speaker pro tem. during the continued absence of Kerr. The House went into committee of the whole on the Postoffice Appropriation bill, the question being in regard to abolishing the letter-carrier system in cities of less than 40,000 population. The report states that the committee found evidences of waste, extravagance, mismanagement and inefficiency, and recommends the removal of Clapp and the inauguration of the contract system to take the place of the present mode of doing business. The committee also recommend that Clapp be turned over to the District court for indictment and prosecution, and that the office be abolished.

Saturday, May 13.—Senate.—Not in session.

Fitzhugh is not a proper person to hold the honorable and responsible position of Doorkeeper of the House, and that said Fitzhugh as Doorkeeper, be and is hereby dismissed forthwith from that office." After a long discussion the resolution was referred to the Committee on Rules.

Before a decision was reached, the doors were reopened and the Senate adjourned.

Randall reported to the House the Indian Appropriation bill. It appropriates $3,905,771, and provides for the transfer of the Indian bureau to the War department.

TWO SILVER BILLS.

Different Plans to Secure the Issue of $25,000,000 More of Coin.

The bill introduced in Congress by Mr. Randall to provide for the issue of silver coin is as follows:

Section 1. In addition to the amount of subsidiary coins authorized by law to be issued in redemption of fractional currency it shall be lawful to manufacture at the several mints and issue through the Treasury and its several offices such coin to the amount of $25,000,000.

Sec. 2. That the silver bullion required for this purpose shall be purchased from time to time at market rate by the Secretary of the Treasury with any legal-tender notes in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and the resulting coin may be issued in the ordinary disbursements of the Treasury, or in exchange for legal-tender notes at par; but no purchase of bullion shall be made under this act when the market rate for the same shall be such as will not admit of its coinage and issue or exchange as herein provided without loss to the Treasury, and any gain or seignorage arising from this coinage shall be accounted for and paid into the Treasury as provided under existing laws relative to the subsidiary coinage.

Sec. 3. That the trade-dollar shall not hereafter be a legal-tender, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to limit the coinage thereof to such an amount as he may deem sufficient to meet the export demand for the same.

The bill introduced in the House by Mr. Wells, of Missouri, to provide for issue of subsidiary silver coin is as follows:

Any owner of silver bullion may deposit the same at any coinage mint or the assay-office at New York, and receive payment therefor in subsidiary silver coin at the rate of price per standard ounce to be fixed and announced from time to time by the Director of the Mint, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, such price to be passed on the market value. The cost of coinage shall devolve on the seller of the bullion, and the profit or seignorage arising therefrom shall accrue to the Government, provided that the total amount of silver coin issued under this act shall not exceed the sum of $25,000,000.

Eyes and Cold Water.

The American Journal of Health and Medicine says: "The aquatic furor has become so general that, for the simple reason that cold water is pure, natural product, it is claimed to be a universal and beneficial application. Arsenic is a pure, natural and simple product; so is prussic acid, as obtained from a peach kernel. A single drop of tobacco oil will kill a cat or dog in five minutes.

"Many persons are daily ruining their eyes by opening them in cold water, mornings. Cold water will roughen the hands, and much more will it do so to the manifold more delicate covering of the eye; or the eye will, in self-defense, become scaly in the manner of fish; that is, the coats of the eye will thicken, constituting a species of cataract, which must impair the sight. That water, cold and harsh as it is, should be applied to the eye for curative purposes in place of that warm, soft, lubricating fluid which nature manufactures just for that purpose, indicates great thoughtlessness or great mental obliquity. Nothing stronger than lukewarm water should ever be applied to the eye, except by medical advice, and under special medical supervision."

How Much Butter We Make and Consume.

Statistics were originally compiled here some two years since, and first published by the Butter and Cheese Exchange. They place the number of milch cows in the United States at 13,000,000, and credit them with a product of, in round numbers, 1,400,000,000 pounds of butter. They were arrived at first by an estimate made by an old and very intelligent butter merchant of this city, who has given much thought and careful study to the subject, and whose investigations led to the following calculation: That of our population, 5,000,000 would consume one pound of butter each per week; 10,000,000 would consume three-quarters of a pound each; 10,000,000 would consume one-half a pound each, and 10,000,000 would consume one-quarter of a pound each, making a total consumption of 1,040,000,000 by 35,000,000 people. This, it is calculated, is for table use alone, and one-third is added for culinary purposes, giving an aggregate consumption of nearly 1,400,000,000 pounds, the difference being made up by the exports.—From the Grocer.

The Washington correspondent of the Boston Herald sets the fortunes of the various Presidential candidates down at large figures. Mr. Blaine is the richest.

PASSING EVENTS.

The Knoxville Tribune thinks the delegation from Tennessee to St. Louis will vote primarily for Hendricks.

There is really a famine of small change in the country. People hoard their fractional currency to buy silver, and then hoard silver under an absurd impression that it may rise in value.

The New York Tribune prints lists of delegates already chosen to the National convention, and holds that Blaine will inevitably have the largest number of votes on the first or second ballot.

A London correspondent understands that the reason why the Queen did not read her own speech at the opening of Parliament was that she is now unable to read without glasses, and it was thought that the sight of the sovereign in spectacles would look a little unmajestic.

Virginia contributes some interesting historical portraits to the Centennial. Mr. William Wirt Henry sends a portrait of his grandfather, Patrick Henry, and the Historical Society sends portraits of Pocahontas, Lafayette, Gov. Percy, who succeeded John Smith, and others. Efforts have been made to obtain from the State Library the portraits of Governor and Lady Spotswood and the parole which Cornwallis gave at his surrender, but, as there is a question of law in the matter, it is doubtful if it will succeed.

The French financiers have undertaken a colossal task in agreeing to convert the funded and floating debt of Egypt into seven per cent. stock, redeemable in sixty-three years. In the event of the transaction being completed, the total debt is to be $450,000,000, requiring an annual interest of $31,000,000. The Khedive has signed a decree establishing a Board of Control, and introducing the other reforms suggested by Mr. Cave, the British Commissioner. Besides this, money is cheap, and there are grave political and financial reasons for maintaining the Khedive's credit.

Mr. Thomas Fletcher, of Irvine, Estill county, Ky., had a grim sense of humor, which, carried once too far, brought him into serious trouble. He was attending a social gathering in front of the corner grocery, and, seeing a young man whom he disliked, he said in his grimly humorous way: "Dance or die," at the same time cocking his revolver and taking aim. The young man danced until he was about to drop with exhaustion. Then Mr. Fletcher smiled, and said: "You may stop." He uncocked his pistol and put it in his pocket. The victim immediately plucked up spirit, pulled out his own revolver and shot Mr. Fletcher dead.

It would be gratifying to know just how many centenarians there are in the country. They keep turning up with astonishing frequency. Their names pop out in the newspapers like corn out of the ashes on an old-fashioned hearth. They appear here, and then there, and then in a dozen places all at once. The country seems to be speckled all over with these excellent people who are holding over. It is really worth the while to know how many old folks we have on hand this year, and there should be no difficulty in ascertaining. Let every one who is a hundred years old or upward rise and stand till he is counted.

A traveling salesman of a St. Louis establishment has sued a hotel-keeper, a newspaper, and a railroad company for negligence in causing him to miss a train. The railroad company furnished an incorrect time-table, the newspaper printed it, and the hotel man failed to wake his guest up as directed. There seems to be at this point a revival of the famous defense in the kettle case, when the defendant alleged that the kettle was cracked when he borrowed it, whole when he returned it, and, finally, that it never was in his possession; for, if the hotel-keeper had waked the man up as directed, while the time-table was wrong, what would it have profited him? And if the time-table had been right, what good would it have done a man in the arms of the drowsy god? The St. Louis drummer asks $5,000 damages for one day's delay.

The facilities for transit by street and steam cars in Philadelphia during the Exhibition are said to be excellent. The roads are represented as ready for any emergency, and in a condition to transport at least 25,000 per hour. The Chestnut and Walnut street company have sixteen miles of track, and will run 120 cars; the Fourth, Eighth, and Girard avenue a like number, capable of carrying 65,000 persons to the gates daily. The capacities of the other lines will be equally great, not counting the wagon and stage routes. However, the figures are not, we regret to say, based upon the philanthropic idea of giving every passenger a seat. A good deal of hanging on by the straps may be anticipated.

A New Political Organization.

A political campaign organization called "The National Reform League," with headquarters in New York city, has been formed by gentlemen prominent in law and literature, but not much known in politics. Its inception dates from early April, and it already numbers about 100 members, distributed through thirty different States. The address of the executive committee to the country is dated New York, May 3, 1876, but it was finally approved at a meeting which was held in that city a few days ago. There were present Henry Randall Waite, editor of the International Review, who has been specially active in organizing the League; Samuel C. Anderson, of New Jersey, Gen. Franz Sigel, Kinahan Cornwallis, George Cary Eggleston, and others. Resolutions were adopted designed to further the organization of branch "national reform leagues" throughout the country, and an address of the executive committee to the people of the United States. It is signed by Henry Randall Waite, J. G. Holland, Franz Sigel, George H. Putnam, R. Heber Newton, George Cary Eggleston, and Kinahan Cornwallis, of New York; James Freeman Clarke, Henry T. Cheever, and Henry F. Bishop, of Massachusetts; M. S. Dudley, of Connecticut; Samuel C. Anderson, and R. W. Weeks, of New Jersey; John Sill, of Pennsylvania; James D. Browne, of Virginia; R. Brinkerhoff and M. D. Harter, of Ohio, and John W. Hoyt, of Wisconsin. The address declares that "the members of the National Reform League will stand pledged to the use of all legitimate means for securing the nomination and election to the Chief Magistracy of the nation, and to all minor offices, national, State and local, of men who shall worthily represent the people and the institutions of the United States."

RIOTING IN LOUISIANA.

Serious Fighting Between Whites and Blacks in West Feliciana Parish—Contradictory Reports.

[Dispatch to Associated Press.]

New Orleans, La., May 15.—A New Orleans Times special, dated Summit, Miss., May 15, says: "Information was received here last night of a row between negroes and whites at Laurel Hill, in West Feliciana parish, near the Mississippi line. On Friday night about thirty negroes went to the store of a white man in that vicinity and called him to the door and riddled him with bullets. A posse from Bayou Sara went out on Saturday for the body, but the negroes would not give it up. A fight ensued, and three negroes were killed; two white men are missing. The negroes are gathered, and 1,100 are said to be under arms. The whites are going down from the neighboring counties in Mississippi, and a serious fight is expected."

A special to the Republican from Bayou Sara, La., May 15, reports: "Eight colored men have been shot dead and four hanged. About twenty were wounded. No whites were killed. Persons from the scene report sixty blacks killed, but this statement I consider as exaggerated. Twenty colored men are reported held as hostages. Their fate is uncertain, but the supposition is that they will be killed; also, that the number of negroes killed will never be ascertained, precautions being taken to remove the dead secretly. The number of regulators under arms is said to be 500, from East Baton Rouge and East and West Feliciana and Wilkinson county, Miss. The colored people are said to be arming in self-defense. On Saturday and Sunday night a number of colored men crossed to Point Coupee to escape those who are hunting them."

Still another dispatch from Bayou Sara says: "There has been a regular engagement at Laurel Hill between white and colored men. Three whites are reported killed. God only knows where this will end. The country is ablaze with excitement. All the whites are armed and in the saddle."

Acting Gov. Antoine received the following dispatch from Dr. Kaufman, Sheriff of East Feliciana parish, dated Bayou Sara to-day: "In reply to your telegram I have to say that seventeen colored men are killed and many wounded on the line of Mississippi and Louisiana. A large number of armed white men are approaching this town. I cannot summon and secure a posse comitatus for the support of civil authority and the suppression of riots and the prevention of further bloodshed. Nothing but military authority will keep the peace. Therefore, I respectfully request that military aid be placed at my disposal."

These dispatches have been laid before Gen. Augur, commanding the department, who has referred them to Washington.

The Boston Fiend.

The horrible murder of the little girl Mabel Young, in the belfry of the Warren Avenue Baptist church, in Boston, a few months since, is still fresh in the minds of our readers. This child of five years old was enticed into the belfry, a few minutes after the close of the Sabbath school, and beaten to death, as was supposed, with a bludgeon in the hands of the sexton, Thomas W. Piper. The latter was seen in company with the child a short time previous, and was arrested for the deed and tried, the result being a disagreement of the jury. A second trial resulted in his conviction. Shortly after the latter occurrence he stated that he saw the child go into the belfry, and followed to warn her that the trap-door was dangerous; that just before he reached her he heard a scream and the noise of the trap falling. He ran forward and found that the heavy door had fallen on her head and crushed it. Fearing that he would be accused of murdering her, he shut the doors and ran away.

Although this story looked quite improbable, the more so as the fracture in the child's skull seemed made with a blunt instrument instead of the sharp corner of the trap, it seemed still more improbable that this man would deliberately murder a little child like this without any motive for such a deed; and no possible object for its commission by him could be imagined. Efforts were being made by his counsel for a new trial, with fair prospects of success, when, on Sunday, the miserable wretch astounded the lawyer by a full confession of the horrible crime. He assigns no motive save pure fiendishness, such as actuated the boy murderer Pomeroy, who still lingers in prison, awaiting the signing of his death warrant by the Governor. Piper not only confesses to the murder of the little girl, but also to the murder of a domestic named Bridget Landergan, who was clubbed to death in Dorchester about three years ago. He also admits that it was he who made a deadly assault on one Mary Tyner, in Oxford street, Boston, about two years ago, which came very near resulting in the death of the girl. No motive is assigned for these crimes more than that already given in the case of the child. It almost surpasses belief that there exists on earth a wretch so utterly devoid of all human feeling as to deliberately commit such horrible deeds from a simple love of murder. We do not think that outside of Boston such cases have been known, and it is not surprising that the good people of that city begin to ask themselves whether his majesty the Devil has taken up his permanent abode there. Piper is condemned to suffer death on the 26th inst., and the people will breathe freer when this human monstrosity shall be out of the world.—Inter-Ocean.

Kisses by Telegraph.

The New Orleans Picayune, which is always picking up good news between time in the troubles of its city, says that the telegraph art has reached such perfection that long courtships have been maintained between persons hundreds of miles apart, and some love-sick telegraphist has even invented a telegraphic sign for love's first sweet kiss.

THE COUSHATTA TRAGEDY.

Particulars of the Attack on Senator Twitchell and [illegible].

[Coushatta (La.) Cor. St. Louis Globe-Democrat.]

The particulars of the shooting of Senator W. H. Twitchell and the killing of his brother-in-law, George H. King, will doubtless prove of interest to the readers of the Globe-Democrat. At quite an early hour this morning a stranger was noticed riding into town. His peculiar attire and appearance attracted considerable attention. The collar of his rubber coat was turned, and the rim of his soft felt hat turned down. He also wore green goggles, and it was his evident intention to conceal as much of his face as possible. He was spoken to by several citizens during the morning, but allowed no one to get a good look at his features.

The stranger was armed with a repeating rifle and six-shooter. He visited the blacksmith shop, and after asking the price of shoeing, said that his brother would be along soon, and that he would wait for him before deciding whether he would have heavy or light shoes put on the horse. He said that he would sit by the window of the shop until his brother came. This window commanded a view of the river for some distance up and down, and there he remained for some time—an hour or two—and was spoken to by several parties, to whom he replied in such a manner as to imply that he did not care to converse, and at no time did he uncover his face fully. About 9 o'clock, Senator Twitchell and his brother-in-law, G. A. King, rode down to the ferry and crossed. The stranger mounted his horse and slowly jogged toward the point where the skiff must land, and when the skiff had reached the middle of the river he was 100 yards from the landing. The man here dismounted, tied his horse and walked toward the the river bank in a careles manner. As the skiff struck the bank, or landing, he commenced firing upon the party with his rifle. The first shot missed, the second struck one of Twitchell's arms. King had by this time drawn his pistol and was firing in return, when the stranger changed his fire and killed King, who fell in the boat. The negro who was rowing, had managed to get the skiff thirty or forty feet from the bank by this time, and Twichell jumped overboard and hung to the side of the skiff with his remaining arm, and was struggling to protect himself with a board. The stranger, however, kept up the shooting with clock-work precision, and managed to break Twichell's other arm, and he drifted away from the boat, helpless and drowning. At this time, Gen. Mudgett, who was awaiting the return of the skiff to cross, commenced firing at the stranger, but did not hit him, and he apparently paid no attention to him. Several persons in town had run over to see what was the matter, and had been ordered back. Finally the stranger walked toward his horse, reloaded his rifle, mounted, and was about leaving when he saw the negro boy pulling Twichell in the boat under the directions of a lady who stood on the bank. He rode to the bank and again commenced firing, this time with his revolver. One shot hit Twichell in the leg, and another struck the negro in the hand. The lady begged of the man to desist, but apparently he paid no attention to her. The lady asked the negro if Twichell was dead, and upon his replying in the affirmative, the stranger turned and rode out of town. He passed several parties who knew nothing of the shooting, but their attention was attracted to him for the reason that he kept them covered with his six-shooter until he had passed them some distance. Meanwhile the negro had reached the bank from whence they had started. Twichell was shot three times, King three or four times, and the negro once.

Remedy for Burns.

Take newly slacked lime, or if previously slacked, that which has not been exposed to the air, as from the center of the box which contains it; sift through muslin or something very fine. Mix one ounce of lime with four or five of fresh lard or butter, sweet oil and mutton tallow, melted together (equal parts); spread on cloth and apply, renewing as the oil substance becomes absorbed. This will give perfect ease in a few minutes, whether the skin is off or not and soon cures; if the skin is off keep the cloth on well. Sufferers try this.

Since 1858, when the British divorce act went into operation, the number of petitions has averaged 388 a year.

DAVID C. BRODERICK'S DEATH.

A California Chief-Justice and a Senator on the Dueling Ground.

(From the San Francisco Post.)

The prominent and peculiar part played by David C. Broderick in California politics, the hold he obtained on the public heart, and the circumstances preceding his unhappy end, unite to enhance the tragic character of his fate. After struggling for years against odds which would have overborne a man of less energy and determination, he triumphed over all the powerful foes arrayed against him, winning the object of his ambition, a seat in the United States Senate. After the adjournment of Congress he returned to this State and entered upon the memorable campaign of '59, leading the Douglas wing of the Democracy. David S. Terry, Chief-justice of the Supreme court, was a candidate for renomination, and in one of his speeches he said in relation to the rival wing of his party:

"They have no distinction; they are entitled to none. They are the followers of one man, the personal chattels of a single individual. They belong body and soul and breeches to David C. Broderick. They are yet ashamed to acknowledge their master, and are, forsooth, Douglas Democrats."

To this passage, which is certainly not more offensive than the average oratory of which it is a class, Broderick attached undue weight. Reading it at the breakfast table of the International hotel in the morning, he became highly incensed, and spoke in great anger and bitterness of Terry, saying that he regretted having assisted him when in the hands of the vigilance committee. D. W. Perley, formerly the law partner of Terry, being at the table, resented the slur upon his absent friend, and sent Broderick a challenge, which the latter declined on the ground of social and political inequality between them, and that Perley being a foreigner had not the political rights to lose by fighting that he (Broderick) had. In the course of the correspondence the Senator also announced his unalterable determination not to respond to any challenge until after the election. Terry, who it was understood was on the point of coming to San Francisco to demand instant satisfaction, was deterred by this intimation from Broderick. He cherished the remembrance of the insult, and resigning his office, on election day took the boat for San Francisco, stopping at Stockton for his surgeon, Dr. Aylett, and his dueling pistol. On the next day he called Broderick to account.

Senator Broderick and the Chief-justice met on Davis' ranch, about two miles southeast of Lake Merced. The weapons were dueling pistols, distance ten paces. The choice of position and weapons were decided by the toss of a half dollar, being won by the seconds of Terry. The latter's weapons were, of course, chosen. The principals took off their overcoats and stepped to the positions assigned them. Broderick, who wore a light wool hat pulled down over his forehead, had a presentiment of his fate, but was sustained by his iron will. Terry stood firm, with the air of a practiced duelist. At the word the weapons were raised. In his nervous hurry Broderick's was discharged prematurely, the bullet striking the ground in front of his antagonist. Terry aimed deliberately and fired, exclaiming: "The shot is not mortal. I have struck two inches to the right." Broderick, on receiving the shot, turned suddenly to one side, braced himself for a moment, and retaining his pistol in a convulsive grasp, sank to the earth. After lingering seventy-four hours, the Senator expired on the morning of September 16.

Judge Terry was indicted for murder. He procured a change of venue to Marin county, and previous to the trial he took rooms at San Rafael and kept open house to all who chose to come, entertaining them liberally, and thus making friends of as many as possible of the people where he was to be tried. The hour fixed for the beginning of the trial was 9 o'clock in the morning, an unusually early hour for the opening of a court. On the morning named, Alexander Campbell, who had been employed to conduct the prosecution, accompanied by the witnesses for the prosecution, started at 7 o'clock in the yacht Restless for San Rafael, but they did not reach their destination until noon. Meantime the court opened punctually at 9, and notwithstanding the absence of the Prosecuting-attorney and his witnesses, proceeded with the farce of a trial, and there being no witnesses, the Judge soon directed the jury to render a verdict of acquittal, which they did with great alacrity. When Mr. Campbell arrived with his witnesses, he found Judge Terry and friends in high glee over the acquittal. Judge Terry has since given his attention to practicing law, and is a leading member of the bar at Stockton, his old home.

Those Same Boys again.

Early yesterday morning a well-dressed woman called at the Central Station court, asked if "the head police gentleman" was in, and when the captain came forward she said:

"Sir, an outrage was perpetrated at my house this morning, the like of which was never recorded, and I called to inquire if the majesty of the law is not powerful enough to overawe such desperate criminals?"

"I guess she is," replied the captain, preparing himself to hear of a stabbing affray at least.

"This morning, soon after the sun had ascended the horizon," continued the lady, "and while I sat at my window, buried in reflection over the wonders of nature, a carrier boy came along."

"Came along," repeated the captain, as she paused.

"Came along, and as he observed me he halted and bent his gaze in my direction. My glance rested upon him without my realizing for a moment that he was there. As I looked down upon him he made up a face, like this, and put his finger on his nose, like this.—What foul, fiendish motive prompted him I know not. Recovering in a measure from my surprise, I raised the window and commanded him to be gone. He said he'd be darned if he'd begone for any behanged woman in Detroit."

"Woman in Detroit," echoed the captain.

"Actuated by a spirit of devilish malice," continued the woman, "the young fiend from the suburbs of perdition asked me if I was ever arrested for stealing a dog. My indignation knew no bounds, but I was helpless. All I could do was to hurl a stick of wood at him, and he dodged it and hurled it back, splitting the panel of the front door."

"Panel of the front door," repeated the captain.

"Here is his description, and now I demand his speedy arrest, trial and conviction. I am a free-born American lady, entitled to the full protection of all laws, and I demand protection from the fiendish, malicious and unprecedented persecutions of that young fiend, whose conduct stamps him as one of the most depraved wretches history has ever known."

The captain promised to shoot the boy as soon as found, and the woman went away feeling much easier in her mind.—Detroit Free Press.

A Touching Scene in a Kentucky Court-Room.

On Friday last we had quite a touching scene in our court-house. Old John Garner, an old, gray-headed man, was arraigned for the crime of grand larceny—horse-stealing. He pleaded guilty, and presented himself to the jury in a brief and touching address. He said:

"GENTLEMEN OF THE JURY: I am an old man, and my race is nearly run. This is the first time in my life I have ever been before a jury. I have never even been a witness in a magistrate's court. I was born in 1816, and have been a hard-working and honest man all my life until now. I am a stranger to every man in this house, except his honor who sits on that bench. He has known me for nine years, and he will tell you I have been an honest man and a good citizen. This jury looks like a set of honest and intelligent men, and I wish you to deal with me the best you can. I read in the paper that the prison at Frankfort is an awful place—that it is so crowded that one can scarcely live there. From the accounts of that place I suppose I could not live there long. You see I am old and feeble, and I ask you to do the best you can for me. Gentlemen, if I could have got work I could have supported my family and not been here. But I want to tell you—I am a very poor man and have to work to live. Well, last year the times were very hard indeed, and I could not get work much of my time. I am a mechanic, and I went to Clarksville, Fairview and many other places, but I could not get any work. The times were very hard, as you all know, and but few men had money to to pay for labor. I traveled around till I spent all that I had but a bed and a chair. I was tired and out of heart, and my family suffering for food and clothing. I heard then that I could get work in North Logan, and I sold my kit of tools to get my family up there. I paid $75 for my tools in Louisville and had to sell them low. After paying for moving I had $15 left. I got a place for my family for a little while, and started again for work. I tried hard to find it but could not. I went back to my family broken down in spirit, thinking I would have to starve or beg. Gentlemen, my little boy, about six years old, got in my lap, and put his little arms around my neck and asked me if the good Lord would let us starve. I love my family as well as any man, and could not think of their starving."

The prisoner became overwhelmed with emotion, and, pausing for a few moments, he pleaded for as light a verdict as the jury could give him. The occasion was exceedingly solemn. The prisoner told his story without reservation. Age and care had whitened his locks and furrowed his brow. He had seen better days, but he was now a broken reed. The jury, the attorneys, the judge, and the spectators were touched by the homely recital of the suppliant prisoner. The jury gave him two years in the penitentiary, and the judge, jury and lawyers then signed a petition to the Governor for his pardon.—Elkton (Ky.) Witness.

An Act of Courtesy.

According to a well defined rule of etiquette, it is a lady's place to bow first to a gentleman who has been presented to her. But many ladies wait for the first demonstration to come from the opposite sex. "I can't take the initiative, and bow to a comparative strange gentleman," says Miss Precision. "How embarrassed I should be if he failed to recognize me!" If any number of women feel thus, the point of etiquette should be changed in order to save their sensibilities. In truth, however, the objection is not well made. There is not the smallest danger that any man, presuming him, of necessity, to be a gentleman, at least in respect to his observing the ordinary forms of courtesy, would refuse or hesitate to return the acknowledgment of a woman, even though he might not have the remotest recollection of ever having seen her before, or though he were convinced she had confounded him with somebody else. And the fact that he had been recognized by a woman would be the strongest presumptive evidence that he had been presented to her. The truth is, women are so accustomed to men paying court to them, that they cannot reconcile themselves to making the first advances in anything—not even in every-day courtesy.

A Veteran Pedestrian.

Mr. George W. Dietz, the seventy-nine year old veteran, who left New Albany, Ind., to walk to the Philadelphia Centennial, passed through Cincinnati the other day. The Cincinnati Gazette says: "Mr. Dietz wears such a suit of clothes as a farmer would have on when a circus comes to town, or the plow horse trots around the half-mile track of a county fair. He carries a cane and a small 'gripsack,' his heavier baggage being transported by railroad. He does not walk the track, but seeks the ordinary roads, and spends his nights were he happens to be when the sun gets down. Mr. Dietz does not care much when he gets to the Centennial Exhibition, as he is under no agreement to be there by any specified time, but he likes to make about twenty-five miles a day. He manifests an interest in the man who is wheeling a barrow full of Missouri minerals, the similarity of their undertaking creating a bond of sympathy between them. As Mr. Dietz has no incumbrances, the man with the wheelbarrow will no doubt be left far behind in the Centennial walk."

The Home Doctor.

FOR SICK HEADACHE.

Two teaspoonfuls of finely powdered charcoal, drunk in half a tumbler of water, will often give relief to the headache, when caused, as in most cases it is, by a superabundance of acid in the stomach.

BURNS AND SCALDS.

For burns and scalds take the white of an egg and apply immediately as a plaster, and the pain will cease almost instantly. This receipt is nearly always on hand in most families, and nothing can be found better.

TO BREAK UP CHILLS.

Take gum camphor, one ounce, fill a small flannel sack, and wear it on the breast. It may be pinned to the under-clothing and worn next to the skin. The camphor soon evaporates, when the sack should be refilled, if necessary. I have cured chills with this when all ague remedies would have no effect.

TO CURE WHITE SWELLING OR SCROFULA.

Scrape common elder bark, bitter sweet, mullein leaves—equal parts. Boil together in a little water; then put in a little golden seal. Stew all in fresh butter and mutton tallow, equal parts, until well done. Then strain and put back in pot, and put in beeswax and pine tar. Stew them all together. For use, spread on a cloth and apply as a poultice.

SWEET OIL FOR POISON.

A farmer writes to the College Courant: It is now over twenty years since I heard that sweet oil would cure the bite of a rattlesnake, not knowing that it would cure other kinds of poison. Practice and experience have taught me that it will cure poison of any kind, both on man and beast. The patient must take a spoonful of it internally, and bathe the wound for a cure. To cure a horse, it takes eight times as much as for a man. One of the most extreme cases of snake bite occurred eleven years ago. It had been of thirty days' standing, and the patient had been given up by his physicians. I gave him a spoonful of the oil, which effected a cure. It will cure bloat in cattle caused by fresh clover. It will cure the stings of bees, spiders, or other insects, and persons who have been poisoned by a low running vine called ivy.

BABIES' BATHS.

A physician says: "For the 'wind in the stomach' children are thought to have, for their tiresome crying, and for their restlessness and worrying at night with which they are afflicted, if the warm bath were resorted to oftener instead of using soothing syrups and worse nostrums, it would be far better for the children." In preparing warm baths for infants, great care should be taken not to have the water too hot. A lady remarks on this subject: "When my child was sick one night the doctor ordered the hot bath. The lady who was with me got the water ready, and said it was all right. Just as she was going to put the child in I said, 'Put your elbow into the water first.' She did so and found it altogether too hot. In washing my babies I often find the water that is agreeable to my hands not so to my flesh that is kept covered with clothing, which leads me to think oftentimes babies are tortured, and even injured, by giving them a bath in water that is too hot."

THE TREATMENT OF DIARRHŒA.

In a paper in Virchow's Archiv, Dr. Hartsen observes that diarrhœa of all sorts goes along with an irritable state of the intestinal canal, and any increase of this irritability is to be carefully avoided. He considers that the more usual astringents are, in addition, irritants; and he instances among them the salts of lead, zinc, and bismuth. In all cases soothing means should first be adopted; and of these, warm applications to the abdomen, in the form of bread poultices, or fomentations, are perhaps the best. The chief medicine recommended is opium, which soothes, but, in large doses, interferes with digestion. If the diarrhœa be so violent as to hinder the absorption of opium introduced into the stomach, then morphia should be injected subcutaneously. Of equal importance is the diet. If the person be strong, everything, both solid and fluid, should be withheld; but, where this cannot be done, the food should be of the lightest and simplest. The author especially refers to rice and arrowroot as simple vegetable diets, while any animal food given should be free from fat. Milk should not be too much used, and in any case should be boiled.

A New Use for Musk.

At the late session of the Indiana Institute of Homeopathy, at Indianapolis, Dr. Bray Fogle, of Louisville, read a report upon the case of Miss Snead, of that city (the well-known correspondent, "Miss Grundy.") She had become addicted, through the advice of her physicians, to use stimulants, and to absorbing an ounce of hydrate of chloral per diem, and the doctor, being called in, cured her in ten days by large doses of musk. It was a most interesting case, and evoked a spirited discussion.

THE Times says Dr. Walpole has lost his beautiful chestnut mare. She died suddenly in harness, it is supposed from bots or pin worms. If the Doctor had used Sheridan's Cavalry Condition Powders, he would, no doubt, have had his mare to-day—they are death on worms.

Xantippe.

It seems that the memory of this woman, like that of her renowned husband, is likely to be kept alive to the end of time. She is said to have possessed a very irritable temper, and her name has become a synonym of "vixen," or "scold." It is more than possible, however, that the judgment passed upon her by mankind has been too severe. A more charitable disposition would undoubtedly have discovered in her many good qualities, and have attributed her failings more to physical infirmities than to moral obliquity. The party most intimately acquainted with her, and therefore best able to form a correct opinion, gives her credit for many domestic virtues. It is now well known that many of the diseases to which women are subject, have a direct tendency to render them irritable, peevish, cross, morose, unreasonable, so that they chafe and fret over all these little ills and annoyances that a person in health would bear with composure. It is fair to infer that most of the tantrums of Xantippe were due to these causes alone; and could Socrates, as he returned from the Senate, the Gymnasium, or the Athenæum, have stopped at Pestle & Mortar's Drug Store and carried home a bottle of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, now and then, no doubt he might have evaded many a "curtain lecture," allayed many a "domestic broil," made it much pleasanter for the children, and more enjoyable for himself, and rescued his wife's name from the unenviable, world-wide, and eternal notoriety it has attained. Thousands of women bless the day on which Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription was first made known to them. A single bottle often gives delicate and suffering women more relief than months of treatment from their family physician. In all those derangements causing backache, dragging-down sensations, nervous and general debility, it is a sovereign remedy. Its soothing and healing properties render it of the utmost value to ladies suffering from internal fever, congestion, inflammation, or ulceration, and its strengthening effects tend to correct displacements of internal parts, the result of weakness of natural supports. It is sold by all druggists.

CHAPPED hands are very common with those who have their hands much in water. A few drops of Johnson's Anodyne Liniment rubbed over the hands two or three times a day will keep them soft and white. Fishermen, sailors, and others will do well to remember this.

THE attention of all lovers of the horse is called to the advertisement of E. C. Stone, in another column.

TO ALL, particularly invalids, spring is a trying season. Indications of sickness should at once be attended to. Fatal diseases may be caused by allowing the bowels to become constipated, and the system to remain in a disordered condition, until the disorder has time to develop itself. An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure, is an old and truthful saying. Therefore, we advise all who are troubled with the complaints now very prevalent—headache, indigestion, disordered liver, want of appetite, nausea, or feverish skin—to take, without delay, Schenck's Mandrake Pills. We know of no remedy so harmless and decisive in its action. It at once strikes at the root of the disease and produces a healthy tone to the system. People never need suffer from any disease arising from a disordered condition of the liver if they would take this excellent medicine when they feel the first indications of the malady. Families leaving home for the summer months should take three or four boxes of these pills with them. They have an almost instantaneous effect. They will relieve the patient of headache in one or two hours, and will rapidly cleanse the liver of surrounding bile, and will effectually prevent a bilious attack. They are sold by all druggists.

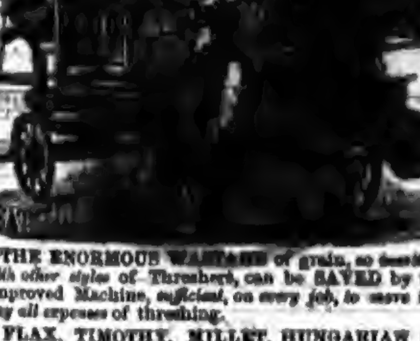
TARRANT'S SELTZER APERIENT. "Screw the finger as tight as you can, that's rheumatism; one turn more, that's gout," is a familiar description of those two diseases. Though each may and does attack different parts of the system, the cause is believed to be a poisonous acid in the blood. Purify this by the use of Tarrant's Seltzer Aperient. It will do its work speedily and thoroughly. It is the great friend of the sufferer from rheumatism and gout. SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS.

"THE VIBRATOR" 1000 SOLD LAST SEASON WITHOUT ONE FAILURE OR REJECTION. This is the famous Threshing Machine that has "swept the field" and created such a revolution in the trade, by its marvelous [illegible] principles.



THE NICHOLS, SHEPARD & CO. VIBRATOR

THE ENORMOUS WASTAGE of grain, so inevitable with other styles of Threshers, can be SAVED by this Improved Machine, sufficient, on every job, to more than pay all expenses of threshing.

FLAX, TIMOTHY, MILLET, HUNGARIAN and like seeds are threshed, separated, cleaned and saved as easily and perfectly as Wheat, Oats, Rye or Barley.

AN EXTRA PRICE is usually paid for grain and seeds cleaned by this machine, for extra cleanliness.

IN THE WET GRAIN of 1875, these were substantially the ONLY MACHINES that could run with profit or economy, doing fast, thorough and perfect work, when others utterly failed.

ALL GRAIN, TIME and MONEY wasting complications, such as "Endless Aprons," "Raddles," "Beaters," "Pickers," etc., are entirely dispensed with; less than one-half the usual Gears, Belts, Boxes, and Journals; easier managed; more durable; light running; no costly repairs; no dust; no "litterings" to clean up; not troubled by adverse winds, rain or storms.

FARMERS and GRAIN RAISERS who are posted in the large saving made by it will not employ inferior and wasteful machines, but will insist on this improved Thresher doing their work.

FOUR SIZES made for 6, 8, 10 and 12 Horse Powers. Also a specialty of SEPARATORS, designed and made EXPRESSLY FOR STEAM POWER.

TWO STYLES OF HORSE POWERS, viz.: our Improved "Triple Gear," and our "Spur Speed" (Woodbury Style), both "Mounted" on four wheels.

IF INTERESTED in Threshing or Grain Raising, apply to our nearest Dealer, or write to us for Illustrated Circular (sent free), giving full particulars of Sizes, Styles, Prices, Terms, etc.

Nichols, Shepard & Co., BATTLE CREEK, MICH.

One of the grandest sights at the Centennial is to be the parade of the Knights Templars in June, which promises to be the most gorgeous display in the annals of Masonry. The number of Knights expected is estimated at upward of twenty thousand exclusive of the Philadelphia organizations.

Two young ladies in the library were discussing a perference expressed by one of them for clean shaven men, when the other was heard to remark. "I don't object to a man with a reasonable quantity of hair on his face, but I wouldn't like to marry a buffalo robe."

Mr. Beecher's feminine friends would make an interesting bouquet for the Centennial. The close of some recent doings at Plymouth Church is thus reported by a writer who was present:

"As the Bowens passed out through th crowd members rushed around them calling the old man a liar and a coward and four or five 'ladies' left their husbands and followed Mr. Bowen through the long alley way to the street, hissing in his ears. 'O you dog!' 'You rat!' Rat rat! don't you wish you could get at the bottom facts!' I wish I was a man! O you mean old rat!—Logansport Pharos

Effects of the Centennial.

You will be mine,' urged a faithful and substantial lover to a Philadelphia girl, recently.

'Oh, no, I won't any such a thing,' she answered, archly.

'But why this change?' pleaded he, you once felt different toward me.'

'Oh, yes, I know I did,' she replied, but I didn't think of the Centennial then, and the chances there'll be to pick up a foreign duke, or prince, or something!'

And as the disappointed youth turned sadly away you could see by his face that there was at least one soul which had lost its enthusiasm for the coming big show.

The average Tennessee girl's papadoes not seem to be of the wholly unsympathetic sort, to judge form the Nashville American's account of the latest tragedy in that locality in which a young lady her papa and her lover were the actors. It was a case of hopeless love, it seems on the young man's part and he resolved upon suicide in consequence. To carry his full design into execution, he went to the residence of his inamorata's parents and on entering shot himself probably intending to send the bullet to his heart but instead only inflicting a bad wound whereon the lady's father unwilling to see the young man foiled in his suicidal design simply through bad marksmanship or ignorance of anatomy discharged a load of shot into the young man which effectually finished him.

The following letter was lately received by one of the young gents in this city and we give it publicity for it breathes the spirit of true love.

My Dearest:—Most happy am I to acknowledge myself the recipitent of another letter from you and could you know the pleasure a letter from yourself affords, you would not be so sparing of an article that costs you so little trouble and could I assure myself that mine pleased half so well, the time employed writing them would pass most pleasantly I can hardly refrain from expressing to you my feeling—which you ere this day have discovered borders fast upon that old enchantment—old as time itself—love. You are in some way always with me in fancy, though I much deplore—may I not be excusable in rashly invoking a wish that this state so trying may not long continue—but that a fortune may soon cause you to be mine in fact as you are always in fancy. Yes, would that I could annihilate distance and even outstrip time itself in it mad-onward flight and if I had all the prerogatives what use would I put them to. You would scarcely have time to put the question though into words ere I would stand ready to answer in person, for "there's not a day or hour of dreaming night, but I am with thee. There's not a wind, but whispers of thy name, and not a flower that sleeps beneath the moon but in its hues or fragrance tells a tale of thee. Yes I think often of the absent and wonder when shall we meet again. Shall it be ever? Echo answers ever, ever. And now breathing anathemas of the dearest kind that an opportunity is wanting of breathing the sentiments of my most undying love I have for you in person. I invoke the tenderest care of God in your behalf, and freighting the fitful breeze with a world of good wishes for you, and the hope so that beams of the wooded moon at evetime may bring you a thought of me. I will now close by sending to thee (May 24,) A Kiss. "An offering of love for thee alone, a pledge of affection that is all. THINE OWN."

The man that can withstand pleadings like the above, has surely not his heart at the right spot.

An Organ With a Will of Its Own.

The good people of a certain country village in Indiana hungered and thirsted for an organ to assist in the church service; but as they could not afford to hire an organist they bought a self-operating instrument warranted to grind out forty tunes of a religious cast. The musical instrument was plced in position for the next Sunday. The sexton was instructed how to set it going and how to stop it but unfortunately forgot the latter part of his business and after singing the first four verses of a hymn before the sermon the organ could not be stopped but continued playing two verses more then just as the clergyman completed the words, "Let us pray," the organ again clicked and started another tune. The sexton and others continued their exertions to find the sprnig, but no one could put a stop to it; so they got four of the stoutest men in the church to shoulder the perverse instrument and they carried it down the aisle of the church playing away into the church-yard where it continued clicking and playing until the whole forty tunes were finished.

The Nashville American has this sensible observation concerning the National Democratic Convention: "The present outlook promises a more harmonious national conference, than might have been anticipated several months earlier. That State delegation, which is most earnestly inspired with the desire for harmonious co-operation will, we predict, wield the widest influence in the National Convention.

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

THE EAST.

The foreign Commissioners have become disgusted at the slowness of the Centennial Commission in appointing the foreign jurors. They held an indignation meeting the other day in the British Government building, on the Centennial grounds, and talked very strongly about the shabby way in which their jurors have been treated.

William Henry Hurlbert has purchased the interest of Manton Marble in the New York World....The Sunday liquor law is being strictly enforced by the New York police, and there is great indignation among the saloon-keepers in consequence.

The expected universal hegira to the Centennial has not yet taken place, the attendance of people paying fifty cents apiece to see the great Exhibition having, on no day since opening, exceeded sixteen thousand.

Jay Gould is said to be losing his grip in Wall street....Five fishing vessels and forty-seven lives have been lost in the Gloucester fisheries this year.

THE WEST.

Gen. Crook's campaign against the Sioux opens in anything but a way to inspire hopes of a glorious ending of the campaign. The first night out from Cheyenne, when still about 200 miles from the savages, sixty-five of his men deserted, taking their arms, horses, and accouterments....Ex-Gov. Willis A. Gorman, of Minnesota, is dead.

Supervisor Meyer and Revenue Agent Colony, assisted by two Deputy-Marshals, seized four illicit stills, in Cape Girardeau county, Mo., last week. They met an armed mob and were compelled to desist from a further prosecution of their work. There are from seventy-five to a hundred more stills in operation in that section of the country, and Col. Meyer has asked Commissioner Pratt for a force sufficient to enable him to break them up.

Portions of Colorado and Wyoming were visited by a driving snow-storm on the 24th of May....The trial of Ex-Supervisor of Internal Revenue, D. W. Munn, was brought to a close at Chicago last week, and resulted in his acquittal.

A letter from a Cincinnatian named Matt, who went out to the Black Hills some time since, states: "The Indians are on the war-path, killing miners at a fearful rate. Miners are returning to the States by hundreds." He says that out of forty-two men at Deadwood, twenty-seven of them have been killed by the red devils. Five more were killed and scalped within three miles of Custer City. There is plenty of gold northwest of Custer City, but it is impossible to get it on account of the Indians.

SOUTH.

Another daring stage robbery is reported from Texas. One stage and two hacks full of passengers were stopped by highwaymen on the open prairie, eighteen miles west of Dallas. Before finishing their work another hack full of passengers came up. On being ordered to stop the driver put the whip to his horses and escaped. Several shots were fired by the robbers, and one of them followed the hack some distance. The fire was returned by the passengers, but no one was hurt. As soon as the robbers secured the booty, which, it is reported, amounted to $7,000, they shot their own horses, mounted the best ones belonging to the stage, and rode toward the Indian Nation.

Gen. Augur telegraphs from New Orleans to Secretary of War Taft, under date of May 19: "The troops under my command are all ready to promptly carry out your instructions to me to protect Federal and State officials in the performance of their duties, and to suppress and prevent as far as possible law violence. The commandant at Bayou Sara reports to me that the disturbances are practically over. The difficulties at present are principally in Mississippi."

A Richmond (Va.) dispatch says: "A fire-damp explosion occurred on Saturday at the old Mid-Lothian coal-pit, in Chesterfield county, by which eight men were killed and two badly injured. Five of the killed were white and two colored."

The New Orleans Picayune says: "There were twenty-nine negroes killed in Wilkinson county, Miss., during the recent disturbance there."....A fire at Galveston, Texas, last week, destroyed $100,000 worth of property.

Of half a dozen distillers who have been on trial at New Orleans for defrauding the revenue, two have been found guilty and the others acquitted....The Methodist General Conference has selected ex-Senator Revels, late colored Senator from Mississippi, to edit the Southwestern Christian Advocate, at New Orleans.

A New Orleans telegram says: "Northern papers contain Washington specials asserting that President Grant administered a fitting rebuke to Gov. Kellogg, and stated that he was tired of being annoyed with Louisiana affairs. Gov. Kellogg states that these reports are incorrect, that he received from the President every assurance that he could reasonably ask that the peace would be preserved in Louisiana, and lawlessness suppressed."

GENERAL.

The general conference of the Methodist Church at Baltimore, last week, authorized the appointment of a committee of three ministers and two laymen, to meet a similar committee authorized by the Church South, and adjust all difficulties in the way of a formal fraternity between the two churches....The sad news comes from Canada that, in addition to the ordinary expense of a summer's pleasure tour in the wilds of that country, a fishing tax of $1 a day will henceforward be levied upon every citizen of the United States going thither to get the finny Kanuck on his hook.

Another installment of Chinese immigrants, numbering 900, arrived at San Francisco by steamer last week.

Miss Julia Matthews, the well-known opera-bouffe singer, died at St. Louis last week. Her remains were embalmed and sent to England.

A Washington telegram says: "Gov. Kellogg has been snubbed by the President. Gen. Grant is reported to have told him that if he were at his post in New Orleans discharging his duties, instead of asking for troops, he would be able to preserve the peace; that he had abundant means and authority to put down disorders without getting the United States into complications with State affairs. The President added with vehemence that he was tired of being annoyed with Louisiana affairs, and he hoped Kellogg would attend to his duties as an executive officer."

It is stated that Tom Scott and his friends, failing to get Congressional aid, have put up $2,000,000, and are contracting for steel and iron rails to build 120 miles of the Texas Pacific railroad west of Fort Worth, Texas. The road is to be completed thus far in August. It is understood that they will push the road west as fast as possible, lest the California Pacific get all the land-grant. Contracts for all the work are to be let immediately....The Writing Paper Makers' convention, in session at Springfield, Mass., last week, representing seven-eighths of the products of the whole country, voted to run all the mills on half time till Jan. 1, 1877, in order to prevent over-production and bring up prices.

WASHINGTON.

A plan for compelling the Pacific railroad companies to commence providing for the payment of their debts to the Government has been matured by the House Judiciary Committee. It contemplates, in the case of the Union Pacific, that $750,000 shall be set apart annually for ten years, and $1,000,000 annually thereafter, until the sinking fund thus created shall wipe out the bonds advanced to the company by the Government. It is proposed to apply an equal ratio of annual payments to the total debt to the other companies....Atty. Gen. Pierrepont decides that Gen. Schenck is still Minister to England....The President has stated to a friend that on the expiration of his Presidential term he intends to make the tour of the world....John Sherman, Jr., son of Senator Sherman, of Ohio, has been appointed United States Marshal for New Mexico.

The President, last week, sent to the Senate the following nominations: Edwards Pierrepont, of New York, to be Minister to England; Alphonso Taft, of Ohio, to be Attorney-General. J. Donald Cameron, of Pennsylvania, to be Secretary of War. The Senate, in executive session, confirmed the nominations.

Secretary Robeson has addressed a communication to the House Committee on Naval Affairs, demanding a hearing for himself and any naval officers against whom any damaging testimony has been taken in the recent investigations of the Navy department. He also asks that the hearing be had in open session of the committee.

The House Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred a resolution touching the immigration of Chinese into this country, has authorized Congressman Piper, of California, to report a joint resolution recommending that the President cause to be negotiated a new treaty between the United States and China, providing that the Government of each country shall have the right to prohibit the immigration of citizens of the other into its territory, except for commercial pursuits.

C. P. Huntington, Vice-president of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, has written a letter to the Chairman of the House Committee on the Judiciary, in which he says the company recognized as fully as the committee the desirability, both to the Government and the company, of an equitable and final settlement of all matters and questions of whatever kind between them, and this, he thinks, can be effected by an amicable arbitration, with good results to both parties. If it should be determined by the committee to insist upon the cash payments named by one of the committee, the company would prefer the contract as it is, leaving the question at issue to be settled in future on equitable terms. The contraction in values, he says, has largely exceeded the calculations of the company, and the amount received from sales of lands has not been as large as was expected. The road was built in times of higher prices, and, although economically constructed, cost a very large sum, and he raised the question whether the nation, it being the principal beneficiary, should not share in the shrinkage, the saving to the Government every year being more than the annual interest it pays on the bonds of the company.

Edward F. Beale, formerly of California, now of Washington, has been appointed by the President to succeed Mr. Orth as Minister to Austria....The Postoffice department is now prepared to fill requisitions for the new Centennial stamp envelopes. The issue of these envelopes will be discontinued at the close of the Centennial Exhibition at Philadelphia, but those outstanding at the time will continue valid. They are good for postage at any postoffice in the country.

The House Banking and Currency Committee have unanimously agreed to report and recommend the passage of Representative Randall's bill to authorize the purchase of silver bullion to the extent of $20,000,000, with any money in the Treasury, and issue the result in silver coin; provided that not more than $1,000,000 of the money be used at any one time in the purchase of any such bullion....The Committee of the House on Foreign Affairs, while acquitting Gen. Schenck of any "fraudulent intention" in the swindling Emma mine speculations, nevertheless unanimously agree on a verdict of censure, first, because it was not proper for an American Minister to connect himself as a Director with the Emma Mine Company; second, that his relations with the company were such as to bring suspicion upon his motives and expose him to unfriendly criticism; and third, because "his speculative dealings in the shares of the company were incompatible with his diplomatic station and the maintenance of his usefulness at the court to which he was accredited."

POLITICAL.

Senator Booth says he does not intend to pay any attention to his nomination for Vice-president by the Independents.

The President has appointed Merritt C. Page United States Attorney for Montana and Charles E. Mayer United States Attorney for the northern and middle districts of Alabama.

A Washington dispatch says the Cabinet changes and the nomination of Judge Pierrepont as Minister to England were the occasion of great surprise in all quarters. So carefully had the intentions of the President in this regard been concealed that, with the exception of Mr. Fish and the gentlemen personally interested, the other members of the Cabinet were not aware of the arrangement until the nominations had been sent to the Senate.

The New Jersey Democratic State convention met at Trenton last week. A hard-money platform was adopted, and ex-Gov. Joel Parker, of that State, indorsed as a suitable candidate for the Presidency....The State committee of colored men of New York have declared for Senator Conkling for President....President Grant is said to have suggested the names of Congressman McCrary, of Iowa, and Senator Alcorn, of Mississippi, as his favorite candidates for the Vice-presidency.

Republican conventions were held on the 24th of May in Illinois, Missouri, Minnesota, New Hampshire, Nebraska, Kansas, and Dakota Territory. The Illinois convention, in addition to the appointment of delegates to the National convention, also put in the field a ticket for State officers headed by Shelby M. Cullom for Governor, and Andrew Shuman, editor of the Chicago Journal, for Lieutenant-governor. The delegates to Cincinnati received no instructions, but are understood to be largely for Blaine. The Missouri convention elected a delegation said to consist as follows: Blaine, 13; Morton, 9; Bristow, 5; Hayes, 2; and Conkling, 1. The Minnesota delegation consists largely of Blaine men, but the convention refused to instruct, or direct the delegates to vote as a unit. Nebraska instructed her delegates to vote for Blaine. New Hampshire expressed no Presidential preference, and the delegates were left uninstructed. The sentiment of the Kansas convention was strongly for Blaine, but the delegates were left untrammeled. Dakota Territory also sent an unpledged delegation to Cincinnati....The Michigan Democracy, in convention at Lansing last week, adopted a hard-money platform, and selected a delegation to St. Louis understood to be largely in favor of Tilden.

It is stated from Washington that an informal conference between some of the members of the Cabinet was held recently, to consider the propriety of any of them attending the Cincinnati convention, as one or two are anxious to do. The sentiment was decidedly adverse to any person holding such intimate relations with the President being in Cincinnati during the progress of the convention, and a mutual understanding was had that all should remain away, to prevent any criticism upon the administration of trying to influence the nomination.

William P. Frye has been nominated for Congress by the Republicans of the Second district of Maine.

The California Democrats indorse and compliment Tilden, but send their delegates without instructions....The Kentucky Democrats send an unpledged delegation to St. Louis, though they are uninstructed to vote as a unit.

....The latest estimate in Washington gives Mr. Blaine a send-off of 362 votes, or fifteen less than a majority of the convention. His friends are more confident than ever before, and regard his nomination as assured almost beyond a doubt.

FOREIGN.

Sir Samuel Buckley, a member of the British Parliament and a large Manchester manufacturer, has failed for $2,500,000....A cable dispatch says the refusal of the British Government to adhere to the memorandum of the Berlin conference, is felt as a serious disappointment....Matamoras has been evacuated by the Mexican revolutionists, and the Government forces are in possession of the city....The Chancellor's medal at Cambridge University, England, has been awarded to an undergraduate named Dale, for a poem on "The Centenary of American Independence."....A Vienna dispatch says the mental condition of the Sultan causes great apprehension. He is subject to delusions, fearing that he will be buried alive or poisoned....A dispatch from Madrid says 30,000 troops, including three crack cavalry regiments, are under orders to sail for Cuba Sept. 1.

England has communicated to foreign representatives at London the text of her reply declining to agree to the conclusions of the Berlin conference. The point to which England principally objects is the decision of the powers that in case their friendly intervention should not prove pacific the six powers unitedly would have to consider other and more effective measures. England thinks this contains the principle of armed intervention, and is a menace to the liberty and independence of Turkey.

Disraeli has notified the British Parliament that the Fenian convicts need not hope for pardon at present....It is rumored that the Sultan of Turkey contemplates an early abdication....Russia has sent a large iron-clad fleet to Turkish waters.

Four of the Greek sailors who some time ago murdered the captain, mate and second officer of the ship Lennie, have been executed at London.

Spain is reported to be negotiating in the English money market for a large loan, at eight per cent. interest, to be guaranteed by the customs revenue of Cuba. The proceeds are to be expended in the island, in an attempt to stamp out the protracted insurrection....Many of the English cotton mills have commenced running on short time. It is stated that prices are lower than for the past thirty years, with two brief exceptions, and that the prospects are sorely discouraging....Reports have reached New York of a recent fight between the Spanish and rebels in Cuba, in which the former are said to have lost ten or fifteen hundred men.

Cable dispatches report another battle between the Turks and insurgents, in which the latter took the offensive, endeavoring to occupy an important range of hills. There is the usual conflict of reports as to the result.

FORTY-FOURTH CONGRESS.

Friday, May 19.—Senate.—The question of jurisdiction in the Belknap case was again debated in secret session, without arriving at a decision.... Very little legislative business, and that of an unimportant character, was transacted.

House.—Morrison offered a resolution for an adjournment on the 12th of June, but it was not acted on.... The committee which has been investigating the affairs of the Freedman's bank made a report, in which the management of that institution is arraigned in severe terms. It recommends the indictment and punishment of Henry D. Cooke, Lewis Clephane, Hallet Kilbourn, and J. O. Evans....The Naval Appropriation bill was under consideration....The bill confirming to Missouri all the lands therein selected as swamp and overflowed lands was passed....An effort was made to have inserted in the Record a personal allusion of Singleton to Garfield on Wednesday in the debate, which had been stricken out at the instance of Lamar. A motion of Randall to lay the matter on the table was carried.

Saturday, May 20.—Senate.—Morton, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, submitted a report in the case of Spencer (Ala.), exonerating him from the charge of bribery in securing his election to the Senate. The report was ordered printed....The Senate then went into secret session on the question of jurisdiction in the impeachment matter, and Boutwell spoke in opposition. Without arriving at a decision, the doors were reopened and the Senate adjourned.

House.—Cate (Wis.) rose to a personal explanation. He claimed that he had been elected fairly and honestly, and when he discovered his seat was to be contested, he had prepared a case and was ready to defeat the contestant. Before the case had been decided, however, the contestant died, and he denied the right of the Legislature to interfere in the matter, and he also denied the charges which had been made against him....The Speaker appointed Payne, Forney, Marsh, Wait and Harrison a committee to investigate the official conduct of the Clerk of the House....The House then went into Committee of the Whole on the Naval appropriation bill. A motion to reduce the appropriation from $6,250,000 to $5,750,000 was adopted....A resolution was adopted requiring all persons having business before the committees of the House to file with the Clerk the names of their authorized representatives or attorneys.

Monday, May 22.—Senate.—W. H. Barnum, Senator-elect from Connecticut, took the oath of office....Sherman presented the petition of B. M. Clapp, the Congressional printer, to the effect that he is an officer of the Senate, that great injustice has been done him by the Committee on Printing in the House of Representatives, and that no opportunity was given him for an explanation of the charges before that committee. Referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections....The question of jurisdiction in the impeachment matter was again debated in secret session, but no decision reached.

House.—A further extension of the Speaker's leave of absence was voted....The Committee on Rules reported that to retain Fitzhugh as Doorkeeper would bring the House into ridicule and contempt, and advised that the office be abolished and its duties transferred to the Sergeant-at-arms. A resolution to that effect was adopted....Tucker offered a resolution directing the President to inform the House whether he has received any official information in regard to violence and danger menacing American citizens in the Ottoman Empire, and whether any steps have been taken for the protection of such American citizens residing in the Ottoman Empire. Adopted....The resolution offered by Page declaring that the power to elect the President has never been delegated to the House of Representatives was tabled by a strict party vote.

Tuesday, May 23.—Senate.—Conkling, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported with amendments, the House joint resolution suggesting the intercession of the United States to secure the release of R. O'M. Condon, who is now confined in an English prison. Laid over....After reports on a number of bills of an unimportant character, consideration of the articles of impeachment was resumed with closed doors. No decision was reached.

House.—The House went into committee of the whole on the Naval Appropriation bill, the question being on the discontinuance of certain navy yards. After considerable debate a compromise was effected, whereby the sum of $85,000 was appropriated for the civil establishment of the various yards, and the Secretary of the Navy is directed to appoint a commission, consisting of the three highest officers of the navy, whose duty it shall be to report to the next session of Congress what navy yards can be dispensed with and abandoned. The committee then rose and reported the bill, which was passed....The Indian Appropriation bill was then taken up.

Wednesday, May 24.—Senate.—The Senate passed the House resolution directing steps to be taken for the release of Richard O'M. Condon, and then went into a court of impeachment, with closed doors. Before reaching a decision upon the pending question of jurisdiction, the doors were reopened and the Senate adjourned.

House.—Speaker Kerr was in the chair, seemingly improved in health....Harris (Va.), Chairman of the Committee on Elections, reported a resolution in the South Carolina contested election case declaring the sitting member, Joseph H. Rainey, to have been duly elected. Ordered printed and recommitted....The House then proceeded to consider the Louisiana contested case of Spencer vs. Morey, but no decision was reached....Wilson (Iowa) offered a resolution directing the Committee on Commerce to inquire into the alleged combination of leading railroads in the United States for the purpose of controlling the traffic. Adopted.

Thursday, May 25.—Senate.—Wright, from the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment, reported back the bill fixing the salary of the President at $25,000 per annum, together with the message of the President vetoing the same, and recommended that the bill be passed, notwithstanding the objection of the President. Placed on the calendar....Paddock, from the Committee on Postoffices and Postroads, reported, with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, a bill to restore the franking privilege. Placed on the calendar....The question of jurisdiction in the Belknap impeachment case was discussed in secret session.

House.—The Senate amendments to the bill authorizing the appointment of receivers of National banks were non-concurred in....The House then went into committee of the whole, with Springer in the chair, on the bill to revise and simplify existing laws imposing duties on imports, and to reduce taxation. Morrison, the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, addressed the committee in explanation of the bill.

THE "INDEPENDENTS."

National Convention at Indianapolis—Peter Cooper Nominated for President.

The National convention of the Independent party, recently held at Indianapolis, nominated Peter Cooper, of New York, for President, and Newton Booth, of California, for Vice-president. The following platform was adopted:

The Independent party is called into existence by the necessities of the people, whose industries are prostrated, whose labor is deprived of its just reward by a ruinous policy, which the Republican and Democratic parties refuse to change; and in view of the failure of these parties to furnish relief to the depressed industries of the country, thereby disappointing the just hopes and expectations of a suffering people, we declare our principles, and invite all independent and patriotic men to join our ranks in this movement for financial reform and industrial emancipation.

1. We demand the immediate and unconditional repeal of the Specie Resumption act of Jan. 14, 1875, and the rescue of our industries from the ruin and disaster resulting from its enforcement, and we call upon all patriotic men to organize in every Congressional district of the country with the view of electing Representatives to Congress who will carry out the wishes of the people in this regard, and stop the present suicidal and destructive policy of contraction.

2. We believe that a United States note, issued directly by the Government, convertible on demand into United States obligations bearing a less rate of interest, not exceeding one cent a day on each $100, and re-exchangeable for United States notes at par, will afford the best circulating medium ever devised. Such United States notes should be a full legal-tender for all purposes, except for the payment of such obligations as are by existing contracts expressly made payable in coin, and we hold that it is the duty of the Government to provide such a circulation for the nation to whom it belongs.

3. It is the paramount duty of the Government, in all its legislation, to keep in view the full development of all legitimate business—agricultural, mining, manufacturing and commercial.

4. We most earnestly protest against any further issue of gold-bonds for sale in foreign markets, by which we would be made, for a long period, hewers of wood and drawers of water to foreigners, especially as the American people would gladly and promptly take at par all the bonds which the Government may need to sell, provided they are made payable at the option of the holder, and bearing interest at 3 65-100 per cent. per annum, or even a lower rate.

5. We further protest against the sale of Government bonds for the purpose of purchasing silver to be used as a substitute for our more convenient and less fluctuating fractional currency, which, although well calculated to enrich the owners of silver mines, yet, in its operation, will still further oppress, in taxation, an already overburdened people.

A subsequent resolution against railroad subsidies was adopted.

THE GLORIOUS FOURTH.

A Proclamation by the President.

The following proclamation has been issued by the President of the United States:

Whereas, A joint resolution of the Senate and House of Representatives was duly approved on the 13th day of March last, which resolution is as follows:

Be it resolved, by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, that it be and is hereby recommended by the Senate and House of Representatives to the people of the several States that they assemble in their several counties or towns on the approaching centennial anniversary of our national independence, and that they cause to have delivered on such day an historical sketch of said county or town from its formation, and that a copy of said sketch may be filed in print or manuscript in the clerk's office of said county, and an additional copy in print or manuscript be filed in the office of the Librarian of Congress, to the intent that a complete record may thus be obtained of the progress of our institutions during the first centennial of their existence; and,

Whereas, It is deemed proper that such recommendation be brought to the notice and knowledge of the people of the United States: Now, therefore, I, Ulysses S. Grant, President of the United States, do hereby declare and make known the same in the hope that the object of such resolution may meet with the approval of the people of the United States, and that the proper steps may be taken to carry the same into effect.

Given under my hand, at the city of Washington, this 25th day of May, in the year of our Lord 1876, and of the independence of the United States the 100th. U. S. Grant.

By the President:
Hamilton Fish, Secretary of State.

Springs.

In the vicinity of the continents many springs are no doubt borne directly into the ocean, having no earthly history or career at all, like a child that dies on the day of its birth. Off the coast of Florida many of these submarine springs have been discovered. It is a pleasant conception, that of the unscientific folk, that the springs are fed directly by the sea, or the earth is full of veins and arteries that connect with the great reservoir of waters. But when science turns the conception over and makes the connection in the air—disclosing the great water main in the clouds, and that the mighty engine of the hydraulic system of nature is the sun, the fact becomes more poetical, does it not? This is one of the many cases where science, instead of curtailing the imagination, makes new and large demands upon it. The hills are great sponges that do not and cannot hold the water that is precipitated upon them, but that let it filter through at the bottom. This is the way the sea has robbed the earth of its salts, its phosphorus, its lime, and many other mineral elements. It is found that the oldest upheavals, those sections of the country that have been longest exposed to the leaching and washing of the rains, are poorest in those substances that go to the making of the osseous framework of man and of the animals. Wheat does not grow well there, and the men born and reared there are apt to have brittle bones and defective teeth. An important part of these men went down stream ages before they were born. The water of such sections is now soft and very pure, free from mineral substances, but not more wholesome on that account.

THE INDIAN COUNTRY.

Exciting News from the Agencies, the Black Hills, and Intermediate Points—Failure of Gen. Crook to Secure Ogallala Scouts—Murders in the Black Hills and Near Red Cloud Agency—Departure of Gen. Terry's Command.

Telegrams from Cheyenne convey the following interesting news: Gen. Crook's visit to Red Cloud Agency to secure the services of Ogallala scouts for field duty in the coming campaign against Sitting Bull has been unsuccessful. He returned to-day to Fort Laramie, accompanied by Col. Stanton and Lieut. Burke. The Indians were at first apparently willing to act as scouts and guides, but finally refused. On the way from the agency to Fort Laramie Gen. Crook narrowly escaped ambuscade. A short time after he left the agency, about fifteen miles out, Charles Clark, mail carrier on the Gilmore, Salisbury and Patrick road to Camp Robeson, was killed by the same party that laid in wait for Gen. Crook. Clark's remains were taken to the agency, and the Indians succeeded in running off four horses of the mail team.

A telegram was received here to-day from Col. Watt Patrick, announcing the murder of Jim Sanders, May 9, on Sand creek, by Indians. Sanders was one of Prof. Jenney's mining corps that prospected the Black Hills last season. Deceased leaves a family, who live in Cheyenne. Three other miners were also killed at the same time.

Gen. Crook left Fort Laramie this afternoon for Fort Fetterman, where the troops rendezvous a week from to-morrow. A part of the expedition at Fort Russell leaves to-morrow morning for the north.

Dispatches from Fort Fetterman furnish the following items:

A gentleman from Salt Lake arrived this morning from Custer City with excellent specimens of quartz. He came with a large party. They saw Indians, but were so watchful and well guarded that they lost no lives or stock. This party also report the northern country and creeks as being rich in minerals, and a good country for the poor man. Some provisions had got into Custer just before the party left, so the immediate wants of the town are satisfied.

Gen. Crook, Lieut. Bourke, Aid-de-Camp; Col. Stanton, Paymaster, and Major Ludington, Inspecting Officer, returned from the agencies to-day. The mail wagon that left here on the 15th for the agencies was attacked on the 16th ten miles from Red Cloud agency. Clark, the driver, was killed. The mail and wagon were left. Clark's body was taken into Red Cloud. This attack was evidently intended for Gen. Crook's party. They had passed out of the canon when the attack was made about fifteen minutes, when they met the mail wagon and spoke to the driver, who was killed a few minutes later. The Indians could only have been prevented from attacking the larger party by the escort and number of the party, or by the smallness of their own party.

Eighty lodges in all have left Red Cloud on the war path.

Two lodges left a few days ago, right in the face of the agent and in spite of his remonstrances. Two of the principal chiefs, No Water and Little Big Man, went with these guerrillas. All of the horses and mules belonging to the Government that were in charge of the agent have been run off. Gen. Crook had several talks with the Indians at Red Cloud and Spotted Tail agencies, but met with no success in engaging any as scouts. They positively refused.

No teams can pass from this post to the agencies without being guarded by troops. Matters look very bad. Gen. Crook leaves for Fetterman in the morning. The expedition will leave there about the 25th. Five companies of the Third and two of the Second Cavalry leave Fort Russell to-morrow. One company of the Second Cavalry and three companies of the Ninth Infantry leave here for Fetterman Saturday.

A gentleman has just arrived from the hills. Custer City is being abandoned, the miners either going to Deadwood or returning home. The Indians are increasing in numbers, and attack every train on the road. There is a succession of rifle-pits and fortifications all the way from here to the hills. Henry Lenze, from Iowa, was killed on Indian creek, May 9. He was three times buried and twice exhumed, and each time horribly mutilated, scalped, and dismembered. Eleven men have thus far been killed near Indian creek and Red canon.

A Story that Ought to Live Forever.

A story comes to us from the Western district on the details of which a Bret Harte or a Col. John Hay would found a poem. The other day a gang of laborers was employed stacking blocks of stone on a permanent way of the Great Western railroad, between Keynsham and Bristol. In fact, the operation of stone-stacking was carried on within a few yards of the Brislington tunnel. It was at the time of day when the most wonderful express train in the world, called "The Flying Dutchman" was expected, and, by some unlucky accident, a large block of stone rolled down the embankment and lodged on the railway line. At this instant the roar of the "Flying Dutchman" was heard in the tunnel. There was not a moment to be lost, so swiftly down the bank sped one of the brave navies to remove the stone and save hundreds of innocent lives or perish in the attempt. He had a wife and family at home, but he never thought of them. His life was in his hand, but he never thought of that. Down the steep embankment sped the brave fellow, nerved by the combined strength of Sisyphus and Atlas, to move the stone and save his fellow-creatures. On sped the Flying Dutchman! "Quick, for your life, Jim," shouted the companions on the bank. Alas, it was just too late; the stone was rolled out of the way, but the hero was cut to pieces by the fangs of the murderous train. This is as grand and noble a story as ever was told. It is finer than the tale of "Jim Bludso," the moral of whose story is told with such impetuous vigor and truth by the author of "Little Breeches:"

> He knowed his duty, a dead sure thing,
> And went for it thar and then;
> And Christ ain't a going to be too hard
> On a man that died for men!

If ever there was a brave fellow who laid down his life for the sake of his fellow-creatures it was this hero of the Brislington tunnel. His wife and children ought to be looked after, and have no doubt come under the consideration of the citizens of Bristol. But the story ought to live forever.—London Era.

The War in the East.

The tone of the press and the people in countries bordering on the struggle between Turkey and her provinces is becoming anxious and disturbed. Business in Austria is almost at a standstill. The Vienna journals call upon the Government and upon Russia to put an end to this contest or a great war will blaze forth. The Sclavonic race is becoming everywhere aroused and excited at the wrongs suffered by their compatriots at the hands of the Musselmans. The Sclavs of Hungary are pouring supplies and assistance in to aid those of Turkey. Millions of gulden in value have been thus forwarded and distributed. The Sclavs of Russia are full of indignation at the oppression and sufferings of their fellow-believers in Bosnia. The Government can hardly restrain the ardor of the people; and in private, great quantities of provisions and supplies are forwarded to the insurgents. The Sclavs in Montenegro—the Black Mountaineers—not content with sheltering thousands of refugees, are all in arms and ready to throw their weight, however small, into the balance of the struggle. Never having been conquered by all the power of the Ottoman Empire, they do not dread a contest with it in its present crippled condition; yet the whole population of the little principality is only some 120,000.

The position of Servia gives great anxiety. Her army is almost in readiness for a campaign. Peabody rifles and modern arms of precision are being introduced; loans have been placed, and the whole country, with its more than a million of inhabitants, seems about to throw itself into this struggle. The German press is full of rumors that Russia has thrown off disguise, and will now support the demands of the insurgents. There are certainly many indications of this. For her to lose, as Austria has done, her prestige as leader of the Southern Sclavs would be a fearful blunder; and all motives impel her to assist the rebellion against Turkey.

The recent massacre at Salonica is the first symptom of what has long been expected—a fanatical outbreak of the Mussulmans of the Ottoman Empire against the Christians, and the proclamation of a "Holy war." It was under this cry that the Turks in former ages swept over Asia and parts of Europe. The appeal will be uttered again, and for a time we do not doubt that the Turkish Empire will display considerable force and overwhelm the insurgents against its authority. But it will be the last dying flames in old burnt-out embers. Fanaticism will only hasten the dismemberment of the Empire. The Christian powers, under such a "Holy war," must interfere, and the fire of fanaticism in Russia will burn even more intensely in return. Mohammedanism has no vitality by which Turkey can be saved.—New York Times.

Aristocratic Clerks.

It is remarked of the female clerks in Washington departments that they might set up an aristocracy of their own if they chose. Widows or daughters of army and navy officers of the highest rank, daughters and granddaughters of former members of the Cabinet, Senators, Supreme court Justices and Presidents are to be found among them. The granddaughter of Thomas Jefferson has a clerkship. The daughter of Andrew Jackson Donald (the adopted son of Andrew Jackson) was born in the White House and educated in Berlin, and is now a clerk in the Postoffice department. The daughter of Chief Justice Taney is or was a clerk in some Government bureau, and so was the daughter of Robert J. Walker, formerly Secretary of the Treasury. These are but a few instances where names might be cited.

If You are Engaged to a Drinking Man Break It Off.

We tender our thanks to the Vermont judge who the other day, in pronouncing upon a divorce suit, laid down the opinion that when a woman marries a man of known intemperate habits, she takes her happiness, prosperity, and welfare in her own hands, and has no claim for riddance of him thereafter. We have great pity for the wife who is joined to an intemperate husband, but we tremble for the fate of the woman who marries an intemperate man. If these words reach the eye of any woman under engagement of marriage to such a man, we most solemnly appeal to her to pause before she imperil her well-being by accepting any such risk.—Congregationalist.

The Evening Hearthstone.

Gladly now we gather round it,
For the toiling day is done,
And the gay and solemn twilight
Follows down the golden sun.
Shadows lengthen on the pavement,
Stalk like giants through the gloom,
Wander past the dusty casement,
Creep around the fire-lit room.
Draw the curtain, close the shutters,
Place the slippers by the fire;
Though the rude wind loudly mutters,
What care we for wind-sprite's ire?

What care we for outward seeming?
Fickle fortune's frown or smile?
If around us love is beaming,
Love can human ills beguile.
'Neath the cottage roof and palace,
From the peasant to the king,
All are quaffing from life's chalice
Bubbles that enchantment bring.
Grates are glowing, music flowing,
From the lips we love the best;
Oh, the joy, the bliss of knowing
There are hearts whereon to rest.

Hearts that throb with eager gladness—
Hearts that echo to our own—
While grim care and haunting sadness
Mingle ne'er in look or tone.
Care may tread the halls of daylight,
Sadness haunt the midnight hour,
But the weird and witching twilight
Brings the glowing hearthstone's dower,
Altar of our holiest feelings,
Childhood's well-remembered shrine!
Spirit-yearnings—soul-revealings—
Wreaths immortal round thee twine!

Around the Farm.

It is said that eggs may be preserved for six months by dipping them in linseed oil, and so placing them in a layer of sand that they do not touch.

Alcohol is sure destruction to the mealy bug. With a small, soft brush give them a coat of alcohol, or let a drop fall upon a cluster of the bugs.—Moore's Rural.

The nutrient property of many of our most delicious fruits is less than one per cent., and yet the most perfect health and strength may be maintained upon a moderate diet of brown bread and fruit.—World of Science.

The Country Gentleman says that the Canadian Centennial Commission has made official requisition for space in the live stock yards at the Exposition, for the exhibition of 150 head of horses, 150 of neat cattle, 75 sheep, 75 swine, and 300 coops of poultry.

To protect horses and cattle against flies, take equal parts of lard, tar and flour of sulphur, melt the lard and tar together, stir in the sulphur and rub a small quantity about the neck, ears and flanks. The same remedy, it is said, will prove effective against ticks and lice.

An exchange newspaper says: "A horse was taken to a veterinary surgeon recently to be cured of a corn in the foot. In paring the corn the operator found a worm about three-eighths of an inch long, and one-sixteenth of an inch thick, and sharp at each end as a needle. One end was black and the other end white. The black end was nearest to the sole, and the white end was in the flesh. After removing the worm and burning with nitric acid the corn was entirely removed and the horse permanently cured of his lameness."

Mr. B. B. Groom, the well-known Kentucky breeder, is in Europe, and in a letter from Berlin to the Paris True Kentuckian expresses the opinion that there is a wide field on the continent of Europe for the introduction of Short Horns. There is to be seen there a tremendous scope of country owned by people of great wealth, and he thinks that the day is not far distant when the demand for Short Horns in Europe will be immense. At present the cattle of nearly the whole continent are of a very inferior quality.

The onion is a much more nutritious and healthy article of food than is generally supposed. It takes the place of meat with the peasantry of Southern Europe. As the English peasant takes his bread and cheese for dinner, so the Spanish and the Italian take onions with their farinaceous food, and derive more strength from these bulbs than their bulk would suggest. They are eaten not as a relish, but simply for nutrition. In that admirable book, "The Chemistry of Common Life," onions are spoken of as containing in their dry state from twenty-five to thirty per cent. of gluten, or muscle-forming material and the instincts of the laboring classes thus coincide with the deductions of science in the use of this cheap, but nutritious food.

There are various opinions held by farmers and gardeners in regard to the quantity of seed required for an acre of our common field crops, still the numerous tables published differ but slightly. The Maryland Farmer gives the following, which we think is not far out of the way, and will doubtless be useful to our readers:

Artichokes	4 to 6 bush.
Asparagus, in drills	6 to 8 lbs.
Beans, dwarf, in drills	1 to 1½ bush.
Beans, pole, in hills	10 to 12 qts.
Beets, in drills	5 to 6 lbs.
Buckwheat	1 to 1½ bush.
Barley	1½ to 2 bush.

About the House.

When two pieces of sugar are rubbed together in the dark, a sort of electrical phosphorescence may be observed, due probably to the friction of the particles.

Housekeepers and others are much troubled to keep their dried fruit free from worms. A contemporary says that a handful of sassafras bark sprinkled through a bushel of fruit is a preventive from this pest.

Jumbles Without Eggs.—One cup of lard or butter, two cups of sugar, one-half teaspoonful of soda, one teaspoonful cream tartar, one cup milk; flour enough to roll; flavor to taste; roll and bake in tins in a hot oven.

Ginger Cookies.—One cup of sugar, one cup of molasses, one cup of lard, two-thirds cup of boiling water, one egg, one teaspoonful cream tartar, one tablespoonful ginger, one tablespoonful soda, and one teaspoonful of salt.

Jelly Roll.—Three eggs, one cup of sugar, one teaspoonful of cream tartar, one-half teaspoonful of soda, one cup of flour; pour it thin into a baking-pan; bake slowly; spread jelly over it, and roll it up. Wrap in a cloth.

Mutton Cutlets.—Trim off all superfluous fat from each cutlet, dip them in an egg beaten up with a little oil, some pepper and salt, then cover them with bread crumbs, and let them rest for a couple of hours. Fry them in plenty of butter or lard to a light brown color. Arrange them in a circle on a dish, and pour some tomato sauce in the center.

The following is a good recipe for making apple butter: Pare, quarter and core one-half bushel of sour apples. Put them on to cook, with water enough to cook them, until they become soft. Then add two quarts of molasses, one quart of sugar, one quart of sweet cider or one-half pint of boiled cider, one tablespoonful each of ground cinnamon, cloves and alspice; cook three hours, stirring it continually. This makes an excellent sauce, and if well cooked will keep the year round. For a larger quantity it will require more cooking.

Potatoes lose their strength when the starch they contain is wasted by sprouting, and on this account they should be spread thin on a cool floor and frequently turned to check vegetation. At this season they may be improved for table by soaking them for a few hours in cold water and putting them into hot water to boil, without salt; then, when they are tender nearly all the way through, pour the water off and refill the saucepan with cold water. Put in salt and boil till they are quite done, drain off the water and cover as tightly as possible and set on the back of the stove or range to steam, lifting the cover for an instant once or twice. Serve hot.

A Young Lady Wills Her Body to the Surgeons.

A singular case has been developed at the Maryland University hospital. A young woman of intelligence and respectably connected, who been treated for an incurable abdominal affection, requests that after death her body be dissected for the benefit of science. In a letter to Resident Physician Ashby, she says: "As my death must speedily result from causes which have baffled science and confused the best medical minds, I desire that you shall perform upon my body, after death, an examination, and ascertain what it is that has terminated my life. I request that such examination shall be made privately and respectfully by yourself and a few of your medical students and medical friends. I have furthermore urged my parents and friends to allow such an examination, and to inform you at once as to my death in case of such an event, since I shall go to my home from the hospital to pass the remainder of my days. A post-mortem examination can do me no possible harm, and it may benefit science, and through it some other unfortunate affected like myself. Moreover, I desire to express in this manner the gratitude I feel to the many medical men who have labored for my relief. Lastly, it is a duty I owe my sex and my God." She will leave the hospital and return to her home in the city, and in the event of her death her request will be complied with by the physicians named in her will.—Baltimore American.

Funerals in 1776.

Funerals touched weddings at the point of feasting, and were often very expensive, showy, and pompous occasions. In some parts of the country, especially among the Dutch of Long Island and New York, it was the custom for a young man to lay by his earnings after coming of age until a sufficient sum had accumulated to provide for him a "respectable" funeral when he should come to die. Oftentimes the young burgher would reserve half of the portion of wine which he had liberally laid in for his marriage, to be used at the funeral of himself or his wife. Special invitations were sent out for funerals as for parties. The clergymen, pall-bearers, and physicians attending, were provided with scarfs and gloves and sometimes each with a mourning ring; while the feast which followed the interment at the house of the relatives of the deceased, elaborate with cold roast meats, wines, liquors, and pipes, was not unfrequently an occasion of coarse excesses, sometimes descending into hilarious and noisy demonstrations. A "respectable" funeral of this discription might cost, perhaps, a thousand dollars; while the funeral of the first wife of Hon. Stephen Van Rensselaer is said to have cost not less than $20,000.—Edward Abbott's "Revolutionary Times."

County Nomenclature.

Of the 1,141 counties in the United States, more are named after Washington than any other President of the United States, the number being 29. The names of the other Presidents represented by counties occur as follows: Jefferson, 23; Jackson, 21; Madison, 19; Monroe, 18; Lincoln, 17; Grant and Polk, 12 each; Johnson, 11; Harrison, 9; Adams, 8; Taylor, 7; Van Buren, 4; Pierce, 4; Buchanan, 3; and Fillmore and Tyler, 2 each. In many cases, however, in the above list counties were not named after the Presidents, but the selection of a name was influenced by local considerations. There are 22 counties named after Franklin, 20 after Colfax, 17 after Marion, 2 after Fremont, 3 after Greeley, 1 after Hendricks, 8 after Benton and Boone, 9 after Cass, Marshall and Putnam, 14 after Carroll, 11 after Douglas, and 18 after Montgomery. The names of almost all of the revolutionary heroes except Arnold are represented in the list.

A BRIDEGROOM'S DECEPTION.

He Pretends to be Deaf and Dumb, and Proves to be Married and in the Possession of All His Faculties.

[From the Cohoes (N. Y.) Eagle.]

Van Ranken's Corners, Watervliet, comes to the front with a sensation. Some years ago a well-dressed, prepossessing young man, who introduced himself as a Mr. Avery, went to that village and registered at the hotel. He was a handsome appearing young man, and never was known to utter an oath or a profane word. In short, he was deaf and dumb, a fact that did not prevent him from playing the agreeable or making love in the most orthodox fashion to the reigning belles of that region. He soon established quite a reputation as a lady-killer among the fair demoiselles, and what soft things he was unable to say with his tongue he uttered but too eloquently with his expressive eyes. Cupid smiled upon his endeavors, and his love-making at length culminated in his leading to the altar one of the loveliest of the Corners' fair daughters, and—what was more to the point and to our story—an heiress in her own right to a considerable amount of money. Not a response did he respond while the ceremony was being performed, nor did he even intimate that he could talk until he had taken a position on the dancing floor at the grand ball given in their honor, when he betrayed the fact that he had been acting a lie, and could speak and hear as well as the best of them. His new made bride was only too glad to discover an additional charm in her heart's chosen one, and her love for him only strengthened with the discovery. He managed in some way to explain his almost unaccountable actions, and satisfied her relatives with some plausible story of a vow binding him to silence until a given time—his marriage. The newly wedded pair soon settled down to the humdrum routine of practical married life, and Mr. and Mrs. Avery were the model of connubial bliss. With his wife's money the model husband bought a farm, near Morrisville, and was to a degree prosperous and thriving. Two children were born unto the pair, and they were gliding down life's fitful stream a staid, steady couple, beloved of each other and respected by their neighbors.

And now comes the sequel. About three weeks ago Mr. Avery was taken ill, sick unto death we might say, and his family and friends gathered around his bedside to hear his last words and see him pass over to the golden shore. He struggled hard with the grim monster death, and piteously besought the physicians to afford him relief, and save him to his family. All the aid that human means could devise was extended to him, but without effect, and he was informed that his end was near. Then it was that he told the story of his life. With choked utterance and tear-filled eyes he admitted that he had deceived his trusting wife, his confiding friends, and had been living a false and untrue life. His right name, he said, was Ziegler, and he already had a wife and three children when he was married at Van Ranken's Corner under the name of Avery. He gave his first wife's address, and asked that she might be telegraphed and some atonement made to her for the neglect and suffering he had caused her. He said he was a Major in a Connecticut regiment, had served with distinction during the late war, and had been honorably mustered out as a Brevet-Colonel. He gave no reason why he had deserted his wife and little ones, and was prevented by weakness from explaining his freak of playing the mute. He soon after died and was buried with all honors. In due course of time his first wife arrived, and, establishing her identity, took evidence of her husband's death. She didn't make much of a to-do about the matter, nor did she seem heart-broken at his demise. She was very calm about the occurrence, and explained that she was more desirous of procuring the evidence of his death and securing a pension of $3,000 that was in some way due to him from the Government than of recalling him to life. After having attained her object she quietly departed, leaving her successor in peaceable possession of what of the world's goods had been accumulated from the capital advanced at her marriage with Avery.

Difficulty in Getting Married.

A couple in Kingston, who undertook to get married some time since, went, accompanied by the bridesmaid and groomsman, to a church, and were ushered into the sacred edifice and escorted to the altar by the sexton, who, however, got the parties rather mixed up, stationing the bridesmaid next to the bridegroom, and the bride and groomsman in corresponding wrong places. The clergyman, not noticeing the mistake, went on with the ceremony, and began marrying the bridesmaid to the bridegroom, when the bride served an "injunction" on him by exclaiming that she was the marrying party.

The mistake having been remedied, the cleryman made another attempt, and the performance went smoothly along until it came for the bridegroom to produce the ring, which was essential to the completion of the ceremony. But when that gentleman felt in his vest pocket, it wasn't there; in the other, not there; in the trousers pocket, not there; and then he felt to the bottom of the remaining pocket, and finally exclaimed: "Well, sure, there is a hole in my pocket, and the ring has slipped down into my boot."

And the only way to finish the ceremony was for the bridegroom to sit down, pull off his boot, take the ring, pull on his boot, and put the ring where it ought to have gone, and walk out with his bride, all of which he did.—National Baptist.

The Deadly Dynamite.

Late English files bring accounts of a terrible dynamite explosion in Wales, which surpasses in horror anything since the Bremerhaven affair. The occurrence took place on April 21 in a railway tunnel in process of construction at Cymmer, near Maesty, Wales. The tunnel was to be 1,600 yards in length, and operations were carried on night and day. The night gang were at work when the explosion took place. There were thirty men employed at the time, and of these thirteen were killed outright, and their bodies found in a horribly mutilated condition. In the dynamite box was a day's store of the explosive material—about 200 pounds—and also several pounds of gun cotton and a quantity of caps. This magazine was located about 250 yards from the mouth of the tunnel, and midway between the mouth and the terminus of the excavations already made. The explosion shattered a space in the tunnel sixty yards in area, and the only surprise is that the entire gang, instead of thirteen, should not have been killed outright.

A Novel Wager.

A drove of thirty-six mustangs arrived at Jersey City, on April 18, in charge of six California rancheros. Many of the animals were unbroken, and were driven out of the cars in which they had been transported like sheep. None of the inquiries made in relation to them developed any information in regard to their ownership or purpose here, and for a time an impression prevailed that they were intended for the use of Mr. Bennett's Polo Club. They had been shipped from Visalia, Cal., on March 23, and had been consigned to the Baltimore and Ohio railroad here. Application was made to the office of the Baltimore and Ohio company for information, but the reporter was informed that none would be imparted—at least not for some days. This was, however, explained yesterday. On March 1 a conversation upon the comparative merits of California native and blooded stock, between a well-known New Yorker and an old Californian, resulted in a heavy wager for a race against time, to take place within ninety days after March 2, and on a track not further than 100 miles from New York. The amounts were $25,000 against $15,000. The conditions of the race were as follows: "The animals to be used were the ordinary grass-fed native horses, or mustangs, of California, picked up out of the stock-yards without selection. The race was to be run in relays, the entire distance ridden by one man, and not more than thirty horses were to be used. The feat to be performed was the same as that achieved by N. H. Mowery, on August 2, 1868, when, at San Francisco, he rode 300 miles upon relays of mustangs, thirty in number, within fourteen hours and nine minutes. The animals were to be ridden in the California style, with Mexican saddle, Spanish bit, and free rein. The horses are being exercised and broken at their new home, while the principals in the race are making the final preparations. The affair has been kept as secret as possible, neither of the parties to the wager being sporting men.—New York Times.

Railroad Rates.

Another move in the game of chess now being played between the various Eastern railroads was made yesterday. The New York Central ordered a further reduction in the rates on fourth class freights, making them twenty cents per 100 pounds from Chicago to New York, and twenty-five cents to Boston. This is a reduction of two and one-half cents per 100 pounds. Heretofore the charge on grain has been from two and one-half to five cents lower than fourth-class freights, but by this last move grain and fourth-class freights are placed on the same footing, twenty cents being the current rate on the former article. What the next move will be is hard to tell. It is hardly probable that another reduction in freight rates will be made, as those now charged are lower than they have ever been.

Some think a reduction in passenger rates will be made soon. This is, however, doubtful at present. It was the intention to make a reduction this week, but after reflection it was decided not to be too hasty regarding this matter. If a reduction in fares does not take place within the next two weeks none will be made at all. The reason the railroads are so reluctant to reduce passenger rates at present is on account of the Centennial business, from which they mean to reap some profit if possible.

The worst sufferers from the present railroad war are, next to the vessel-owners, the elevator men in this city. Most of the grain now shipped goes by railroad, and does not stop in Chicago at all. The elevators expected to do an immense business this spring, and instead of this they are almost idle. There are, however, very few to extend them any sympathy. They are merely reaping what they sowed last winter.—Chicago Tribune.

His Dying Message.

A single shot followed by a loud shriek told us that one of my best men (Bradley) was hurt. He proclaimed his agony with a loud voice, turned over on his back and commenced kicking so vigorously that the surgeon had difficulty in getting near him.

"Poor fellow!" said the doctor, "shot in the bladder. I am afraid it is fatal."

"Oh, my God," said Bradley, "am I a dead man?"

"Keep up your spirits, my boy, never say die," said Capt. Johnson, kneeling kindly over him.

"Doctor," asked the wounded soldier, feebly," "will you write to my mother that I died bravely, doing my duty, with my face to the foe, and that I thought of her when I was dying?"

"Yes," said the doctor, with dim eyes and a husky voice, "I will write to her and tell her, too——"

But suddenly springing to his feet, with an indignant voice, he said:

"Why, confound it, man, you're not hurt a bit. It is only your canteen that is shot. Get up, will you!"

Bradley raised up slowly, felt himself all over, and with an exceedingly foolish countenance crawled back to his position, amid the uproarious laughter of his regiment. For months after that, on the march, in the camp, and sometimes in the night, you might hear a voice in one direction demanding, "What shall I tell your mother?" and perhaps half a dozen responses would be heard, "Tell her I died with my face to the foe," and then Bradley would come out and search for the man who said it. He seldom found him, but when he did there was certain to be a fight.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

A New Yorker suggests that young men and maidens who go to church to whisper and cackle and snigger and make fools of themselves should be placed in a black hole under the pulpit, as in the old days of the New England tithing-man.

Mrs. D. A. Bruin, of Indianapolis, finds herself in the possession of 500 acres of coal land in the Lehigh region for a ten-years' lease of which she has been offered $400,000. Quite a stylish wedding took place at Michigan City a few nights since. The high contracting parties were the lovely and accomplished Miss Allie Orr, of that city, and Mr. C. J. McPherson, of Paris, Ill., Superintendent of the telegraph lines of the Illinois Midland railroad. About 150 guests were present from Chicago, Grand Rapids, Kalamazoo, and elsewhere. The presents were numerous and costly.

Elisha Stoneburner and James Helser were quarreling, when a man named Kirkland attempted to stop the fighting. Stoneburner picked up a handspike and struck him on the back of the head killing him instantly. Stoneburner immediately fled. Officers are in pursuit, but have not found him yet.

The school apportionment has been made by Prof. Smart, Superintendent of Public Instruction. There are 679,230 children in the State, and the fund provided for the tuition will amount to $1,079,975.70. This is an increase of 12,000 children in enumeration, but a falling off in the amount of the fund owing to several causes. Returns from counties show only about 3,000 illiterate children, while the census of 1870 gave the State 27,000.

The Indianapolis Journal devotes a column to a centennial couple named Fruits, living in Ripley township, Montgomery county. Old Fruits is 113 years of age, and his wife ninety. Fruits was born in Maryland, and has led a stirring life. In his better days he stood six feet three inches, and weighed 225 pounds. He is cutting a new set of teeth, and fresh hair is growing on the bald spot. He was a soldier, a tanner, a distiller, and a farmer, and has used tobacco and whisky.

The Masonic Grand Lodge, in session at Indianapolis last week, reinstated a clause in the regulations forbidding Masons to use or sell intoxicating liquors, and forbidding subordinate lodges from receiving into membership any person using intoxicating liquors as a beverage.

At Xenia, last Wednesday evening, George W. Shinn and George Litzenberger got into an altercation about Shinn's wife, which finally terminated by Shinn striking Litzenberger with a knife in the groin, severing a large artery, by which he bled to death in a few minutes. Shinn is now in custody. Both parties are desperate characters, and were drunk at the time. Litzenberger was the proprietor of a saloon, and was the same man who attempted the life of one Lee here two years ago by shooting him five times. Shinn claims to have killed Litzenberger in self-defense.

Last Sunday week eight children, whose ages range from fifteen years down to eight, got into an old, leaky skiff in the Ohio river, a short distance from Vevay, and started out for a ride. When in the middle of the river they discovered that the skiff was rapidly filling with water, and they immediately attempted to reach the shore, shrieking for aid. The skiff soon went down. A gentleman on the Kentucky shore jumped into a small boat and attempted to rescue the children, but before he could reach them five of them, all children of Charles Irwin, were drowned. One of the rescued was so badly frightened that for some time fears were entertained that he would not live.

Rockport Journal: A young lady of this town, who was preparing for a journey, had a dress made for the occasion, and as the time for departure approached, she was considerably annoyed lest it should not be done in time. The dress came in due time, but there was something about it that did not exactly suit her, and the matter still burdened her mind. The evening previous to her intended departure she put the dress away, and tried to dismiss the matter from her mind, but does not seem to have succeeded. When she rose the following morning she found her dress ripped apart, not a seam of the whole garment remaining sewed, and not a cut or tear in the material. As no one had access to it but herself, she was forced to conclude that she had risen in her sleep and ripped it apart.

Woolen, of Marion; Assistant Secretary, G. W. Burton, of Lawrence; Treasurer, L. C. Walker, of Marion; Librarian, J. R. Featherstone, of Marion. Delegates were elected to the American Medical Association and to the National Medical Congress which meets in Philadelphia in September. Dr. J. R. Beck gave notice that at the next meeting he would offer an amendment to the constitution providing that the membership of the society shall consist of white males only, in accordance with the usages of the American Medical Association. Dr. Helm, from the Committee on the Insane, reported verbally, recommending that this society ask the Legislature to put the management of all insane persons in the hands of a State Commission of Lunacy. The report was accepted, and the Committee continued. The society then adjourned.

A letter from Rome City tells the following story of two men who traded wives: "Dan Gibes, of this place, let a patch of ground adjoining his residence to a Mr. Peck, to till on shares, Mr. Gibes wishing to follow his occupation of peddling through the country with a team. While Dan was nearing his home, last Saturday evening, Peck met him and rode home with him. While at the supper table, Peck says to Dan: 'How will you trade wives?' 'I think my wife is worth the most,' said Dan, 'and should want some boot.' 'I will give you my watch to boot,' said Peck, and handed it to him. Dan said: 'This watch is mine then?' 'Yes,' said Peck, 'and I will be after the woman in the morning,' and left. Dan thought no more of it until the next morning. When he rose he found Peck there after the woman, and they were packing her things for a start, and did start off on foot together, Dan all the time claiming he was only in fun, and he is in fun yet, for the two have gone to parts unknown, and Dan's wife that he traded for has left, and don't propose to fulfill the contract."

The other night, at Kokomo, while the guard was asleep, a boa constrictor seven feet long escaped from the side show of Sells Bros.' circus. Its escape was not noticed, and the side-show drove to Peru. Early the next morning one of the many boys who visited the grounds to pick up lost trinkets discovered his snakeship in a small pool of water hissing violently. The boy seized a club and beat it until he thought it quite dead, and then he took it to the high school, to Prof. McClain's class in natural sciences. During the afternoon the snake revived, and the Professor congratulated himself on securing such a rare specimen, and a live one at that. But his anticipations were blasted when one of the proprietors of the show arrived in the evening from Peru and proved his ownership to the coveted prize. The snake was given up and taken to the Kokomo house to await transportation. Here it was stolen by some boys, who returned it, but too late for shipment on the evening train. In the morning, however, the much-worried showman got away with his snake, which cost him a cool $160 only about two months ago.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C. May 28, 1876.

DEAR COURIER—Chimes are pealing, Sabbath bells are ringing, and many are hastening to the sanctuary, prompted by a thousand different motives. Divesting myself of all selfishness, I will endeavor to interest you by such odds and ends as I have at command. The session is drawing to a close, work is accumulating and I do not have time during the week to prepare my weekly contribution.

Extensive preparations are being made for "Memorial day" next Tuesday. I don't object to having a holiday—Americans have too few days for recreation—still one wants a decent excuse for one. Memorial day affords an opportunity for a lot of people to gain notoriety by forming themselves into committees, (that great desire of the American heart) gives a second-class orator a chance to make a buncombe speech; money is collected from Government clerks who have hard work to buy shoes for their children, but who have to give on patriotic principles, a sum to buy flowers, which articles are after all mostly donated,) to lay on the "soldiers' graves." This sounds nice and is very pretty and romantic; still the romance and beauty is rubbed off when we think that a number of those soldiers' widows are in this city not able to obtain employment sufficient to supply their necessary wants, their children wanting clothes and education.

If every soldier on whose grave is laid a lot of perishable flowers (that are stolen as soon as the crowd leaves) could speak, he would tell the patriotic strewers how much more respect they would show to his memory by giving the cost to his widow and orphen children. I have known people who have paid from fifteen to twenty-five dollars for a carriage to the "patriotic" in, on memorial day. Let me ask any one who has that amount, or half of it, to spend in that way, to find some poor woman whose husband gave his life for his country, and give the money to her. It will buy more happiness and plant a flower of gratitude that will never die, and do more good than spending it in a bit of sentimentality. People do not realize how many hearts could be made happy by a little sound judgment in disposing of money that they litterly pitch away.

We have been enjoying an explosion at the Capitol. It occured on the Senate side, and was caused by the accumulation of gas. Every one knows that the mausoleum is the Government gas-house where the superfluity of gas is let off for the enlightening of the country, still it has always been considered safe enough to strike a match. A gas pipe got to leaking in the basement. One of the employees went into the room to light the burner to see where it was. In a flash the door was blown from its hinges, one man was killed and another seriously injured.

One member of the Senate whose name I will not give, as he is a hilarious candidate for the Presidency, exclaimed, "I knew that d—d House would blow us up before they got through," evidently thinking that the Democratic House of Representatives had gotten up a sort of Guy Fawkes arrangement.

Speaking of candidates for the Administration chair, reminds me that the subject is getting to be one that is wearing on the brain. I have no idea the judicial Conkling will be the coming man. He never has been popular with the mass of his own constituents. His arrogance and conceit has been the theme of every one for years. His money and family connections elected him as representative to Congress, and afterwards, because no better man could be found from his district, he was sent to the Senate.

Blaine is going into the contest the strongest; but "he laughs loudest who laughs last," and the man who goes in the strongest is apt to come out the weakest.

I went to see a good Democrat, such as Thurman, Hendricks, Tilden or, Hancock, sitting up in that much-admired two-story, malaria-filled White House; still if we can't have what we want we must take what what we can get.

The supply of candidates is fully equal to the demand. It is great fun to see how polite Conkling, Blain and Morton are to each other; the cordiality with which they grasp each other's hand and inquire after the health of the other is wonderful. It is only equaled by two women kissing and calling each other "dear," while each is calling the other "hateful old thing" in her heart of hearts.

I heard a good story the other day on a Washington character, Judge Pump, as he is familiarly called. One day old Pump grew weary of the endless tongue of attorneys, and calling to a plaintiff, said huskly, "go over to the Hole in the Wall and bring me a drink of whisky."

The bailiff disappeared and reappeared and with an inch and a half of corn-juice in a glass enough for any christian man, but not a sufficiency for the judiciary system.

"Go back," trembled the judge, "go back and tell Hagerty to send me a drink—a drink of whisky.

The bailiff disappeared again and reappeared a second time with a tumbler brimming full.

"Ah! said the wearer of ermine, "that now is a drink. But what," wiping his lips with the cuff of his coat, "what did he say!"

"Oh, he didn't say anythin, your honor answered the bailiff, blushing.

"Oh! yas, he must have made some remark; now what did he say?"

Well, I don't like to tell you, sah, your honor."

"Go on and tell me exactly what he said," demanded old Pump.

"Well, sah, your honor, he said, 'I sent him a drink of whisky at first; I didn't known that the d—d old fool wanted to take a bath!'"

The latest affair of general comment here is the change in the Cabinet. It is construed as the administration's preference for Conkling. I hear a good deal of gropling among the Republicans. Morton feels slighted, and his efforts in the bloody shirt business are not appreciated. In fact Grant is averse to a campaign on the war issues, as he knows it is the veriest hypocracy.

It is bad enough to have the ensanguined linen waved in Congress for political ends. We suppose that it is a necessity Without that bloodstained garment O. P. Morton, John Logan and others would be divested of all clothing and that were indecent. So "wave Morton, all your linen wave;" we can stand it if the country can. But to intrude such in social intercourse and above all, to flaunt it in the pulpit is the worst of bad taste. We are reminded of this by an event that occurred the other night in a church where a number of prominent Southern men, members of the Senate and House sought it as a place of divine worship. They liked the minister. He is a man of ability goodness, but bad taste. On this occasion he pulled from under his Bible the bloody shirt, and for nearly an hour flaunted it in the gas-light. The poor Southern gentlemen, having a regard for the decencies of public service kept their seats but when relieved by the doxology garcefully withdrew from a place where the meek and forgiving Savior seemed to be unknown,

Judge Hoar, Republican member from Massachusetts one of the House managers of the Belknap impeachment case, spoke like a man before the Senate a few days ago, when he said: "My own

"My own public life has been a brief and insignificant one, extending little beyond the duration of a single term of senatorial office but in that brief period I have seen five judges of a high court of the United States driven from office by threats of impeachment for corruption of maladministration. I have heard the taunt from friendliest lips that when the United States presented herself in the East to take part with the civilized world in generous competition in the arts of life the only product of her institutions in which she surpassed all others beyond question was her corruption. I have seen in the State in the Union foremost in power and wealth four judges of her courts impeached for corruption, and the political administration of her chief city became a disgrace and a by-word throughout the world. I have seen the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs in the House now a distinguished member of this court, rise in this place and demand the expulsion of four of his associates for making sale of official privilege of selecting the youths to be educated at our great military school. When the greates railroad of the world, binding together the continent and uniting the two great seas which wash our shores, was finished I have seen our national triumph and exalting turned to bitterness and shame by the unanimous reports of three committees of Congress, two of the Houses and one here, that every step of that mighty enterprise had been taken in fraud. I have heard in highest places the shameless doctrine avowed by men grown old in public office that the true way by which power should gained in the republic is to bribe the people with the office created for their service, and the true end of selfish ambition and the true end of which it should be used when gained is the promotion of selfish ambition and the gratification of personal revenge. I heard that suspicion haunts the footsteps of the trusted companions of the President. These things have passed into history."

Reports on the Printing Bureau stealing, the District ring, and Schenk's Emma mine scandal have been made to to the House by the investigating committee, showing up a hideuos condition of public majority. Another Committee is now engaged in hunting up frauds in cotton claims, and the buring of bank notes in the Treasury Department.

In one item where seventy thousand dollars in fractional currency was reported burned and destroyed, has recently came to light. Employees who were in this department, at the time testify that this amount was not destroyed. Somebody got it, and how much more was disposed of in this way, the Lord and a few thieves only know. While the farmer is laboring in the heat of a boiling sun, while the mechanics faints and grows weary with that toil necessary to maintain his family, it must be consoling to reflect that hundreds here are enjoying every luxury without the moving a muscle in the direction of labor, men who should be the public servants, grown wealthy in a few years with the spoils of office, living of the fat of the land and looking down upon those who gave them their votes, as a very useful but important class. They expect you to repeat this again this year, and retain them in power, ease and luxury. No matter from what party, do we want such in office? Then the party that retains them should be held responsible. Look over the record and see to what extent the Republican party has furnished its rogues, and it will startle you to notice the encouragement they have been given by a manifest indifference to their crimes. The Doorkeeper of House was dismissed the other day by a vote of 80 to 18 for writing a foolish letter. As long as a party will thoroughly cleanse its own organization of incomplete dishonest men, there is hope. We firmly believe the Democracy will do this, and that there has been less scamps rewarded on their side than on the other The corruption of the administration can never be whipped out by the Radical party, as the meeting in New York the other day of once prominent Republicans would indicate, and hence lets have a change.

Democratic Congressional Convention.

In accordance with a resolution adopted at the Democratic Congressional Convention, two years ago, and in obedience to the wishes of the Democrats of this Congressional District, expressed at a meeting of said district at Indianapolis, April 18, 1876, the Democrats and Liberal Republicans of the 13th Congressional District, and all others opposed to President Grant's administration, are invited to meet in Mass Convention at Goshen, Tuesday, July 11th, 1876, at 1 oclock, to nominate a candidate for Congress, and unite earnestly in the coming important campaign.

Our district, that until two years ago was republican by a majority of more than 2,000, can be redeemed by a vigorous effort. A candid exposure of Grant's corrupt administration; a hearty espousal of the earnest efforts of the Democratic House of Representatives for reform and pure government, notwithstanding Republican opposition to the reduction of public expenditures, and their partisan and persistent attempts to check and discourage investigation of the criminal acts of government officers, and—in marked contrast to a blemished national government—the creditable administration of our state affairs under a pure and able Executive and other honest and competent Democratic state officers ought to secure to the liberal Democracy every county in the district.

Let there be such an outpouring of the people on July 11th as to convince our opponents that the 13th Congressional District of Indiana is no longer "reliably republican," but one of the probable democratic districts of the state.

The evidence of Judge Best and the bar generally was all in their favor, and the jury by their virdict virtually endorsed the same by rendering a verdict that was of no pecuniary benefit to the plaintiff.

Resident pastors of all denominations are expected to be in attendance

The Bryan Press expresses the sentiments of many of the farmers of clay lands, in this county, in the following: "It is our opinion that the wheat crop hereabouts is about the same this season as last—about half an average crop The fact is wheat is to much uncertain a crop in this section to make its culture profitable, taking the years as they come Stock raising promises to take the place of wheat growing on many of this class of farms.

Drainage.—We desire to awaken an interest among the farmers of the county on the subject of the thorough underdraining of their lands. The frequent failures in crops in this county leads us to believe that they are to some extent attributable to the insufficient drainage. If these farmers who have underdrained their farms will favor us with their system of drainage and how it effects crops or saves labor we will take pleasure in laying their experience before the public.

Sometime since a valuable horse, buggy and harness were stolen from George Clark, of Hudson, Steuben county. Several days ago Sheriff Meese, thinking he had information as to where he could find the property and thief, proceeded to Clio, Michigan, up in the pine region where he found them. The thief was a resident of that section, and prefering Jackson to Michigan City, as a place of residence, he went into court, plead guilty and received two years for the little indiscretion. The property was all returned to the owner. Sheriff Meese justly feels a little elated over the affair.

We have to record a painful occurance that took place last Sabbath. Rev. Mr. Welch having an appointment in the country was returning from the same when his horse stumbled and fell; throwing him over his head, and precipitating him on the ground with much force. His left arm was much paralized, and is still very painful. We are happy to announce that he is rapidly recovering and will be able to fill his appointments next Sabbath. His numerous friends will be glad to learn that he is improving rapidly.

The Circuit Court.

The May term of DeKalb Circuit Court opened at the county seat on Monday of last week, Judge Best presiding. During the week many judgments by default have been taken, upon complaints for debts; but there is a marked decrease in the number, compared with previous terms. Criminal buisness has been light, the following being a synopsis of the disposition of the causes on the docket: Jones, charged with larceny and out on his own recognizance, failed to appear; and McMullen charfed with contempt, also forgot the Court was in session. Aug. Hemley. of Butler, was assessed $5 and the costs, for allowing minors to play billiards; and Charles Mains paid $50 for the privilege of keeping a gambling house. The two cases against Cyrus Jackman in relation to listing his property for taxation, were dismissed, as was also the larceny case against A. Inman. The cases for disturbing religious meetings, against Quincy Fusselman and H. Hathaway, and the assault and battery case against Markle, were set for hearing on Monday next; and the assault and battery cases against Wm. Little, and the embezzlement case against H. H. Houser, are yet to be tried. As refered to elsewhere, Jacob Beck was convicted of violating the Sunday law in one case, and the other action was dismissed. Two civil cases, Chambers vs. Moore and Russell vs. Gonser, were tried. the jury finding for defendant in the first and for the plaintiff in the last.

On Monday J. A. Woodhull, Esq. of Angola, presided as Judge, and the cases between the Dekalb Bank and Mr. Langan were dicided. We believe that the result reached was that the Bank received Judgment for the amount it claimed, and Mr. Langan received $300 extra for salary during the latter portion of his service as cashier of the Bank. On Tuesday an effort, which will probably be successful, was being made to settle, in the case of Mrs. Rhorabaugh against the Ft. Wayne, Jackson & Saginaw road, and the Court then took up the complaint No 21, of Garver; vs Penfield.—[Waterloo Press.

The "Ligoner Banner" says last Friday morning two strangers came to town, —one a man of perhaps 25 years of age and the other a boy, claiming to be in his 17th year—Having in their possession a bay horse and light spring wagon. They left the wagon in the grove near the residence of G. W. Chapman, in the South part of town and took the horse to the livery stable of Silas Shobe, where he was put up and fed, the parties lounging about town until toward evening. At about four or five o'clock they took the horse from the stable, preparatory to leaving town. But it appears the two had quarreled over some of their "business" transactions and while in the grove hitching up the quarrel was renewed—the man refusing to allow the boy to accompany him, and the latter threatening to shoot the horse. The former then threatened the life of the boy, who came back to town and told Mr. Shobe that his comrade had stolen a horse in Ohio, which he had traded for the one now in their possession and what had just transpired between them. The man, thinking it safer perhaps to take the boy with him, was returning to town, also; but finding himself closely watched, he became alarmed, fearing the boy had "blowed" on him and leaving horse wagon and all, attempted to make his escape. He was overtaken in the alley near Esquire Banta's barn where he turned and demanded to know if they had a warrant for him. Mr. Hier replied that he had not, but had authority to take him without. Marshal Braden now took charge of the prisoner. He was informed of what the boy had reported; that his flight showed guilt and he might as well confess all. But for some time he remained sullen and indignantly refused to answer any questions whatever. Finally he agreed that if the authorities would waive prosecution for the shooting he had done, and the citizens guarantee that he would not be tried for that offense stating that he had done nothing else in the county for which he could be punished, then he would make a clean breast of it and confess all. The officers accepted his terms the prisoner to remain in custody until the matter was thoroughly ferreted out, and then to be turned over to the proper authorities for further proceedings. He said his name was Wm. Allen; that he was from Toledo; had lived there fifteen year; that in company with the boy who had come here with him, he left Toledo about six weeks ago; went to Detroit, remained several days and returned to Toledo; next went to Perrysburg Wood county, O., remained there a day or two and resolved to capture a horse which they saw in a pasture lot, the property of one Gilbert Beach. At about ten o'clock on the night of May 10th, they took the horse, secured a set of harness and blankets and hitched onto a buggy which they found in an alley. They went to Michigan traveling exclusively by night until they reached Coldwater They then went to Adrian where they bought some razors, spoons and penknives and went into the peddling business. At South Bend they met a man whom they had known, and bought of him a fresh invoice of knives, spoons, &c., supposed to have been stolen goods Traveling west from South Bend some seven or eight miles, they traded horses with a farmer and turned to come this way. At Elkhart they saw several noted thieves and burglars whom they knew in Toledo and who are known to the authorities there as bad men. They are traveling with the N. Y. Circus. Look out for them. Marshal Braden and Constable Hire accompanying him as far as Bryan, and has ere this turned them over to the proper authorities to be tried for horse stealing and where it is confidently hoped, they will be duly convicted and rewarded with a protracted term in the State prison as they richly deserve. And thus endeth the tragical sensation of the past week and strange enough, nobody was seriously hurt.

A good reputation in business affairs is of the first importance to any farmer, and especially to a young farmer. A reputation for being a grower of first-class fruit is worth as much, yea more, than the crop itself, if such a comparison is permissible. A farmer noted for growing fine fruit and for putting up nothing but fine fruit for the market is always in market at highest rates. Indeed, the market sets him and pays him a bounty for his care and honesty. A good reputation is a good thing. A farmer who grows fine wool and cleans in the most thorough manner, and offers nothing but fine wool, is known among all manufacturers through their agents and his product is worth a premium. His reputation makes him a market at his door.

"Last Wensday a man road a steer guided by a rope into Auburn. The appearance of a bovine so bestride soon drew together a large and amused crowd that would have done honor to a hand-organ artist. The boss of this bully rig said it was perhaps amusing to the crowd but after losing the mate to his ox and being forced to the necessity of doing his plowing with a heifer and the ox he had ridden and as through failure of crops—because of wet weather—a wife and eleven children were on the point of starvation, which caused him to ride as he had from Paulding county for a sack of meal the humor to him was not so apparent. This pitiful story started ex-Sheriff Richey on a "ten cent a head" charitable mission which soon resulted in the accumulation of a sufficient amount of the [illegible] that chinks to purchase a sack of flour. The bovine boss said he had not come to ask charity but would gratefully accept their assistance. After this he mounted into his saddle and went on his way rejoicing.

NO TIME LIKE THE OLD TIME.

BY OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES.

There is no time like the old time,
  When you and I were young,
When the buds of April blossomed,
  And the birds of spring-time sung.
The garden's brightest glories
  By summer suns are nursed,
But O, the sweet, sweet violets,
  The flowers that opened first!

There is no place like the old place,
  Where you and I were born,
Where we lifted first our eyelids,
  On the splendors of the morn,
From the milk-white breasts that warmed us,
  From the clinging arms that bore,
Where the dear eyes glistened o'er us
  That will look for us no more!

There is no friend like the old friend
  That shared our morning days,
No greeting like his welcome,
  No homage like his praise.
Fame is the scentless sunflower,
  With gaudy crown of gold;
But friendship is the breathing rose,
  With sweets in every fold.

There is no love like the old love
  That we courted in our pride;
Though our leaves are falling, falling,
  And we're fading side by side,
There are blossoms all around us,
  With the colors of our dawn,
And we live in borrowed sunshine
  When the light of day is gone.

There are no times like the old times—
  They shall never be forgot!
There is no place like the old place—
  Keep green the dear old spot!
There are no friends like our old friends—
  May heaven prolong their lives!
There are no loves like the old loves—
  God bless our loving wives!

MY GEORGIE.

I have been asked to tell the story; but, if I tell it at all, it must be in my own way. I'm an old woman now, and if I ramble and maunder at times, why, perhaps you would do the same if you were sixty years old. It wasn't necessary to see through a millstone to see that one of the girls loved him with her whole heart, while the other—but there! I have got into the middle of the story, and haven't told you the beginning yet.

There wasn't any great harm in Ida—I believe that thoroughly—but the child was too much of a kitten to know her own mind. Pretty? Oh, yes, very pretty, even to my old eyes; just the sort of beauty that old age likes, with plenty of light and color about it—great soft dark eyes, and heaps of dark tangled hair, and the bloom of the damask rose on her soft oval cheeks. She was a good little thing in the main, but fanciful and flighty and capricious as a will-o'-the-wisp, and with a whole storehouse of romance treasured up in her foolish little brain. It was really as good as a play to see that dainty, luxurious little creature sitting there in her silks and laces, talking about self-sacrifice and the pleasure of working and economizing for the man one loved. Work and economy, forsooth! and she knew about as much of either as a mollusk does of algebra. Not that I know what a mollusk is—heaven forbid!—but it seems to be the fashion now to talk the most of what you understand the least. Yes, Ida was a nice little thing, bright and good-natured, and generous in an impulsive, open-handed way; but, bless you! she had about as much power of loving in her as a kitten. She could like people and be fond of them, and all that sort of thing, as long as everything was smooth and pleasant; but at the first touch of adversity—puff! her little rush-light of love was out with a whiff, instead of burning up clearer and stronger and fiercer for the blast, as it ought to do if it were the right sort.

What is the use of being hard upon the child, though, for what she could no more help than she could the mole upon her cheek, which troubled her so? Love is a gift and a talent, like any other. Some people have it and some haven't, and whether it is a gift to be prayed for or not is a question my poor old brain cannot pretend to settle. I believe in it yet, old as I am, and I believe in insanity, but it's precious little I've seen of either the one or the other. They say we are all crazy, more or less, only in most people it never comes out very strong, and perhaps it's the same with love. I suppose most of us have more or less of the commodity lying loose about us ready to be squandered on anybody that comes along. People in general are satisfied to dribble it out, here a little and there a little, until it is all gone, and nobody the better for it—or the worse. Once in a while, though, you come across somebody who has hoarded up the whole stock, and kept it intact until the one comes along who claims it all. Is that the better way? I'm sure I can't tell. It all depends upon who comes in for it at the end.

Georgie was one of that kind, I think; a little mite of a creature, with none of Ida's brightness or bloom about her, but taking, in her way, too, with the look of quiet resolution about the square chin and firm little mouth, and the wistful, yearning spirit that seemed always peeping out of the blue-gray eyes. Soft brown hair, and a fair, quiet little face that could wake up and sparkle with life when anything stirred or amused her—that was Georgie. And both of the girls thought they loved him, though what there was about him that was so wonderfully attractive I never could see. A good-looking young fellow enough, tall and manly, with a brown mustache, and a clear frank look in his brown eyes. You see hundreds as good as he is every day, and what h ere was about him——Well, well, girls are mysteries, and very different from what they were when I was young. Then we didn't consider it proper to talk, or even think, about such things. We took the good the gods gave us in that line, and were thankful; or, if we didn't choose to take it, we went without, and never vexed our heads about any "might have beens." That's what I did, and I'm none the worse for it now. Perhaps, though, if Georgie's father——But that is all over and done with long ago. Sometimes I think, though, that that may be the reason I love the girl so well—better, yes, certainly better, than Ida, though she is my own niece.

But here I am maundering on about my own views and my own thoughts and my own feelings, and haven't told you who they all are yet. Ida, you see, is my niece—Ida Merton, my brother's only child. Georgie is Georgie Gresham, a distant connection of Ida's, who lives in the house, but supports herself by giving music lessons. Such a patient, plucky, indomitable little mite as she is, trudging out in all weathers, and coming back pale and tired, but with never a complaint from her firm little lips, and always with a bright smile and a cheerful word for "Aunt Jeanie," as she, too, calls me. I believe the child really does love me; and does Ida, only hers is a different sort of love. You feel that if you were away, Ida would love a stick, or a stone, or anything that might happen to be in your place; but Georgie would never forget you—never. The young man is Mark Drayton, and he is only a clerk in my brother's store; but, for all that, he is of good birth and breeding. The wheel of fortune has strange ups and downs, and he was glad enough of the place when Mr. Merton sought him out and offered it to him, in memory of early benefits which he had received from young Drayton's father. Neither of them had ever had any reason to repent the step, for Mark had proved to be steady and honorable, with flashes of what was almost like a genius for business, if there can be such a thing. He had risen steadily, until it was quite understood that next year he was to be a partner in the large wholesale and retail dry goods house of Merton & Co. All things considered, he would not have been such a bad match for Ida, only that I knew that the child did not really care about him, and there was Georgie breaking her proud, patient little heart for his sake, and nobody saw it but one old woman, who had been through it all herself and knew what it meant. It was hard enough for her sometimes, but she was not the kind to fret or bemoan herself.

Of course the young man was caught by Ida's witcheries, for the little puss was as fond of admiration as a cat is of sparrows, and spared no pains to fascinate him. I wonder that the two girls continued as good friends as they did; but I think Georgie saw that Ida was not to blame, and was only acting out her nature, in perfect ignorance of the deadly hurt which she was inflicting upon her friend. For though Georgie had told her of her long, long friendship with Mark Drayton when he was only a poor, struggling clerk, she had never told of the looks and words and ways with which he had won away her heart before either of them knew it. Not that the young man was dishonorable either. She had been his only friend in those days, you see. That was while her widowed mother was still living and Georgie was living with her. It was not until after her mother had died that the girl came to live in Mr. Merton's house. Sympathy and friendship are very sweet, and Georgie had been patient, tender and true, and the young man had learned to think of her as a sister, and perhaps to love her as something more, but it all seemed so hopeless that he never spoke. And then he met Ida, and was dazzled and bewitched by her, and so Georgie was eclipsed for awhile—only for awhile, I felt sure, if he and Ida could but be kept from committing themselves until both had had time to wake up from their foolish dream.

That evening, though, I began to fear that the rash young things would take matters into their own hands. Mark always did run about the house like a tame cat; there were few evenings that did not find them in our drawing room. No doubt it was very good for the young man, and kept him out of a great deal of mischief, but I could not help thinking sometimes that he was not the only one to be considered. That even Ida exerted all her witchery. Such a bright sparkling little puss she was when she chose! It was not what she said; that was well enough in its way, but neither remarkably wise or witty, but so enforced and pointed by droopings of the long lashes, and poutings of the red lips, and flashing of the dark eyes, and flutterings of the little white hands, that even an old woman like me couldn't help forgetting for awhile what nonsense the whole thing was, and be carried away and captivated and fascinated in spite of herself. And all the while my little Georgie sat there, with her pale face and her gentle, quite ways and her quaint little words, just the same as ever, for anything they could see. And I fancied now and then that there was a quick catching of her breath or a passing contraction of her pretty forehead—why, perhaps it was only my fancy. I tried to think so, at all events.

Presently they began to talk of the opera, and Ida declared with her pretty hands clasped, that she adored Nilsson. Didn't Mr. Drayton think she was just divine? And oh! what would she give to see her in "Faust"? She never had seen her in that, and was sure she must be a perfect Marguerite. Did Mr. Drayton know that that was the opera for to-morrow night, and perhaps that would be the last time it would be given?

And Ida stopped, with her hands still clasped and her eyes fixed on the young man. I declare I could have boxed her pretty pink ears. Georgie could not have done it; but then things that would have seemed forward and unmaidenly in other girls, in Ida seemed so simple and artless and unconscious that you could not be disgusted with her.

Of course there was nothing for Mr. Drayton to do but to say that he would be delighted to escort her. I caught one swift glance from Georgie's eyes, and then I remembered that he was to have taken her on that very evening to hear a celebrated pianist, who was setting the whole city wild; but Georgie did not speak. She was only a friend and a sister, and must learn to be quietly put aside when others claimed his services. Perhaps the young man's conscience smote him a little, for he was unusually gentle and attentive in his ways to Georgie that evening, and I heard him say,

"You know, Georgie, that he will be here for some time, and any night will do for him, but Nilsson may not appear as Marguerite again."

"Oh, yes, it is all right. I quite understand," said Georgie; and if his ear was not quick enough to detect the little quiver in her voice, nor his eye sharp enough to see the flutter of her lip, though my old eyes and ears could perceive both, whose fault was that?

Love is blind, they say; but a calm, friendly indifference is blinder than any mole.

I scarcely saw Georgie the next day, but Ida was in and out, bright and blithe as usual. When the evening came both the girls were in the drawing room. Ida was radiant. Her dress was of black silk, but all tricked off with soft, fine laces, with flecks of scarlet here and there. Scarlet fuchsias nodded in her hair and dropped at her dainty throat. Georgie looked like a pale shadow beside her, in her soft gray gown, unrelieved by a single dash of color, but, to my eyes, so sweet and fair in her grave, quiet composure.

Well, the evening crept slowly on, and Ida grew impatient, flashing hither and thither in her quick, restless way, while Georgie, half hidden in the shadow of the curtains, knitted on steadily at some piece of soft fleece work, apparently unmoved. The carriage had been waiting at the door for an hour, and still no sign of Mark.

Just as Ida was for the fortieth time appealing to us to know if it were not the strangest thing we ever heard of, and where in the world could he be, the door opened and Mr. Merton entered. A tall, fine-looking man was this brother of mine, with silver hair and clear blue eyes, and the port and bearing of a gentleman of the old school, with the polished courtesy of that by-gone class, too, and the dignified calm which scarce anything could ruffle. So it startled us to see a shadow on his face, which deepened after the quick glance which he cast around the room.

"What is the matter, brother Paul?" I asked; and both girls looked up.

"I am vexed and puzzled," was his reply—a most unusual thing for him. "I came in hoping against hope to find Mark Drayton here. You have seen nothing of him?"

Mark Drayton! Ida listened in earnest now, and even Georgie dropped her work.

"It is a most perplexing thing," he went on. "I would stake my life on the young fellow's truth and honor; yet what can have become of him?"

Become of him! A perfect hurricane of questions arose; only Georgie was silent as death in her obscure corner. As soon as Ida could be induced to listen and let the rest hear, brother Paul told his story.

How that in the morning a lady had entered the store, a lady regal in silks and laces, more regal in port and bearing, so brother Paul said, tall and fair, with great flashing hazel eyes, and hair of palest gold. How that this lady, after inspecting and lavishly ordering the richest and costliest goods, velvets, silks of every shade, laces—old point, Honiton, guipure, Mechline—"enough to dress you from head to foot, Ida"—had suddenly discovered that she had forgotten her purse and check-book. In sore perplexity she sent her card to Mr. Merton—Mrs. Launce D'Arleton was the name he bore—with a request for an interview. Explaining that she was obliged to leave town that afternoon, she begged him to send a trusty clerk in the carriage with her to receive and bring back the money.

"So," said brother Paul, in conclusion, "I asked Mark to go as a personal favor. It is hardly his business, but I thought I could trust him."

"Well, papa?" said Ida, as he paused.

"Well, that is all," said brother Paul.

"All, papa? But where is Mark?"

"Ah! that is the question. Since he entered the carriage with Mrs. D'Arleton, nothing has been seen of him. The sum was a large one, and whether he has yielded to the sudden temptation—but that is impossible. Yet foul play, the only alternative, seems equally impossible. I have set the police on the track, but I am utterly baffled and bewildered."

I cannot pretend to describe the scene that followed this announcement. I know that for a moment there was dead silence in the room. We were all, I think, too much shocked and stunned to speak. Ida still stood in the middle of the floor, with a face from which every vestige of color had fled. Then Georgie come forward, and, as if her movement had snapped the spell, the silence broke up suddenly—questions, surmises, doubts, suspicions, set aside as soon as formed, for none of us could really suspect of any evil-doing the young man whom we had known so long and so well. But all came back to the one horrible, unanswerable question, where could he be?

I can only tell the story from my own point of view, and there is no use in my trying to enter into the details of the police search, of the rewards offered, of the clews which they thought they had found, but which invariably led to nothing. Had the earth opened and swallowed Mark and that mysterious woman, they could not have disappeared more utterly. The detective system was a mystery past our comprehension, and we could do nothing but sit at home and wait, deluded with fresh hopes or sickened by fresh fears as day after day crept slowly on.

You understand that, apart from the horror of the mystery so suddenly thrust into our midst, my heart was wrung for Georgie, bearing her burden of anguish so patiently. Day by day her little face grew paler and thinner, and the wistful, yearning look deepened in her eyes, and her lips were more firmly set in their resolute line. But I knew that her dread was only of his death; I knew that no shadow of a doubt of his truth and honor had ever crossed her mind.

And how was it with Ida? The child, at first, was the most wretched of any of us, and yielded to her feelings without restraint. But when the first horrible shock was over—how shall I express it? I think the long misery of suspense bored her. She could never endure ennui, and, sad and shocking as it may be, there is a certain dreadful ennui in all protracted grief. She grew tired of it; tired of waiting and hoping and fearing; tired of our sad faces; tired, most of all, of the long strain of grief on her light, careless nature. So at last it was really a relief to her to open her ears to the rumors and suspicions which circulated among those who did not know Mark as we did. It justified her in casting aside the show of sadness, which had already ceased to be anything but a show, and when a doubt was once entertained, it was easy for it to become a settled, angry conviction.

Well, time passed on, as it always does, whether its foot falls on roses or on breaking hearts. We were all collected in the drawing-room. How well I remember the scene! The room was lighted only by the wood fire, which sent its fine flickers wavering over floor and ceiling. Georgie sat on a low ottoman. How thin her face looked as the bright lights and deep shadows chased each other across it! She was dressed in black, put on, perhaps, poor child! as a silent emblem of the sorrow that had almost died into hopelessness. Ida was at the other side of the room, talking to young Somerby, who had dropped in, just as she used to talk to Mark, with the same pretty gestures, the same arch inflections, the same soft, ringing laughter. How could she? But it was the child's nature. I dared not forget that, or I should have hated her for her fickleness and heartlessness.

Suddenly the door into the hall opened. And who stood there, a black figure sharply defined against the glare of light? For an instant we all sat mute and motionless, uncertain, I think, whether it was a ghost or not. For we had become so sure, Georgie and I, that he was dead, you see, though neither of us had breathed the suspicion to the other, nor would we have acknowledged it had we been taxed with it. For an instant we sat so, and then with a low cry of "Mark! oh, Mark! is it you at last?" Georgie sprang forward, her face all lighted up with eager joy and triumph.

But he? He scarcely noticed her—my poor little Georgie!—just took her hand mechanically as he peered into the shadows.

"Ida!" I exclaimed, sharply, for the child had never stirred, though she saw him well enough.

Then she came forward, slowly and reluctantly. I think she was frightened, for she hated tragedy with every fiber of her nature, and she had been living in the midst of it for two weeks, and now its culmination in bodily shape stood before her. She did not know what to do. The kitten had nothing in her nature to enable her to rise to the level of such a crisis as this. She could neither cast away her suspicions nor avow them boldly to his face. She just stood before him, with eyes half downcast, half averted, but with fear and suspicion and distrust written so legibly on every feature that the young man must have been blind indeed not to read that silent language. Not a word of welcome, not a question as to where he had been, nothing but that confused, blushing silence which the most easily deluded lover could never have mistaken for the timidity of love and joy. I think Mark was bewildered at first, but as he stood and gazed at her, gradually the meaning of it all grew plain to him, and his expression changed. I saw the pride and calm contempt slowly rise and overflow his face, as it were, as a wave may spread slowly over a flat when the tide comes in. There was no anger in his look, no resentment. He seemed only like one who wakens slowly from a pleasant dream. And then—then he turned to my Georgie at last, and over his face there came a glow and a light such as I had never seen there before, as he said, simply:

"But Georgie believed in me."

And she went to him and wept her heart away in his encircling arm, and I drew Ida softly away and left them. Young Somerby had had sense enough to take himself off before. So Georgie had won not much of a prize, after all, to my thinking; but if she was satisfied, that was all that was necessary.

Of course I was dying to hear Mark's story, but I had not the heart to intrude upon them then. When he did tell it at last, it seemed more like a crazy dream than a sober, matter-of-fact episode of the nineteenth century. When he got into the carriage with Mrs. D'Arleton, she, it seems, began to talk in so brilliant and fascinating a manner that he did not notice the direction in which they were driving until they stopped before a large building, which he recognized as the lunatic asylum. Requesting him to wait a few minutes, as she had business inside, she left him. Shortly after he was greeted politely by the doctor in charge, who came to the carriage, and, addressing him as Mr. D'Arleton, requested him to step out for a minute. Mark disclaimed the name, but for this Dr. Langley was prepared, as Mrs. D'Arleton had told him that her husband was the victim of a strange hallucination, believing himself a clerk in the house of Morton & Co., and giving his name as Mark Drayton. Recognizing the trap set for him, Mark by his own account, lost his head for the moment, knocked down one or two of the men who advanced to seize him, and conducted himself generally so like a lunatic that there was no room for doubt of Mrs. D'Arleton's story in any mind. Of course he was overpowered at last and taken into the building, catching a glimpse as he passed of Mrs. D'Arleton in an attitude of bitter and most becoming grief. She had taken the precaution to pay his board a month in advance, thus securing his detention long enough to allow her to escape with her booty. As time went on and he became calmer, his entreaties to be confronted with Mr. Merton, which at first had been treated as mere ravings, began to make more impression. At last Dr. Langley, meeting Mr. Merton accidentally, mentioned the circumstance, and the result, of course, was Mark's release.

So there is my story, and if it is not artistically handled, why, I am an old woman, as I told you, and not used to such things. To me the chief interest centered in Georgie, and if I have made her the principal figure, and rather slurred over Mark's adventures, it is partly for that reason and partly because, beyond the bare outline, we could not get much out of him. He had suffered too much, I suppose, during his incarceration to let his mind dwell upon it willingly. Mrs. D'Arleton was never traced; but whenever we take up a paper and read of a successful swindling operation, we look at each other and wonder, "What is she?"

Georgie and Mark are very happy, if we may judge by appearances, and I think we may. Ida has outgrown her suspicions, and Mark has forgiven her for them, but the old glamour has gone forever, which is very fortunate for all concerned. And if Ida and young Somerby should come to terms, why, I think it will be a very good thing, for there are no heights in the nature of either after which the other must strain in vain.

So my task is done, and now I can lay down my pen and take my rest by the hearth where we have sat, Georgie and I, so many times, and where we have both dreamed our dreams—I of a darkened past, she of a darkened future. We dream them no more; and if her future is bright, I see beyond and above a future for me which is bright with a brightness that earth can never give.—Harper's Magazine.

Don't Judge by Appearances.

A sharp trick that was, as told to us last evening, which occurred day before yesterday in a saloon in this city. We are told that the trick is an old one, introduced to this country from across the big pond. On the day in question a flashily dressed fellow entered the saloon referred to, called for a cock-tail, and then took a seat at a table, read the papers a while, and then fell asleep. Presently two men entered, who, after taking a drink, seated themselves at an adjoining table, and engaged in conversation about some property one was evidently trying to sell the other. In the course of a half hour there were some three or four other arrivals, when one of the first mentioned two gents addressed his friend in a voice that could be heard by all: "If I was that gent I wouldn't sleep in a saloon; it isn't quite safe with all that jewelry on his person." The sleeping gent had one of those heavy gold neck chains, with a massive slide, and, judging from that, he must have had a valuable gold watch attached to it. The other made answer, "Oh, I guess it's snide; or very likely he has only an oroide watch." And in a playful manner he proceeded to gently draw what ought to be the watch from the sleeper's pocket. This of course attracted the attention of the others in the bar-room, and one of them asked him if he was acquainted with the gentleman asleep. He answered, "No, but I want to see what time it is." In place of a watch it turned out to be a nicely polished piece of wood, made in the shape of a watch. When it was exposed to view of course there was a general laugh, which woke up the gentleman, and he was greeted on all sides with, "My friend, what time is it?" "Nice watch, that, you carry!" etc. Seeming not to understand their questions, he placed his hand over his pocket, and feeling that everything was all right, simply remarked, "Gentlemen, my watch has run down." This, of course, only renewed the laughter on the part of the crowd, when the gentleman who made the exposure offered to bet him $10 that there was not a watch-key in the city that would fit that watch of his. Another offered to bet $10 more that he didn't have a watch, when the gent indignantly said he did if he was not robbed while he slept, and that he would take that bet. While taking out his pocket book, two or three others offered to bet $10 more to $5 the same way. All the bets were very coolly taken, the money deposited in the hands of the very gentleman who extracted the wooden model from the sleeper's pocket, and then he was asked to show the watch. He very deliberately pulled out the piece of polished wood attached to his chain, and held it up to view. Just as all were getting ready to laugh again, and to claim their bets, he very coolly said: "Hold on, gentlemen, you haven't seen the watch as yet," and touching a spring in the side the model flew open, revealing as nice a little gold watch inside as you ever saw. As he turned and held out his hand for the stakes, which he stowed away in his pocket, he remarked that "it is always a losing game to judge by appearances." It is hardly necessary to say that the two gentlemen first referred to were accomplices with the owner of the watch in this clever little trick.—Davenport Democrat.

A Million Postage Stamps.

Several times there have been published stories to the effect that some good little boy (after the manner of the Sunday school books), animated by a noble ambition to distinguish himself, had undertaken to collect 1,000,000 defaced postage stamps, but usually these stories are discredited, and cynical people intimate that the statements are printed to cover design on the part of dishonest persons to collect large quantities of old stamps, and then by removing the canceling marks, dispose of them as new stamps to the innocent and unsuspecting. Here is a story, however, which is strictly true. Some time ago a young girl, a pupil in an up-town Sunday school, over which one of our dry goods princes presides as superintendent, received a promise from a wealthy gentleman, a patron of the school, that if she succeeded by July 1 in collecting 1,000,000 he would settle an annuity upon her sufficient to support her for life. She communicates this extraordinary promise to the aforesaid superintendent, who told her to get it in writing. She obtained the written promise, and now the superintendent is assisting her to procure the requisite number to obtain the annuity. He has already interested such firms as H. B. Claflin & Co., Peake, Opdyke & Co., Keane & Frayne, the Home Insurance Company, and others who receive a large number of letters, and already she has on hand nearly 400,000 old stamps. She had received over 20,000 from Claflin alone. Doubtless if any of your readers wish to assist in this laudable enterprise, contributions to either of the houses mentioned will find their way to the painstaking girl in question.—*New York Cor. Riding Camels.

Mounting the camel is not difficult, but it has some sweet surprises for the novice. The camel lies upon the ground with all his legs shut up under him like a jackknife. You seat yourself in the broad saddle, and cross your legs in front of the pommel. Before you are ready, something like a private earthquake begins under you. The camel raises his hind quarters suddenly, and throws you over upon his neck; and, before you recover from that he straightens up his knees and gives you a jerk over his tail; and, while you are not at all certain what has happened, he begins to move off with that dislocated walk which sets you into a see-saw motion, a weaving backward and forward in the capacious saddle.

Not having a hinged back fit for this movement, you lash the beast with your koorbash to make him change his gait. He is nothing loth to do it, and at once starts into a high trot, which sends you a foot into the air at every step, bobs you from side to side, drives your backbone into your brain, and makes castinets of your teeth. Capital exercise.

When you have enough of it you pull up, and humbly inquire what is the heathen method of riding a dromedary. It is simple enough. Shake the loose halter rope (he has neither bridle nor bit) against his neck as you swing a whip, and the animal at once swings into an easy pace; that is, a pretty easy pace, like that of a rocking-horse. But everything depends upon the camel.—Warner's Book on Egypt.

A GENTLEMAN stopping at a fruit stand and inquiring the price of some pineapples displayed was dissatisfied, and said so. The dealer replied that he didn't make any profit on the fruit, anyhow, keeping it merely for show. The possible purchaser then remarked that pineapples were not very good eating, and the dealer answered that pineapples were nice if they were only fixed rightly—sliced thin, soaked in sugar for a few hours, seasoned with lemon and nutmeg, and then taken in sherry wine. The only remark of the other man as he turned on his heel and walked away was: "Why, turnips would be good that way!"

It's a Boy.

One evening, recently, the friends of a married couple in Chillicothe, determined to give them a surprise party. To this end, twelve couples of young ladies and gentlemen, with well-filled baskets, made their appearance before the house about 9 o'clock. As they came up to the door, they saw the gentleman standing in the alleyway with his overcoat on, smoking a cigar, and the parlor was all lighted up. This struck them as rather singular, but the leader grabbed the door-knob, and they rushed hilariously in. The gas was burning brightly, and six dignified old ladies were sitting around the stove, looking as solemn as grand inquisitors.

"Oh, my! where's Mattie," shouted one exuberant young lady, sitting her basket on the piano.

"She's up stairs," said the old lady, looking over her spectacles with solemn acrimony.

"Let's have her down," screamed half a dozen girls in chorus as they made a break for the hall.

"Here, girls, girls, don't go up there!" and the old ladies made hasty attempts to check the proposed raid.

"Why, what on earth's the matter here, anyhow?" inquired the impatient darlings.

"Well, I believe it's a boy."

"Oh, let's go!" And that company of nice young men and women moved away like a soap-bubble in a hurricane, and the girls never stopped for beaux or basket, but stuffed their handkerchiefs in their mouths to hold their breath down till they were safe behind their own doors, and not a girl in the Fourth ward knows where Mattie lives.—*St. Joseph (Mo.) THE BIG SHOW.

THE NOBLE BRITON.

The prominence and perfection of the British exhibit are remarkable. It was the determination of our mother country to make such a show here as she has never before made outside her own limits, and she has nobly carried it out. She has put up the most artistic special buildings on the grounds, made the most notable show of mechanics, next to the United States, profusely filled her room in the Main hall with the finest examples of her potteries, looms and other mechanic and useful arts, displayed her agricultural inventions and commercial products, and, in art, transcended the representation of any other country. Truly, we have occasion to be proud of our ancestral home. England, Spain, Brazil, Norway and Sweden and the Netherlands have taken the greatest pains with their representations.

DISTINCTIVELY AMERICAN.

In spite of the vastness of our commerce, notwithstanding the great extent and scope of our manufactures, we Americans are a nation of farmers, and the section of most vital value to us as a people is that wherein agriculture is enthroned. The fountain head of knowledge for our land in this direction is the Agricultural department at Washington, and a full representation of the workings of this great bureau is to be seen in the United States building here. To give even a few ideas of the service performed to our farmers, and through them to us all by the Agricultural department, would require a chapter longer than you could pause to read this busy week. From there are distributed the seeds which feed us year by year. Will you believe that the Commissioner receives 4,000 letters, on an average, a day from our hardy tillers of the soil, asking him for seed? Why, all the money which changes hands each month in Wall street is of less importance than the seeds the Commissioner of Agriculture sends out to be planted in the fertile earth.

VIENNA AND PHILADELPHIA.

To sum up the comparisons, I would say that this is more truly a world's fair than that at Vienna—than has been ever seen before in an international exhibition. For the two or three nations we miss we have a dozen who were not in the Prater. If we miss the prodigious show of European civilization, we have enough to show what it is. Above all things we have our own country in her strength. This is enough to rejoice the heart of the American, who was taken to the dingy collection of sewing machines, false teeth and California wines, and asked to regard it as an "American department." This is, the first of all, an American show, and second an Anglo-Saxon show. We see what we have done in a hundred years. We see wherein consists the greatness of mighty England and the group of colonies which already threaten her supremacy. We see also what our sister American nations of the South have done. And, although the display is rare and crude, before many weeks are over there will be improvement in every department. I sometimes think that this Exhibition will not be in its fullness before September.

ABOUT PRICES, ETC.

Much has been said about the prices of the restaurants in the Centennial grounds, and the restaurants and hotels outside and down in the city. There has been an advance in prices in some cases, and there have been many attempts at extortion, but, on the whole, when we remember what human nature is, the Philadelphians have been pretty decent, or, at all events, not so bad as they might be. Certainly they have not come up to the Parisians and Viennese in the great years of '67 and '73. It was that extortion that kept the great public away from the Vienna Exposition, and brought ruin to thousands of speculators. The Philadelphians determined to avoid this pitfall, and altogether they have done fairly. There are a good many abuses and extortions; but they are not a circumstance to those at Vienna. The worst thing now, to my mind, is the price of beer—ten cents—inside the grounds. A man must be rich who is an habitual beer drinker and wants to do the Centennial thoroughly. To keep his head clear and his body in good condition, he must take his beer regularly at frequent intervals. Think what an amount of cash he will get away with in a month with beer at ten cents! He can wait for his food until he gets outside; but, when it comes to beer, he cannot wait.

CARTRIDGES.

The United States building aims to combine the most interesting features of all the various departments at Washington. It purposes to show the methods and facilities of our country in time of war and time of peace. The first impressions on entering the building are exceedingly warlike, for the spectacle of girls at work feeding machines for making cartridges greets you at the outset. The girls wear silver badges which bear the inscription "Ordnance Department," and they have decked themselves in honor of the occasion with tri-colored neckties and patriotic rosettes of the same hue for their hair. The work of making cartridges consists in sitting at a machine monotonously feeding its steely teeth with little brass saucepans such as your baby plays with in her doll-house. It takes five "draws" to make a cartridge—that is to say, each cartridge has to pass through five machines and be manipulated by five women before it changes from the thimble-like condition which is its first stage to that of the hollow brass cigar which is its completed state. Dirty work is making cartridges. You must dip your fingers constantly in oil and keep a mess of waste by you to wipe your machinery often, lest the grease clog it.

INFORMATION BOILED DOWN.

It is almost incredible that in so primitive a state of society three separate corps of policemen should be thought necessary to protect the city. But such is the fact. The regular police force, which number 1,175 patrolmen, have been increased to 1,675; the Fairmount park police consist of 500 men, and the Exhibition police, called "Centennial Guards," muster 1,000 strong. Alas! the Philistines are on the march, and the chosen people must protect themselves. The Hittite and the Hivite, the Amalekite and the Jebusite, are coming down upon the land. All about the Centennial grounds are costly but ephemeral hotels, and at Elm station, on the Pennsylvania railroad, three miles west of Memorial hall, there has just been finished a caravansary with 1,200 apartments, capable of housing 4,000 immortal beings at $1 a bed and 50 cents a meal. A narrow-gauge railway encompasses the grounds, with three-score open cars for the convenience of the visitors. The Pennsylvania company's rails intersect the neighborhood at almost every turn; and provision has been made for 10,000,000 visitors—9,400,000 more than went to the International exhibition in New York in 1853; 5,466,536 more than went to the International exhibition in Paris in 1855; 3,620,000 more than went to the International exhibition in London in 1861, and 2,745,133 more than went to the International exhibition in Vienna in 1873. The Main building cost $1,600,000; the Art gallery $1,500,000; Machinery hall, $792,000; Agricultural hall, $260,000, and Horticultural hall, $251,337—total, $4,443,937, which, with the cost of fittings, preparation of grounds, etc., will reach a grand total of $6,724,850. The five principal buildings cover 48¾ acres, and their "annexes" 26¼ acres, making a total of 75 acres, or 25 acres more than were covered by the buildings of the Vienna exposition of 1873, and 34¼ acres more than were covered by the great Paris exposition of 1867.

IN MACHINERY HALL.

Now that a number of interesting manufacturing processes are going on in Machinery hall, the number of visitors has considerably increased. There does not appear, however, to be much close study of new inventions or complex mechanical processes. For the most part the people ask amusement, and simple apparatus for producing articles with which they are familiar, such as cakes of soap or pressed glass tumblers, are watched by larger groups than surround the Jacquard looms that weave flowered silks. The rival printing presses attract a small crowd as long as they are in motion, but in five minutes' work they print more papers than can be given away in an hour, so that it is not feasible to run them long at a time. It is curious to see how it lessens the value of an article in people's opinion when they can get it for nothing. Many look at the presses and go on their way without taking a paper who would very likely pay five cents for one if they were for sale. The long table of the American Watch Company, with its delicate machines and its double row of young women employed in making and putting together the delicate parts of watches, always attracts an interested throng. The numerous looms for weaving cottons, woolens, carpets, figured silks, and suspenders, attract attention, but not so much as some novelty like the type writer. Two or three of these machines are kept busy making letters for visitors from the country, who delight in anticipating the surprise of the folks at home at receiving news in print of the doings of their friends at the Fair. The sewing-machine companies make brilliant displays of machines cased in handsome woods, of embroideries, and of costumed figures. Various are the devices resorted to for the purpose of attracting the attention of the fickle crowd. One concern, for example, shows a miniature parlor under glass, with a doll sitting at a sewing-machine, another sitting on a sofa, and a baby doll playing with a poodle on the carpet; and a neighboring rival has a Little Red Riding Hood and the Wolf in life-sized figures. Comparatively few people throng before any of these handsomely decorated pavilions, however. Sewing-machines are an old story; everybody has seen them at the county fairs, and has time and again admired the pretty things which the exhibitors make so deftly upon them, but which nobody else ever succeeds in making.

FOSSIL SPECIMENS.

More than one-fourth the space in the United States Government building is devoted to the display of articles from the Smithsonian Institute, and the commission on American food and fishes. The exhibit is carefully prepared and adjusted with good judgment by the several gentlemen in charge of its sections, which occupy all the room on the right and part of the left of the main avenue. At the rear of the structure the first objects that attract the attention of the visitor, are the numerous animals which the taxidermist has prepared to present the resources of the country in this important particular. The collection embraces fierce-looking white and polar bears, sportive seals and walruses, graceful deers from every quarter, and mammoth whales from northern seas. In covering this subject the superintendent of the department, Prof. G. Browne Good, has demonstrated admirable ideas in his arrangement of the goods at his command. Animals beneficial or injurious to man are first shown, including animals, birds, reptiles, amphibious fishes, insects, crustacea, worms, mollusks, and radiates. Then the means of pursuit and capture of these animals for their skin, fur, or food are illustrated by implements, utensils, and traps; preparations and preservation of foods, manufacture of fabrics, mechanical products and preservation of animals for scientific uses are shown, and, finally, the protection, cultivation, and propagation of useful quadrupeds and bipeds are indicated by models, and in other ways. A tour through this department is rewarded by ample information and the richest results to the student. Along the northern wall are photographic specimens of curious and common species of fish, and hung opposite them, at the entrance to the section, are models in plaster and wood of the ways and means employed in the northern seas for the capture of the whale, portraying forcibly the excitement and perils incident to the fisheries. In connection therewith are cases of knives, spears, javelins, ropes, and other instruments used in the dangerous but profitable business. Near these is a collection of samples of alligator and other leathers, and of the various stages in which they appear from the rough hide to the manufacturer of feet gear. Next to this are all sorts of files, hooks, and reels which must needs fill the piscatorial sportsman's soul with delight to gaze on, but the direct opposite of fancy fishing is illustrated, a few feet distant from the last-mentioned articles, by some of the hooks and lines used by hardy fishermen of the coasts, which hooks and lines look more like anchors and tow-lines for sailing vessels than materials for the capture of the inmates of the sea. Some of the former are fifteen inches [illegible], made of the strongest iron with a chain attachment.

THERE are two obscure but still great men in Boston. They were refused seats in a ward committee meeting the other night, and were both grieved into making an announcement of their greatness. One said modestly that he had done as much as any other man on earth to make this a country. The other electrified the audience with the assurance that he was mortally wounded in the late war.

Now for the Centennial!

Everybody is going. The tide sets toward Fairmount Park. None of us will be at the next American Centennial, and such a chance should not be missed. Go by all means, if you can. Whether you go or not, accidents will happen, and every prudent man will be insured. THE TRAVELERS' has paid 24,000 losses, amounting to over $2,000,000. Any agent will write a policy at a moment's notice. This Co. also furnishes the best Life Insurance, all approved forms, with ample security, at very low cash rates.

CATARRH is a common disease—so common that snuffling, spitting, and blowing of the nose meet us at every turn on the street. Your foot slips in these nasty discharges on the sidewalk and in the public conveyance; and its disagreeable odor, contaminating the breath of the afflicted, renders them offensive to their associates. There is the highest medical authority for stating that with fully one-half, if not two-thirds, of those afflicted with Consumption of the Lungs, the disease commences as Catarrh in the nose or head, the next step being to the throat and bronchial tubes—lastly to the lungs. How important, then, to give early and prompt attention to a Catarrh! To cure this loathsome disease correct the system by using Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, which tones it up, cleanses the blood, and heals the diseased glands by a specific influence upon them; and to assist, use Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy with Dr. Pierce's Nasal Douche. This is the only way to reach the upper and back cavities where the discharge comes from. No danger from this treatment, and it is pleasant to use. The two medicines with instrument are sold by dealers in medicines.

That made by Caswell, Hazard & Co., New York, is the only kind that can be relied on, as there are many imitations, made from common tar, which are worthless.

CORN and flour are staple articles; but not more so than Johnson's Anodyne Liniment, where known. It is good for children or adults, for any internal soreness of the chest or bowels, and the best Liniment prepared, under whatever name.

SUITS, LACES, SHAWLS, TRIMMINGS, ETC.—J. W. Griswold & Co., manufacturers, 54 Madison-st., Chicago, offer the trade the largest and best lines of these goods at prices astonishingly low.

THE all-gone feeling which people sometimes speak of is caused by want of proper action of the liver and heart. These may be assisted, and the bowels regulated, by Parsons' Purgative Pills in small doses.

VEGETINE thoroughly eradicates every kind of humor, and restores the entire system to a healthy condition.

THE attention of all lovers of the horse is called to the advertisement of R. C. Stone, in another column.

TO ALL, particularly invalids, spring is a trying season. Indications of sickness should at once be attended to. Fatal diseases may be caused by allowing the bowels to become constipated, and the system to remain in a disordered condition, until the disorder has time to develop itself. An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure, is an old and truthful saying. Therefore, we advise all who are troubled with the complaints now very prevalent—headache, indigestion, disordered liver, want of appetite, nausea, or feverish skin—to take, without delay, Schenck's Mandrake Pills. We know of no remedy so harmless and decisive in its action. It at once strikes at the root of the disease and produces a healthy tone to the system. People never need suffer from any disease arising from a disordered condition of the liver if they would take this excellent medicine when they feel the first indications of the malady. Families leaving home for the summer months should take three or four boxes of these pills with them. They have an almost instantaneous effect. They will relieve the patient of headache in one or two hours, and will rapidly cleanse the liver of surrounding bile, and will effectually prevent a bilious attack. They are sold by all druggists.

Will cure or prevent Disease.

Ezekiel, 47th Chapter, 12th Verse.

"By the rivers upon the banks thereof shall grow all trees for meat whose leaf shall not fade, and the fruit thereof shall be for meat, and the leaf thereof for medicine." Our great Redeemer has made a provision for the cure of diseases of man and beast, yet thousands upon thousands are overtaken with sickness without suspicion that it is caused by mercury or other subtile poisons that are so freely used in many medicines and remedies of the present day.

A Walking Miracle.

MR. H. R. STEVENS:
Dear Sir—Though a stranger, I want to inform you what VEGETINE has done for me.

Last Christmas scrofula made its appearance in my system—large running ulcers appearing on me as follows: One on each of my arms, one on my thigh, which extended to the seat, one on my head, which eat into the skull bone, one on my left leg, which became so bad that two physicians came to amputate the limb, though upon consultation concluded not to do so, as my whole body was so full of scrofula they deemed it advisable to cut the sore, which was painful beyond description, and there was a quart of matter run from this one sore.

The physicians all gave me up to die, and said they could do no more for me. Both of my legs were drawn up to my seat, and it was thought if I did get up again I would be a cripple for life.

When in this condition I saw VEGETINE advertised, and commenced taking it in March, and followed on with it until I had used sixteen bottles, and this morning I am going to plow corn, a well man. All my townsmen say it was a miracle to see me round walking and working.

In conclusion, I will add, when I was enduring such great suffering from that dreadful disease, scrofula, I prayed to the Lord above to take me out of this world; but as VEGETINE has restored to me the blessings of health, I desire more than ever to live, that I may be of some service to my fellow-men, and I know of no better way to aid suffering humanity than to inclose you this statement of my case, with an earnest hope that you will publish it, and it will afford me pleasure to reply to any communication which I may receive therefrom.

I am, sir, very respectfully,
WILLIAM PAYN.

H. R. STEVENS, Esq.:
Dear Sir—From personal benefit received by its use, as well as from personal knowledge of those whose cures thereby have seemed almost miraculous, I can most heartily and sincerely recommend the VEGETINE for the complaints for which it is claimed to cure.

ROOFS

that leak are costly property. You cannot afford them. The damage to your housed crops which results from one storm is often more than the cost of putting your Barn Roof in order. The yearly decay of agricultural machinery and implements, arising from leaky roofs on outhouses, would more than pay the cost of roofing every shed, crib and storehouse on your farm. Your stock suffer from the drippings of your stable roof and the necessity of their lying in wet stalls. These evils affect property, but when your house roof leaks it is worse yet; then comfort departs, and you have a garret full of pails and pans to catch the steady streams; there are wet ceilings and falling plaster; there is spoiled furniture, damp bedding and rheumatism; there is the anxious wife, wearied with running up-stairs to guard against new leaks; it is decay, and ruin, and property wasted. You cannot afford it. Our Slate Roofing Paint will end your difficulties and make your roofs water-tight. For new roofs, our Rubber Roofing Felt, covered with Slate Roofing Paint, will give satisfaction in any one. For full information in regard to Roofing and House Paints generally, send for our 100-page Book, which is free to all who write at once, and mention this newspaper. Address N. Y. SLATE ROOFING CO., LIMITED, 7 Cedar St., N. Y.

"THE VIBRATOR"

3000 SOLD LAST SEASON WITHOUT ONE FAILURE OR REJECTION

This is the famous Threshing machine that has "swept the field" and created such a revolution in the trade, by its MATCHLESS GRAIN-SAVING AND TIME-SAVING principles.

THE NICHOLS SHEPARD & CO. "VIBRATOR"

THE ENORMOUS WASTAGE of grain, so inevitable with other styles of Threshers, can be SAVED by this Improved Machine, sufficient, on every job, to more than pay all expenses of threshing.

FLAX, TIMOTHY, MILLET, HUNGARIAN and like seeds are threshed, separated, cleaned and saved as easily and perfectly as Wheat, Oats, Rye or Barley.

AN EXTRA PRICE is usually paid for grain and seeds cleaned by this machine, for extra cleanliness.

IN THE WET GRAIN of 1875, these were substantially the ONLY MACHINES that could run with profit or economy, doing fast, thorough and perfect work, when others utterly failed.

ALL GRAIN, TIME and MONEY wasting complications, such as "Endless Aprons," "Raddles," "Beaters," "Pickers," etc., are entirely dispensed with; less than one-half the usual Gears, Belts, Boxes, and Journals; easier managed; more durable; light running; no costly repairs; no dust; no "litterings" to clean up; not troubled by adverse winds, rain or storms.

FARMERS and GRAIN RAISERS who are posted in the large saving made by it will not employ inferior and wasteful machines, but will insist on this improved Thresher doing their work.

FOUR SIZES made for 6, 8, 10 and 12 Horse Powers. Also a specialty of SEPARATORS, designed and made EXPRESSLY FOR STEAM POWER.

TWO STYLES OF HORSE POWERS, viz: our improved "Triple Gear," and our "Spur Speed" (Woodbury Style), both "Mounted" on four wheels.

IF INTERESTED in Threshing or Grain Raising, apply to our nearest Dealer, or write to us for Illustrated Circular (sent free), giving full particulars of Sizes, Styles, Prices, Terms, etc.

Boys, don't rob the bird's nests.

White vests are ready to pull down.

Dust thou art and unto dusters thou shalt return.

Those new style rustic flower pots are very handsome.

Strawberry short cake will soon be the popular desert.

The spring bonnets are like the season—rather backward.

How is your centennial tree by this time? Don't let it wilt

The ladies like to see greenbacks converted into pin-backs.

"Don't care a continential," is the latest, style of centennial swearing.

Farmers who planted early are now giving their corn the first plowing.

If there is anything in an abundance of bloom, the locust crop ought to be a good one this season.

Gold, in small quantities, has been discovered at Morgantown, North Carolina.

Startling discovery of a little three-year old—"Why, pa, there's a hole in your hair."

"Frozen blue" is a new shade for evening silk. If trimmed with "blue blazes" the effect is very melting.

A vinegar-hearted old batchelor says he always looks under the head of marriages for the news of the week.

When you get measured for a new, suit of clothes, the tailor invariably "pulls down your vest."

The boys are now taking to the water and are as happy as ducks in a puddle, or trout in a brook.

Learn the lesson: No one cares about the size of your foot except yourself; therefore be comfortable.

Next time put a wire screen over the the tops of your chimneys, if you don't want to be bothered with the swallows.

The black snake crop will be sufficiently matured for all practical purposes by the time blackberries are ripe.

Now that an abundant cherry crop is a foregone conclusion, you may look out for the man who sells "patent seeders."

The most fashionable spring bonnett for this year seems to be the old winter bonnet fixed over with cream colored trimmings.

It is not possible to run a paper to please everybody; the man who would try to do so would be a fool, and must inevitably fail.

When six young ladies sit down to talk about their new spring bonnets, a small boy with a drum and tin horn is a refuge for the weary.

Nothing causes a larger variety of conflicting expressions to cross a young man's face, than to see his best beloved girl sit down upon his new chip hat.

You have had that silver quarter and brass button jingling in your pocket long enough now; pay your debts and therefore avoid a scarcity of change.

If you have any friends or relatives in the Quaker city, now is the time to drop them a line saying you will be on to see 'em some time during the centennial show.

In the difficult art of how to get along without doing anything, a number of our young men have taken all the thirty-two degrees and still they don't seem to be happy.

Let the children enjoy the sunshine. Don't be so particular about freckles and tan. The blush of the daintiest rose is penciled by the artistic touch of that great orr of day.

Lemons can be preserved by varnishing them with a solution of shellac in alcohol. The skin of shellac formed is easily removed by rubbing the fruit in the hands.

There is a town in Maine where, after three days hard work, the citizens raised seventy-two cents for the widow of a man who was accidentally killed.

A frontier Texan who was asked if he was going to attend the Centennial Exhibition, guiltlessly replied: 'I'd like to put it off till next year.'

An editor of a denominational paper in Chicago says: "A man needs grace to edit a religious paper at any time, but especially when he has the rheumatism.

The custom and manners of years ago are rapidly passing away, and the only thing left to remind us of our grandfather's peculiarities is the super-human effort of the small boy to spit between his teeth.

The average young lady who joins a pic-nic excursion to the woods, or a little fishing party, always has enough strength to scream in seven languages when she sees a big spider, but not enough to mash it in one.

When a boy lodges his kite in a tree across a telegraph wire he will spend as much time and energy in trying to get it down, by throwing at it until the kite is broken all to pieces, as would serve to make a dozen other kites.

It is a vulgar notion that politeness is only required toward superiors. The truth is, every man or friend as his equal, and treat him accordingly. This is the very soul of good manners. Such feelings the real gentleman always has.

The warm season has probably advanced so far now that it will be safe to take down your stove, but there is no use marking the sections of pipe under the mistaken idea that you will have no trouble with them next fall, for they are sure to shrink and expand during the summer so they never fit again.

A Pennsylvania paper discusses in this strain: "If a publisher of a newspaper were to purchase from a merchant a shovel and make it a business to loan the shovel the year round to a dozen of his neighbors who would consequently need to buy no shovels that merchant would say the publisher was injuring the merchant's business, as every one who borrowed the shovel did so to prevent the merchant from selling him one The merchant would soon be heard to say "let every man use his own shovel." It is just the same with every merchant or other business man who subscribes for a newspaper and keeps it laying on his counters for every bummer to read who makes it a business to go round from shop to shop and from store to store to read all the newspapers he can put his hands on. When a man subscribes for a newspaper it is his private property and he ought to keep it as such and not turn his place of business into a local news depot for newspaper bummers."

Something Wanted.

Yesterday morning just after the dray-stand on Monroe avenue was well filled, a man about fifty years old rapidly approached the teamsters.

"What a dray?" yelled one, rushing at him.

"Want a wagon?" screamed another.

"He wants some one to move him, and I'm the man!" exclaimed a third.

"Gentlemen," began the man, but before he could say any more he was entirely surrounded by the draymen, and each one was clamorously asserting the merits of his horse and the strength of his vehicle.

"Hold on!" he cried, trying to wave them back, but it was two or three minutes before they would hold on. "What I wanted gentlemen," he commenced again, when they shouted;

"Only fifty cents for this red dray!"

"Take your goods right out of the house and not break a thing!"

He waited until every voice was silent, and then quietly said:

What I wanted was a chew of the weed."

They told him to go and buy it.

The Touring Pilgrim.

One of our Mississippi exchanges tells the following, and being assured that the story as related is true, with hundreds of other curious people we would like to know the name of the "touring pilgrim."

It was a clear, bright day, when the young drummer—who was making his first tour through the South—was seen smiling complacently on a fair damsel sitting on his left and diagonally opposite him, on the 3:30 bound train for Memphis, on the M. & T. railroad.

She was fair and beautiful to behold, as he thought, when he approached her thus:

"My good lady, it seems as though you were traveling alone."

"I am," was the reply.

"Well," said the drummer, "nothing gives me more true pleasure than to play the gallant to the fair sex who, like yourself are companionless; and if I do not presume too much, will be happy to be your escort as far as we travel together."

"How far are you going?" she then asked.

"To Grenada," he answered.

"I shall go that far myself."

"Well, then, surely, we will have a nice ride together."

"But pray sir, if I am not too impertinent, may I ask what sort of business you are in?"

"Oh, not at all, my fair lady, with pleasure, I can say that I am a touring pilgrim for a commercial house in the city of Louisville, Kentucky.

They sped on at the rate of twenty miles an hour, busily engaged in conversation, until they arrived at Station 15. By this time he changed his seat to one directly behind hers. When the train stopped their eyes fell upon a poor donkey, when he, thinking to make the young lady blush, was heard to say:

"Fair lady! I having been raised in a city, and am totally unacquainted with the different animals that inhabit the country, will you please tell me what sort or kind of an animal that is over the way?" at the same time pointing with his finger at the poor donkey.

She replied by making a mischievous wink at her father, who had not long since taken a seat near enough to hear the conversation.

"I too, have been raised in the city, and am, like you, unacquainted with the animals that inhabit the country; but if I would be left to judge, I would emphatically say, from his silly look and long ears, that he must be "a touring pilgrim for a commercial house in Louisville. Kentucky; Don't you think so papa?"

"I do I do, my daughter."

The drummer wilted, and has not been heard from since.

THE LITTLE BLACK-EYED REBEL.

BY WILL CARLETON.

A boy drove into the city, his wagon loaded down
With food to feed the people of the British-governed town;
And the little black-eyed rebel, so cunning and so sly,
Was watching for his coming from the corner of her eye.

His face looked broad and honest, his hands were brown and tough,
The clothes he wore upon him were homespun, coarse and rough,
But there was one who watched him, who long time lingered nigh,
And cast at him sweet glances from the corner of her eye.

He drove up to the market, he waited in the line—
His apples and potatoes were fresh and fair and fine:
But long and long he waited, and no one came to buy,
Save the little black-eyed rebel, watching from the corner of her eye.

"Now who will buy my apples?" he shouted, long and loud;
And "Who wants my potatoes?" he repeated to the crowd;
But from all the people round him came no word of a reply,
Save the black-eyed rebel, answering from the corner of her eye.

For she knew that 'neath the lining of the coat he wore that day
Were long letters from the husbands and the fathers far away,
Who were fighting for the freedom that they meant to gain or die;
And a tear like silver glistened in the corner of her eye.

But the treasures—how to get them? crept the question through her mind,
Since keen enemies were watching for what prizes they might find;
And she paused a while and pondered, with a pretty little sigh;
Then resolve crept through her features, and a shrewdness fired her eye.

So she resolutely walked up to the wagon old and red;
"May I have a dozen apples for a kiss?" she sweetly said;
And the brown face blushed to scarlet, for the boy was somewhat shy,
And he saw her laughing at him from the corner of her eye.

"You may have them all for nothing, and more, if you want," quoth he.
"I will have them, my good fellow, but can pay for them," said she;
And she clambered on the wagon, minding not who all were by,
With a laugh of reckless romping in the corner of her eye.

Clinging round his brawny neck, she clasped her fingers white and small,
And then whispered "Quick! the letters! thrust them underneath my shawl!
Carry back again this package, and be sure that you are spry!"
And she sweetly smiled upon him from the corner of her eye.

Loud the motley crowd were laughing at the strange, ungirlish freak,
And the boy was scared and panting, and so dashed he could not speak;
And, "Miss, I have good apples," a bolder lad did cry;
But she answered, "No, I thank you," from the corner of her eye.

With the news of loved ones absent to the dear friends they would greet,
Searching them who hungered for them, swift she glided through the street.
"There is nothing worth the doing that it does not pay to try,"
Thought the little black-eyed rebel, with a twinkle in her eye.

LORD CAMELFORD'S BODY.

A New Story by Charles Reade.

To those who take their ideas of character from fiction alone such a sketch as this must seem incredible; for fiction is forced to suppress many of the anomalies that nature presents. David was even more unlike David than Camelford varied from Camelford, and the chivalrous Joab, who dashed, with his life in his hand, into the camp of the Philistines, to get his parched general and king a cup of water, afterward assassinated a brother soldier in a way so base and dastardly as merited the gibbet, and the lash to boot. Imagine a fellow hanging in chains by the roadside, with the Victoria cross upon his bosom, both cross and gibbet justly earned! Such a man was, in his day, the son of Zeruiah.

But were fiction to present such bold anomalies they would be dubbed inconsistencies, and Horace would fly out of his grave at our throats, crying,

amphora coepit
Institui, currente rota cur urceus exit?

It is all the more proper that the mixed characters of history should be impressed on the mind, lest in our estimate of mankind men's inconsistencies should be forgotten, and puzzle us beyond measure some fine day when they turn up in real life.

Lord Camelford went to school first at Berne in Switzerland, and passed for a thoughtful boy; thence to Charterhouse. He took a fancy to the sea, and was indulged in it; at fourteen years old he went out as midshipman in the Guardian frigate, bound for Botany bay with stores. She met with disasters, and her condition was so desperate that the Captain (Riou) permitted the ship's company to take to the boats. He himself, however, with a fortitude and pride British commanders have often shown in the face of death, refused to leave the ship. Then Camelford and ninety more gallant spirits stood by him, to share his fate. However they got the wreck—for such she is described—by a miracle, to the Cape, and Camelford went home in a packet.

Next year, 1791, he sailed with Vancouver in the Discovery. But, on this voyage, he showed insubordination, and Vancouver was obliged to subject him to discipline. He got transferred to the Resistance, then cruising in the Indian seas, and remained at sea until 1796, when his father died, and he returned home to take his estates and title.

Though years had elapsed, he could not forgive Captain Vancouver, but sent him a challenge. Vancouver was then retired, and in poor health. The old captain appealed to the young man's reason, and urged the necessity of discipline on board a ship of war, but offered to submit the case to any flag officer in the navy, and said that if the referee should decide this to be a question of honor, he would resign his own opinion and go out with Lieutenant Camelford.

Camelford, it is to be feared, thought no sane officer would allow a duel on such grounds, for he did not accept the proposal, but waited his opportunity, and meeting Vancouver in Bond street, insulted him and tried to strike him. The mortification and humiliation of this outrage preyed upon Vancouver's heart, and shortened the life of a deserving officer and very distinguished navigator.

Little more than a year after this Camelford took a very different view of discipline, and a more sanguinary one. Yet there was one key to these discordant views, his own egotism.

Peers of the realm rose fast in the King's service at that date, and Camelford, though only a lieutenant, soon got a command. Now it so happened that, on a certain day at the end of the year 1797 or beginning of 1798, his sloop, the Favorite, and a large vessel, the Perdrix, Captain Fahie, were both lying in English harbor, Antigua. Fahie was away at St. Kitts, and Peterson, First Lieutenant, was in charge of the Perdrix. Lord Camelford issued an order, which Peterson refused to obey, because it affected his vessel, and he represented Fahie, who was Camelford's senior. There were high words, and threats of arrest on Camelford's part; and twelve of Peterson's crew came up armed. It is not quite clear whether Peterson sent for them; but he certainly drew them up in line, and bared his own cutlass. Camelford immediately drew out his own marines and ranged them in line opposite Peterson's men. He then came up to Peterson, with a pistol, and said, "Lieutenant Peterson, do you still persist in not obeying my orders!"

"Yes, my Lord," said Peterson, "I do persist."

Thereupon Camelford put his pistol to Peterson's very breast and shot him dead on the spot. He fell backward and never spoke nor moved.

Upon this bloody deed the men retired to their respective ships, and Camelford surrendered to Capt. Matson, of the Beaver sloop, who put him under parole arrest. He lost little by that, for the populace of St. John's wanted to tear him to pieces. A coroner's jury was summoned, and gave a cavalier verdict that Peterson "lost his life in a mutiny," the vagueness of which makes it rather suspicious.

Camelford was then taken in the Beaver sloop to Martinque, and a court-martial sat on him, by order of Rear-Admiral Hervey. The court was composed of the five captains upon that station, viz., Caley, Brown, Ekers, Burney, and Mainwaring, and the judgment was delivered in these terms after the usual preliminary phrases: "The court are unanimously of opinion that the very extraordinary and manifest disobedience of Lieut. Peterson to the lawful commands of Lord Camelford, the senior officer at English harbor, and his arming the ship's company, were acts of mutiny highly injurious to his Majesty's service; the court do therefore unanimously adjudge that Lord Camelford be honorably acquitted."

Such was the judgment of sailors sitting in a secret tribunal. But I think a judge and a jury sitting under the public eye and sitting next day in the newspapers would have decided somewhat differently.

Camelford may or may not have been the senior officer in the harbor; Peterson, in what pertained to the Perdrix, was Fahie, and Fahie was not only Camelford's senior, but his superior in every way, being a post-captain.

"Lieutenant" is a French word, with a clear meaning, which did not apply to Camelford, but did to Peterson; lieu tenant, or locum tenens. I think, therefore, Peterson had a clear right to resist in all that touched the Perdrix; and that Camelford would never have ventured to bring him to a court-martial for mere disobedience of his order. In the court-martial Camelford is called a commander; but that is a term of courtesy, and its use, under the peculiar circumstances, seems to indicate a bias; he had only a lieutenant's grade, and in that grade was Peterson's junior.

Much turns, however, on the measure and manner even of a just resistance, and here Peterson was prima facie to blame. But suppose Camelford had threatened violence! The thing looks like an armed defense, not a meditated attack. For the lieutenant in command of the Favorite to put a pistol to the lieutenant in charge of the Perdrix and slaughter him like a dog, when the matter could have been referred on the spot by these two lieutenants to their undoubted superiors, was surely a most rash and bloody deed. Indeed opinion in the navy itself negatived the judgment of the court-martial. So many officers who respected discipline looked so coldly on this one-sided disciplinarian, Camelford, that he resigned his ship and retired from the service soon after.

THE CAPRICCIOS OF CAMELFORD.

It was his good pleasure to cut a rusty figure in his Majesty's service. He would not wear the epauletts of a commander, but went about in an old lieutenant's coat, the buttons of which, according to one of his biographers, "were as green with verdigris as the ship's bottom." He was a tartar, but attentive to the comforts of the men and very humane to the sick. He studied hard in two kinds, mathematical science and theology: the first was to make him a good captain, the second to enable him to puzzle the chaplains, who in that day were not so versed in controversy as the Jesuit fathers.

Returning home with Peterson's blood on his hands, he seems to have burned to recover his own esteem by some act of higher courage than shooting a brother officer a' bout portant, and he hit upon an enterprise that certainly would not have occurred to a coward. He settled to invade France single-handed and shoot some of her rulers, pour encourager les autres. He went to Dover and hired a boat. He was sly enough to say at first he was bound for Deal; but after a bit, says our adventurer, in tones appropriately light and cheerful, "Well, no; on second thoughts, let us go to Calais; I have some watches and muslins I can sell there. Going to France in that light and cheerful way, was dancing to the gallows; so Adams, the skipper of the boat, agreed to go with him for £10, and went directly to the authorities. They concluded the strange gentleman was going to deliver up the island to France; so they let him get into the boat and then arrested him. They searched him, and found him armed with a brace of pistols, a dagger, and a letter of introduction in French.

They sent him up to the privy council, and France escaped invasion that bout.

At that time, as I have hinted, it was a capital crime to go to France from England. So the gallows yearned for Camelford. But the potent, grave and reverend seniors of his Majesty's Council examined him, and advised the King to pardon him under the Royal Seal; they pronounced that "his only motive had been to render a service to his country." This was strictly true, for whoever fattens on the plans of France with a pestilent English citizen, or consigns him to a French dungeon for life, confers a benefit on England, and this benefit Camelford did his best to bestow on his island home. It was his obstructors who should have been hanged. His well-meant endeavor reminds one of the convicts' verses bound for Botany bay:

True patriots we, for be it understood
We left our country for our country's good.

The nation that had retained him against his will now began to suffer for its folly by his habitual breaches of the public peace.

After endless skirmishes with the constables my lord went into Drury Lane theater, drunk, with others of the same kidney, broke the windows in the boxes and the chandeliers, and Mr. Humphries' head. Humphries had him before a magistrate. Camelford lied, but was not believed; and then dragged the magistrate to ask Mr. Humphries if he would accept an apology; but wordointment was not the balm for Humphries, who had been twice knocked down the steps into the hall, and got his eye nearly beaten out of his head. He prepared an indictment, but afterward changed his tactics judiciously, and sued the offender for damages. The jury, less pliable than captains in a secret tribunal, gave Humphries a verdict and £500 damages.

After this, Camelford's principal exploits appear to have been fights with the constables, engaged in out of sport, but conducted with great spirit by both parties, and without a grain of permanent ill-will on either side. He invariably rewarded their valor with gold when they succeeded in capturing him. When they had got him prisoner, he would give the constable of the night a handsome bribe to resign his place to him. Thus promoted, he rose to a certain sense of duty, and would admonish the delinquents with great good sense and even eloquence, but spoiled all by discharging them. Such was his night work. In the daytime he was often surprised into acts of unintentional charity and even of tender-heartedness.

HIS NAME A TERROR TO FOPS.

He used to go to a coffee-house in Conduit street, shabbily dressed, to read the paper. One day a dashing beau came into his box, flung himself down on the opposite seat, and called out in a most consequential tone, "Waitas, bring a couple of wax candles and a pint of Madeira, and put them in the next box." En attendant he drew Lord Camelford's candle toward him and began to read. Camelford looked at him, but said nothing.

The buck's candles and Madeira were brought, and he lounged into his box to enjoy them. Then Camelford mimicked his tone, and cried out, "Waitas, bring me a pair of snuffas." He took the snuffers, walked leisurely round into the beau's box, snuffed out both the candles, and retired gravely to his own seat. The buck began to bluster, and demanded his name of the waiter.

"Lord Camelford, sir."

"Lord Camelford! What have I to pay!" He laid down his score and stole away without tasting his Madeira.

HIS PLUCK.

When peace was proclaimed the suffering nation rejoiced. Not so our pugnacious peer. He mourned alone, or rather cursed, for he was not one of the sighing sort. London illuminated, Camelford's windows shone dark as pitch. This the London citizen always bitterly resents. A mob collected and broke his windows. His first impulse was to come out with a pistol and shoot all he could; but, luckily, he exchanged the firearms for a formidable bludgeon. With this my lord sallied out, single-handed, and broke several heads in a singularly brief period. But the mob had cudgels, too, and belabored him thoroughly, knocked him down, and rolled him so diligently in the kennel, while hammering him, that, at the end of the business, he was just a case of mud with sore bones. All this punishment he received without a single howl; and it is believed would have taken his death in the same spirit; so that we might almost say of him,

He took a thousand mortal wounds
As mute as fox 'midst mangling hounds.

The next night his windows were just as dark, but he had filled his house with boarders, as he called them, viz., armed sailors, and had the mob attacked him again there would have been much bloodshed, followed by a less tumultuous, but wholesale, hanging day. But the mob were content with having thrashed him once, and seem to have thought he had bought a right to his opinions. At all events they conceded the point, and the resolute devil was allowed to darken his house and rebuke "the weakness of the people" in coming to terms with Bony.

THE PITCHER GOES ONCE TOO OFTEN TO THE WELL.

Camelford had a male friend, a Mr. Best, and, unfortunately, a female friend, who had once lived with this very Best. This Mrs. Simmons told Camelford that Best had spoken disparagingly of him. Camelford believed her and took fire. He met Best at a coffee-house and walked up to him and said, in a loud, aggressive way, before several persons, "I find, sir, you have spoken of me in the most unwarrantable terms." Mr. Best replied, with great moderation, that he was quite unconscious of having deserved such a charge.

"No, sir," says Camelford; "you know very well what you said of me to Mrs. Simmons. You are a scoundrel, a liar, and a ruffian!"

In those days such words as these could only be wiped out with blood, and the seconds were at once appointed.

Both gentlemen remained at the coffee-house some time, and during that time Mr. Best made a creditable effort; he sent Lord Camelford a solemn assurance he had been deceived, and said that under those circumstances he would be satisfied if his lordship would withdraw the expressions he had uttered in error. But Camelford absolutely refused, and then Best left the house in considerable agitation and sent his lordship a note. The people of the house justly suspected this was a challenge, and gave information to the police; but they were dilatory, and took no steps until it was too late.

Next morning, early, the combatants met at a coffee-house in Oxford street, and Best made an unusual and indeed a touching attempt to compose the difference. "Camelford," he said, "we have been friends, and I know the unsuspecting generosity of your nature. Upon my honor you have been imposed upon by a strumpet. Do not insist on expressions under which one of us must fall."

Camelford, as it afterward appeared, was by no means unmoved by this appeal. But he answered, doggedly, "Best, this is child's play; the thing must go on." The truth is, Best had the reputation of being a fatal shot, and this steeled Camelford's pride and courage against all overtures.

The duel was in a meadow behind Holland House. The seconds placed the men at thirty-nine yards, and this seems to imply they were disposed to avoid a fatal termination if possible.

Camelford fired first, and missed; Best hesitated, and some think he even then asked Camelford to retract. This, however, is not certain. He fired, and Lord Camelford fell at his full length, like a man who was never to stand again.

They all ran to him; and it is said he gave Best his hand, and said, "Best, I am a dead man. You have killed me; but I freely forgive you."

This may very well be true, for it certainly accords with words he had already placed on paper the day before, and also with words he undoubtedly uttered in the presence of several witnesses soon after.

Mr. Best and his second made off to provide for their safety; one of Lord Holland's gardeners called out to some men to stop them, but the wounded man rebuked him, and said he would not have them stopped—he was the aggressor; he forgave the gentleman who had shot him, and hoped God would forgive him, too.

He was carried home, his clothes were cut off him, and the surgeon at once pronounced the wound mortal; the bullet was buried in his body, and the lower limb quite paralyzed by its action. It was discovered after his death, embedded in his spinal marrow, having traversed the lungs. He suffered great agonies that day, but obtained some sleep in the night. He spoke often and with great contrition of his past life, and relied on the mercy of his Redeemer.

Besides the duel he had done a just and worthy act. He had provided for the safety of Mr. Best, by adding to his will a positive statement that he was the aggressor in every sense: "Should I therefore lose my life in a contest of my own seeking I solemnly forbid any of my friends or relations to proceed against my antagonist." He added that if the law should, nevertheless, be put in force he hoped this part of his will would be laid before the King.

I have, also, private information, on which I think I can rely, that, when he found he was to die, he actually wrote to the King, with his own hand, entreating him not to let Best be brought into trouble.

And, if we consider that, as death draws near, the best of men generally fall into a mere brutish apathy—whatever you may read to the contrary in tracts—methinks good men and woman may well yield a tear to this poor, foolish, sinful, but heroic creature, who, in agonies of pain and the jaws of death, could yet be so earnest in his anxiety that no injustice should be done to the man who had laid him low. This stamps Camelford a man. The best woman who ever breathed was hardly capable of it. She would forgive her enemy; but she could not trouble herself, and worry herself, and provide, moribunda, against injustice being done to that enemy; c'était male.

I come now to the particulars which have caused me to revive the memory of Thomas Pitt, Lord Camelford, and I divide these particulars into public and private information.

THE PUBLIC INFORMATION.

The day before his death Lord Camelford wrote a codicil to his will, which, like his whole character, merits study.

He requested his relations not to wear mourning for him, and he gave particular instructions as to the disposal of his remains in their last resting place. In this remarkable document he said that most persons are strongly attached to their native place, and would have their remains conveyed home even from a great distance. His desire, however was the reverse; he wished his body to be conveyed to a country far distant, to a spot not near the haunts of men, but where the surrounding scenery might smile upon his remains."

He then went into details. The place was by the Lake of St. Pierre, in the Canton Berne, Switzerland. The particular spot had three trees standing on it. He desired, the center tree to be taken up and his body deposited in the cavity, and no stone nor monument to mark the place. He gave a reason for the selection, in spite of a standing caution not to give reasons. "At the foot of that tree," said he, "I formerly passed many hours in solitude, contemplating the mutability of human affairs."

He left the proprietors and ground £1,000 by way of compensation.

COMMENT ON THE PUBLIC INFORMATION.

Considering his penitent frame of mind, his request to his relations not to go into mourning for him may be assigned to humility and the sense that he was no great loss to them.

But, as to the details of his interment, I feel sure he mistook his own mind, and was in reality imitating the very persons he thought he differed from. I read him thus by the light of observation. Here was a man whose life had been a storm. At its close he looked back over the dark waves, and saw the placed waters his youthful bark had floated in before he dashed into the surf. Eccentric in form, it was not eccentric at bottom, this wish to lay his shattered body beneath the tree, where he had sat so often an innocent child, little dreaming then that he should ever kill poor Peterson with a pistol, and be killed with a pistol himself in exact retribution. That, at eleven years of age he had meditated under that tree on the mutability of human affairs is nonsense. Here is a natural anachronism and confusion of ideas. He was meditating on that subject as he lay a-dying; but such were never yet the meditations of a child. The matter is far more simple than all this. He, who lay dying by a bloody death, remembered the green meadows, the blue lake, the peaceful hours, the innocent thoughts, and the sweet spot of nature that now seemed to him a temple. His wish to lie in that pure and peaceful home of his childhood was a natural instinct and a very common one. Critics have all observed it, and many a poet sung it, from Virgil to Scott.

Occidit, et moriens dulces reminiscitur Argos.

THE PRIVATE INFORMATION.

In the year 1858 I did business with a firm of London solicitors, the senior partner of which had, in his youth, been in a house that acted for Lord Camelford.

It was this gentleman who told me Camelford really wrote a letter to the King in favor of Best. He told me, further, that preparations were actually made to carry out Camelford's wishes as to the disposal of his remains. He was embalmed and packed up for transportation. But, at that very nick of time, war was proclaimed again, and the body, which was then deposited, pro tempore, in St. Anne's Church, Soho, remained there, awaiting better times.

The war lasted a long while, and, naturally enough, Camelford's body was forgotten.

After Europe was settled it struck the solicitor in question that Camelford had never been shipped for Switzerland. He had the curiosity to go to St. Anne's church and inquire. He found the sexton in the church, as it happened, and asked him what had become of Lord Camelford.

"Oh," said the sexton, in a very cavalier way, "here he is;" and showed him a thing which he described to my friend McLeod as an enormously long fish basket, fit to pack a shark in.

And this, McLeod assures me, was seven or eight years after Camelford's death.

Unfortunately, McLeod could not tell me whether his informant paid a second visit to the church, or what took place between 1815 and 1858.

The deceased peer may be now lying peacefully in that sweet spot he selected and paid for. But I own to some misgivings on that head. In things of routine, delay matters little; indeed, it is a part of the system; but, when an out-of-the-way thing is to be done, oh, then delay is dangerous, the zeal cools, the expense and trouble look bigger, the obligation to incur them seems fainter. The inertia of mediocrity flops like lead into the scale and turns it. Time is really edax rerum, and fruitful in destructive accidents. Rectors are sometimes lawless, churchwardens deal with dustmen, and dead peers are dust. Even sextons are capable of making away with what nobody seems to value, or it would not lie years forgotten in a corner.

These thoughts prey upon my mind, and, as his life and character were remarkable, and his death very noble and his instructions explicit, and the duty of performing them sacred, I have taken the best way I know to rouse inquiry and learn, if possible, what has become of Lord Camelford's body.

A Kentucky Hanging.

An account of the hanging of a husband and wife in Warsaw, Ky., by a mob, briefly reported by telegraph, is given by a correspondent of the Cincinnati Enquirer. Their names were French, and with them lived Luke Jones, an uncle, who contributed largely to their support. His money being at length all spent, they desired to be rid of him. They put arsenic in his food, and he died in great agony, his sufferings exciting the anger of the community toward his murderers, who were immediately put in jail. At night they were taken out by the masked men, carried on horses to a secluded place, and hanged to a tree. The woman met death bravely, but the man begged piteously for mercy, and charged the crime upon her. "You lie," she retorted, "but it ain't worth while for us to quarrel here. We'll settle it in hell."

Fishing in Alaska.

Capt. J. W. White, of the revenue marine service, makes a favorable report of Alaska, saying that vegetation is luxuriant, the Yucon river navigable for 1,400 miles, the seal fisheries practically inexhaustible, and the minerals enormously valuable. Incidentally he tells this story of fishing off Sitka: "I had a barrel of Puget Sound clams salted for me for bait. I took my lead line, as large as my thumb, attached five hooks above the lead, with a clam on each, and fastened to the davit. Soon the bites—one, two, three, often five—were felt. I threw the line over the pulley, and put four men to pull, and up would come two, three, and sometimes five god, weighing thirty to forty pounds apiece. We had out about twenty lines, and caught 250 fish in two hours."

Working Women in New York.

Over 130,000 women, says an exchange, are employed in various kinds of labor in New York city, and in general at very limited wages. Few can make more than $10 or $12 a week, and numbers are compelled to get along on as little as $4, while others can make no more than twenty-five cents a day. The women who worked for Stewart have been supposed to be the best cared for in the city, but this idea has since been discovered to be fallacious, since fines for every trivial shortcoming materially reduced the earnings of all Stewart's employes. The girls employed by the Harper's in their book publishing establishment are reported to be the best paid and best cared for of any in New York.

Worth a Hundred Millions.

A New York correspondent of the Rochester Democrat and Chronicle puts Commodore Vanderbilt's wealth at $45,000,000. He is below the mark. Even in these days of depreciated values the old man holds securities worth millions more than that. Uncle Daniel Drew, who knows whereof he speaks, puts the property of the Commodore at one hundred millions; but perhaps he gets it too high. Still, every one will allow that Vanderbilt is by far the richest man in America, at least in immediately realizable property.—New York Sun.

High-Salaried Drummers.

A traveling salesman of a St. Louis establishment has sued a hotel-keeper, a newspaper, and a railroad-company for negligence in causing him to miss a train. The railroad company furnished an incorrect time-table, the newspaper printed it, and the hotel man failed to wake up his guest as directed. The St. Louis drummer asks $5,000 damages for one day's delay, which exorbitant rates of payment, says the Chicago Tribune, "accounts for the poverty of St. Louis merchants and the gorgeousness of their employes."

NORWICH, Conn., made preparations to set its tramps to work, but when the work was ready not a tramp could be found. Here's food for reflection.

A Counterfeit John B. Gough.

A fellow, billing himself in the towns and registering himself as John B. Gough, has been delivering temperance lectures in Northwestern Iowa. At first it was suspected that he was an impostor, but when he told the Niagara story and jumped up in the air, cracking his heels together, and split his coat up the back from the tails to the collar, the audience stood right up and said, "This is, of a verity, the great apostle of temperance."—Burlington Hawk-Eye.

A CENTENNIAL COUPLE.

Sketch of the Life of George Fruits, 118 Years Old, and of His Wife, 90 Years—Probably the Oldest Married Couple in the World.

[From the Indianapolis Journal.]

In Ripley township, Montgomery county, and about nine miles from Crawfordsville, there lives an old man named George Fruits, whom every evidence goes to prove has passed the 118th mile-stone.

He was born in Baltimore, Md., in the early part of January, 1758. His parents were Germans, being emigrants from the Fatherland to America. They were poor and rather illiterate. The boyhood of Mr. Fruits was principally spent in Maryland, where he was engaged as a laborer. His education was neglected, and as a consequence he can neither read nor write. He says he don't believe he ever attended school to exceed a month in his life. He is the last one left of a family of twelve children, eight girls and four boys. Leaving Maryland accompanied by his friends, Mr. Fruits went to Pennsylvania, where he remained a short time. When Kentucky was opened to settlers he went there, where he took an active part in the Indian wars. His comrades were Daniel Boone and other well-known characters in the colonial history of Kentucky. He spent much of his time in the erection of block-houses and other means of defense for the settlers, and was well-known as a daring scout. He took part in all of the principal battles of the Indians, and now carries in one of his legs a ball which was shot there at the time of the battle of Blue Licks, on Licking creek, abouty eighty years since. After the settlements in Kentucky were perfected, Mr. Fruits removed to Ohio, remaining there during the first years of the present century. He was married near Hamilton, Butler county, O., on the 4th of October, 1806, to Miss Catherine Stonebraker, who still survives. When Indiana was admitted into the Union in 1816, he entered the farm which is his present home, and bringing with him his family, removed to Indiana. He showed me the deed for his farm, which was given several years after the purchase. It bore the name of John Quincy Adams as President. In his better days Mr. Fruits was six feet three inches high, and weighed about 225 pounds. He was rather slender for one of that weight, his flesh being very compact. His arms were long and supported by powerful muscles. He had the reputation of being one of the strongest and most athletic men in his neighborhood. His hair was rather light in his palmier days, but is now a dark gray. The top of his head, a few years since, was entirely bald, but is now covered with a very fine coat of hair, similar to that of an infant. His eyes are of a light blue. While the lid on the left has fallen, completely closing it from view, the sight of the other is good, and he can readily distinguish objects with it. All of the permanent set of his teeth are out, with the exception of one, the eye-tooth on the left side of the jaw, but in their place a new set, the third, are making their appearance. The most of them are through cutting, and he tested their strength sufficiently to satisfy me by biting my finger when I was feeling of them. His forehead is high, and his other features quite regular, and he was considered quite a good looking man. One rather strange feature about his feet is his toe-nails. They will at times almost disappear, and then suddenly put forth into a thick, spongy growth. He has met with several accidents during his life, at one time breaking several of his ribs, and at another mashing his ankle, besides being wounded at the battle of Blue Licks. But, everything considered, he is as well preserved generally as most persons that reach the age of eighty. His habits have been good, generally, and especially since his settlement in Indiana. He has always been an early riser, and regular in his eating. He used tobacco a good many years, and whisky occasionally, but never to an excess. With the exception of the time he was a soldier, and four years as a tanner, and six as a distiller, he has been a farmer.

Mr. and Mrs. Fruits together constitute the oldest couple in the State, perhaps, and probably in the nation. Their combined ages amount to over 202 years. They are the last persons living of two large families, and are outliving the fifth generation. They are the parents of thirteen children, twelve of whom are living, and are the grand and great grandparents of over eighty children.

An Enterprising Little Girl.

The New York World of a recent date tells an interesting story of a young girl named Gracie Wheeler, aged fourteen years, who ran away from school and was missing for twelve days. Her distracted parents thought she had been kidnapped, and sent circulars containing a description of her to all the police stations within a radius of twenty miles; but without avail until the receipt of a letter from the runaway by a school-mate, in which Gracie stated that she was living as a companion for an old lady. This letter gave the detectives an idea that the girl had applied at some intelligence office for a situation, and one was found where she had been. From this point it was easy to trace her, as she had done some light-house work in two different houses, and she was eventually found living with a Mrs. Smith, in Bergen, N. J. The letter gives a history of her troubles, and is as follows:

"DEAR SUSIE: As you have been my friend so long, I feel it my duty to inform you how circumstances stand with me. Aggie Cassidy told me one day that if I wanted money I could get a blank book for a few cents and go around collecting money, by making out that Sister Antabasken sent me. So I did so, and saved up till I had a dollar. I went and bought a lot of things and had a feast. Then on Friday noon I was counting my money when the teacher asked me whose money it was. To hide the fault, I said my mother told me to buy three yards of ribbon, and she said, 'Oh, it's all right.' On Thursday I took off my shoe and stocking to show Maggie Smith my funny toe, and it happened that a girl who was going past said I was begging. She told Miss Kirsted so, and Miss Kirsted said she would see my father and mother. She kept Maggie Smith and me in at 12 o'clock. Then I asked permission if I might leave the room, and she said yes. I had my sack on, and took my hat. When I got out I got into a car, having money. I am afraid you'll give information, so I wont tell where I am. Tell my mother as soon as you read this letter that a lady wanted a girl that would live with her as she was very old, and owned a cottage, and I went to her. She lives all alone, so I am there yet. Believe me your sincere friend.

"GRACIE WHEELER.

"To Gussie Leland, fifty-fourth street and Sixth avenue, New York city."

Gracie promised to go back to school, provided it should not be the same one she deserted so unceremoniously.

The One-Rail System for Railways and Canals.

The knotty problem of cheap transportation, as well as the vexed question of double tracks in narrow places, is likely to have a practical solution, should the new one-rail system, which is said to be working successfully in France, where it originated, be adopted in this country. The track is a line of light rails, spiked in the center with light ties, with two bands of macadam or longitudinal planks laid on the ground parallel with the rail. A road of this character is claimed to possess the advantage of costing $1,000 less per mile to construct than the narrow-gauge now so popular, besides allowing trains to turn very sharp curves as easily as on a straight line, the resistance of the cars being four-fifths of what it is on the narrow gauge track with two rails. The engines are furnished with steel cog-wheels, an improvement which is said to allow them to draw heavy loads, at small speed, in all kinds of weather, and more than a narrow-gauge engine of double weight could do. They are built with or without cog-wheels, and are far superior in power to the ordinary locomotive. Their driving-wheels have rims from eight inches to one foot wide, surrounded by a band of india-rubber. The locomotives and cars have two center wheels, one in front, one behind, which are double flanged, and run on the center rail, guiding the train and supporting the whole weight of the cars. The side wheels, one each side, merely maintain the equilibrium and hardly touch the macadam or wood on which the driving wheels run. This system is indorsed by the French Government, the inventor having a right to build several hundred miles of cheap railroads as feeders to main lines, also the concession of the transportation for fifty years on the canal de Bourogne. Here the track is laid upon the towpath, and with a small locomotive weighing four tons, at three miles an hour, a boat containing 200 tons cargo can be drawn. This system is said to be preferable to the screw steamer, for there is no loss of power due to the "slip" of the screw, which is about forty-nine per cent on an average. A tank locomotive of this system, weighing 8.3 tons, will haul, at four miles an hour, 600 tons of cargo, requiring sixty horse-power, while a screw steamer would take eighty-four horse-power. If the new one-rail system will do what the inventor claims, canal and railway transportation bids fair to be revolutionized, and a new era in railway building, opening up hitherto inaccessible places, will be inaugurated.—Toronto Globe.

A Story of the Connecticut State Prison.

Apropos of amelioration of discipline in the Connecticut State prison, during the past thirty years, the story of Pool, of New Haven, sentenced for life for burning his store, is told once more. Another man on his deathbed confessed the crime, but Pool did not live to reap the fruits of the confession. Naturally of fine sensibilities and noble manhood, he became at last frenzied by cruel treatment, and forfeited his life. Pool was placed in the shoe shop, and compelled to finish six pairs a day. Unused to work, it was with great pain he accomplished this task. But the greedy contractors, not content, soon increased the burden to eight pairs. An expostulation or a murmur only brought a blow. An eye turned to heaven for help was answered with the lash. No eye could look up. With this task, Pool found his health failing, his mind going. His nerves were unbalanced by the least irritation. The sweat poured from his brow, and for wiping it off he was reprimanded and punished. Every keeper seemed watching with an evil eye and taunting him with threats and jeers. To add to his distress his task was increased to ten pairs. He demurred, protested, flew into a rage. That night he was flogged, thrust into a dungeon without food, without bed, and next day, with his back all raw and not a moment of sleep, with but a crust for his food, he was ordered to finish eleven pairs. Pool felt that the hour of his dissolution had come. Innocent of the crime alleged, yet having no hope of liberty on earth, he concealed a knife, and resolved to sell his life as dearly as he could. He did what he was able to do of the task that day, and even more, but the bell struck and the eleven pairs were not finished. With fiendish malignity the keepers ordered him to the dungeon to await the Warden. The Warden came, and, without listening to entreaty or hearing a word of explanation, ordered him to strip himself to the raw flesh again, place his hands against the wall, and receive the lashes on his already lacerated back. "No, never!" said Pool. "Take that!" and Warden Webster fell dead. From that hour cats and shower-baths, and brutalities in general, were at a discount in the institution. Brute force was found unprofitable. Contractors demanded coffee and wholesome food and better treatment for the men, on the plea that they would do more work.

Boston, by a Foreigner.

Dr. Von Bulow says: "Everybody in Boston—that is, I mean, in the best musical circles—goes about in a sort of trance, as it were. When I talk to a man about a thing there, even of business, he says yes, and yes, and yes, mechanically, and looks out of the window. I recollect I said to a large publisher who was gazing away through the window at the other side of the street when I was talking to him, 'You must have a great number of poets in this part of the country.' 'Why?' said he. 'Because,' said I, 'there are many accomplished dreamers among you.'"

AT our request Cragin & Co., of Philadelphia, Pa., have promised to send any of our readers gratis (on receipt of fifteen cents to pay postage) a sample of Dobbins' Electric Soap to try. Send at once.

DR. R. V. PIERCE, Buffalo, N. Y.:

DEAR SIR—Your medicines, Golden Medical Discovery, Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, have proved of the greatest service to me. Six months ago no one thought that I could possibly live long. I had a complication of diseases—scrofula, manifesting itself in eruptions and great blotches on my head that made such sores that I could not have my hair combed without causing me much suffering; also causing swollen glands, tonsils enlarged, enlarged or "thick neck," and large and numerous boils. I also suffered from a terrible Chronic Catarrh, and in fact I was so diseased that life was a burden to me. I had tried many doctors with no benefit. I finally procured one-half dozen bottles of your Golden Medical Discovery and one dozen Sage's Catarrh Remedy and commenced their use. At first I was badly discouraged, but after taking four bottles of the Discovery I began to improve, and when I had taken the remaining I was well. In addition to the use of Discovery I applied a solution of Iodine to the Goitre or thick neck, as you advise in pamphlet wrapping, and it entirely disappeared. Your Discovery is certainly the most wonderful blood medicine ever invented. I thank God and you, from the depths of my heart, for the great good it has done me.

Very gratefully, MRS. L. CHAFFEE.

Most medicines which are advertised as blood purifiers and liver medicines contain either mercury, in some form, or pottassium and iodine variously combined. All of these agents have strong tendency to break down the blood corpuscles, and debilitate and otherwise permanently injure the human system, and should therefore be discarded. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, on the other hand, being composed of the fluid extracts of native plants, barks and roots, will in no case produce injury, its effects being strengthening and curative only. Sarsaparilla, which used to enjoy quite a reputation as a blood purifier, is a remedy of thirty years ago, and may well give place, as it is doing, to the more positive and valuable vegetable alteratives which later medical investigation and discovery has brought to light. In Scrofula or King's Evil, White Swellings, Ulcers, Erysipelas, Swelled Neck, Goitre, Scrofulous Inflammations, Indolent Inflammation, Mercurial affections, Old Sores, Eruptions of the Skin and Sore Eyes, as in all other blood diseases Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery has shown its great remedial powers, curing the most obstinate and intractable cases. Sold by all dealers in medicines.

CHAPPED hands, face, pimples, ringworm, saltrheum, and other cutaneous affections cured, and rough skin made soft and smooth, by using Juniper Tar Soap. Be careful to get only that made by Caswell, Hazard & Co., New York, as there are many imitations made with common tar, all of which are worthless.

DR. SHALLENBERGER celebrates the Centennial by putting the price of his famous Ague Pills at one dollar. This old and tried medicine is cheap at any price, because it cures promptly any case of chills when all other remedies have failed utterly.

THERE are several kinds of worms which trouble horses; the pin-worms (pointed at both ends) are the most common and most dangerous. Sheridan's Cavalry Condition Powders will in a few days eject the worms, and the horse will begin to thrive.

FACTORIES and machine shops should not be allowed to run a day without Johnson's Anodyne Liniment. In case of a sudden accident, an immediate use of it may save weeks of suffering, and perhaps a limb, or even life.

VEGETINE purifies the blood, renovates and invigorates the whole system. Its medical properties are alterative, tonic, solvent and diuretic.

THE attention of all lovers of the horse is called to the advertisement of E. C. Stone, in another column.

TO ALL, particularly invalids, spring is a trying season. Indications of sickness should at once be attended to. Fatal diseases may be caused by allowing the bowels to become constipated, and the system to remain in a disordered condition, until the disorder has time to develop itself. An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure, is an old and truthful saying. Therefore, we advise all who are troubled with the complaints now very prevalent—headache, indigestion, disordered liver, want of appetite, nausea, or feverish skin—to take, without delay, Schenck's Mandrake Pills. We know of no remedy so harmless and decisive in its action. It at once strikes at the root of the disease and produces a healthy tone to the system. People never need suffer from any disease arising from a disordered condition of the liver if they would take this excellent medicine when they feel the first indications of the malady. Families leaving home for the summer months should take three or four boxes of these pills with them. They have an almost instantaneous effect. They will relieve the patient of headache in one or two hours, and will rapidly cleanse the liver of surrounding bile, and will effectually prevent a bilious attack. They are sold by all druggists.

FLAX, TIMOTHY, MILLET, HUNGARIAN and like seeds are threshed, separated, cleaned and saved as easily and perfectly as Wheat, Oats, Rye or Barley.

AN EXTRA PRICE is usually paid for grain and seeds cleaned by this machine, for extra cleanliness.

IN THE WET GRAIN of 1875, these were substantially the ONLY MACHINES that could run with profit or economy, doing fast, thorough and perfect work, when others utterly failed.

ALL GRAIN, TIME and MONEY wasting complications, such as "Endless Aprons," "Raddles," "Beaters," "Pickers," etc., are entirely dispensed with; less than one-half the usual Gears, Belts, Boxes, and Journals; easier managed; more durable; light running; no costly repairs; no dust; no "litterings" to clean up; not troubled by adverse winds, rain or storms.

FARMERS and GRAIN RAISERS who are posted in the large saving made by it will not employ inferior and wasteful machines, but will insist on this improved Thresher doing their work.

FOUR SIZES made for 6, 8, 10 and 12 Horse Powers. Also a specialty of SEPARATORS, designed and made EXPRESSLY FOR STEAM POWER.

The Wonders of Modern Chemistry. Sarsaparillian and Its Associates. Changes as Seen and Felt as They Daily Occur after Using a Few Doses of DR. RADWAY'S Sarsaparillian Resolvent, THE GREAT BLOOD PURIFIER.

1. Good spirits, disappearance of weakness, languor, melancholy; increase and hardness of flesh and muscles, etc.

2. Strength increases, appetite improves, relish for food, no more sour eructations or waterbrash, good digestion, calm and undisturbed sleep, awakes fresh and vigorous.

3. Disappearance of spots, blotches, pimples; the skin looks clear and healthy, the urine changed from its turbid and cloudy appearance to a clear sherry or amber color; water passes freely from the bladder through the urethra without pain or scalding, little or no sediment; no pain or weakness.

4. Marked diminution of quantity and frequency of involuntary weakening discharges (if afflicted that way), with certainty of permanent cure. Increased strength exhibited in the secreting glands, and functional harmony restored to the several organs.

5. Yellow tinge on the white of the eyes, and the swarthy, saffron appearance of the skin changed to a clear, lively and healthy color.

6. Those suffering from weak or ulcerated lungs or tubercles will realize great benefit in expectorating freely the tough phlegm or mucous from the lungs, air cells, bronchi or windpipe, throat or head; diminishing of the frequency of cough; general increase of strength throughout the system; stoppage of night sweats and pains and feeling of weakness around the ankles, legs, shoulders, etc.; cessation of cold and chills, sense of suffocation; hard breathing and paroxysms of cough on lying down or arising in the morning. All these distressing symptoms gradually and surely disappear.

7. As day after day the SARSAPARILLIAN is taken, new signs of returning health will appear; as the blood improves in strength and purity, disease will diminish, and all foreign and impure deposits, nodes, tumors, cancers, hard lumps, etc., be resolved away and the unsound made sound and healthy; ulcers, fever sores, syphilitic sores, chronic skin diseases gradually disappear.

8. In cases where the system has been salivated, and Mercury, Quicksilver, Corrosive Sublimate (the principal constituent in the advertised Sarsaparillas, associated in some cases with Hyd. of Potassa) have accumulated and become deposited in the bones, joints, etc., causing caries of the bones, rickets, spinal curvatures, contortions, white swellings, varicose veins, etc., the SARSAPARILLIAN will resolve away these deposits and exterminate the virus of the disease from the system.

9. If those who are taking these medicines for the cure of Chronic, Scrofulous or Syphilitic diseases, however slow may be the cure, "feel better," and find their general health improving, their flesh and weight increasing or even keeping its own, it is a sure sign that the cure is progressing. In these diseases the patient either gets better or worse—the virus of the disease is not inactive; if not arrested and driven from the blood, it will spread and continue to undermine the constitution. As soon as the SARSAPARILLIAN makes the patient "feel better," every hour you will grow better and increase in health, strength and flesh.

The great power of this remedy is in diseases that threaten death—as in Consumption of the Lungs and Tuberculous Phthisis, Scrofula, Syphiloid Diseases, Wasting, Degeneration, and Ulceration of the Kidneys, Diabetes, Stoppage of Water (instantaneous relief afforded where catheters have to be used, thus doing away with the painful operation of using these instruments), dissolving stone in the bladder, and in all cases of Inflammation of the Bladder and Kidneys, in Chronic cases of Leucorrhœa and Uterine diseases.

In tumors, nodes, hard lumps and syphiloid ulcers; in dropsy and venereal sore throat, ulcers, and in tubercles of the lungs; in gout, dyspepsia, rheumatism, rickets; in mercurial deposits—it is in these terrible forms of disease, where the human body has become a complete wreck, and where every hour of existence is torture, wherein this great remedy challenges the astonishment and admiration of the sick. It is in such cases, where all the pleasures of existence appear cut off from the unfortunate, and by its wonderful, almost supernatural agency, it restores the hopeless to a new life and new existence where this great remedy stands alone in its might and power.

In the ordinary skin diseases that every one is more or less troubled with, a few doses will in most cases, and a few bottles in the more aggravated forms, work a permanent cure.

Those afflicted with chronic diseases should purchase a package containing one dozen bottles. Price $10 per dozen, or $5 per half dozen bottles, or $1 per bottle. Sold by druggists.

RADWAY'S READY RELIEF WILL AFFORD INSTANT EASE. INFLAMMATION OF THE KIDNEYS, INFLAMMATION OF THE BLADDER, INFLAMMATION OF THE BOWELS, CONGESTION OF THE LUNGS, SORE THROAT, DIFFICULT BREATHING, PALPITATION OF THE HEART, HYSTERICS, CROUP, DIPHTHERIA, CATARRH, INFLUENZA, HEADACHE, TOOTHACHE, MUMPS, NEURALGIA, RHEUMATISM, COLD CHILLS, AGUE CHILLS.

The application of the READY RELIEF to the part or parts where the pain or difficulty exists will afford ease and comfort.

Twenty drops in half a tumbler of water will, in a few moments, cure CRAMPS, SPASMS, SOUR STOMACH, HEARTBURN, SICK HEADACHE, DIARRHEA, DYSENTERY, COLIC, WIND IN THE BOWELS, and all INTERNAL PAINS.

Travelers should always carry a bottle of RADWAY'S RELIEF with them. A few drops in water will prevent sickness or pains from change of water.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 4, 1876.

DEAR COURIER.—The past few days have developed several sensations as startling as they were unexpected. The most important of these is the sale of a Lieutenant's appointment in the army for $450.

The charges brought against Mr. Kerr lack nothing in definiteness or directness. The only question is, is it true? To this point must be directed with all speed the work of investigation. Does the story of the sale of an appointment to Green through Harney received any confirmation from collateral sources? If not, the question is reduced to one simply of the oath of Mr. Kerr against the oath of Mr. Harney—a thing that may be left to the judgment of public opinion. Nevertheless, the high character of Mr. Kerr cannot wholly protect him; and if it be found upon examination that he has been false to his trust, let him be treated with unsparing severity even though his fragile life be trembling on the verge of the grave.

And yet this charge against Mr. Kerr, has, to our mind, the look of the most infamous conspiracy that has been formed since the safe burglary. It has many strong points of resemblance to that iniquitous thing. I seems to be gotten up as the safe burglary was, to break the force of another investigation by casting odium and reproach upon the investigators.

The accusation rests upon the testimony of one man, Harney, who says he paid Kerr $450 for the appointment of Green: Harney was an ex-doorkeeper of the House; he has been dismissed from both places, and is now out of employment. He has, therefore, a direct interest in making friends with the republicans. His story must be received with the same sort of distrust as that of the letter carrier who came to Babcock's rescue in the whisky trial. It may be given, if not for cash, at least for the hope of reward. Green's evidence is open to the same objections. He is a man cashiered and dismissed in disgrace from the army. He has nothing to loose. He says he gave money to Harney to pay for his place. Harney says he paid it to Mr Kerr.

Now let this thing be probed to the bottom The democracy must go resolutely into it for two reasons: They must cleanse themselves of Mr. Kerr if he is guilty; they must cover the authors of this conspiracy with new infamy if he be innocent. The probability is that Green and Harney are only the puppets put forward and that the workers are behind. The names of the true workers must be known. Let all the facts come out, The whole country believes that the reputation of Mr. Kerr will stand the clearer for the scrutiny, and if his innocence be established, the administration party will have added one more to the scorching sum of shames and crimes that make it odious to this generation, and will make its story a blot on our history.

Mr. Kerr's high reputation should not shelter him from scrutiny; but surely it raises a presumption in his favor. His temperament habits, manners and associates all contradict the story of bribery. He is known as a man cold, reserved of haughty integrity, a scorner of the venal and paltry. It is inconceivable that this subaltern doorkeeper Harney should walk up to him and plump him an offer for $450 for an appointment. It is inconceivable that Mr. Kerr should chaffer with him, or sell out so very cheap and place himself at the mercy of a low fellow in such an open and audacious bargain. It is far easier to believe that both Green and Harney are conspirators, liars and perjurers than to believe this.

Moreover the bearing of the witness is worthy of consideration. The republicans themselves were disquieted by the bearing of Harney on the stand; and they were disappointed by the calm and noble mind of Mr. Kerr. And the few quiet words of utter denial that he spoke standing as he did exhausted with the sufferings of a long illness, with almost the faintness of death upon him, carry with them the thrill of conviction that goes straight home even to the breasts of his accusers; and they outweigh a whole wilderness of dismissed doorkeepers and cashiered captains.

Yet I cannot say Harney is a bummer, as was charged upon the witness against Babcock. He is a valuable fellow, has plenty of cheek, and talks right straight from the shoulder. There is no question but what Green paid him money. The question is, did Harney pay any of it to Kerr. I should not like to approach Mr. Kerr with money, and I do not believe any one else has dared do it Being in Congress at a time when numerous jobs were being lobbied through when his influence would have commanded thousands of dollars, had it been in the market, and passing through the whole of them without a taint of suspicion, I cannot understand how he could be a party to such an affair for so paltry a sum, and with a man comparatively unknown to him. His whole life contracts such an action, and as Ben Butler [illegible] the other day no sensible man, woman or child in the country gives it the least credit.

Another sensation followed close upon that relative to Mr. Kerr, connecting Mr. Blaine with an affair almost identical with a feature in the Belknap investigation. A man named Mulligan was summoned here as a witness as to Blaine's connection with the Little Rock railroad. Blaine had an interview with him the night of his arrival, and got possession of a lot of letters under his own signature, together with a memorandum made out by Mulligan. The witness came before the Committee the next day, and swore that Blaine made a pathetic appeal to him on behalf of his wife and six children, and threatening suicide, if Mulligan did not give up these letters, as they would ruin him. Blaine got the letters, and now refuses to give them up, claiming th t they have no reference to the matter under investigation. He submitted these letters to two lawyers who state to the committee that they do not contain anything that would be of use to the Committee, and I understand that Blaine has offered them to the Chairman to read, if he will keep in confidence all matter not having reference to the subject under investigation. Here is another witness whose statement is hardly credible. I don't believe Jim Blaine would get down on his knees to any one, as the witness claims he did. Though there are other facts that make his connection with railroads look very suspicious, especially the fact of his being worth about $200,000, coming to Congress with scarcely one-fourth that sum, yet he is one of those who will carry a high head to the bitter end.

I see an argument used by Republican papers that as these investigations have involved one or two Democrats, the House should cease prosecuting them. That would make the Democratic party as bad as the party in power. Had the Republicans pushed these investigations while they were exclusively in power, and brought to light their own corruption and then promptly punished the evil doers, the whole country would not have been disgusted as it is to-day with the administration. Had they adopted the measures of economy that the Democratic House has done, they would have had more friends and less enemies. But from the outlook to-day, the party that purges itself most of its thieves and swindlers; that punishes its wrong-doers, and introduces and maintains a judicious economy, that is the party that may look for and expect the confidence of the people. I believe the Democracy have the advantage in the race, but when once in power will have to do more than the Republicans have during the last few years if they desire to retain it. There is an element of bad men is this country that always float to the winning side, and worm themselves into positions to be used for their own self aggrandizement. They prostitute themselves to the basest means for their own enrichment, and get such a terrible grasp in time upon the party skirts that it is impossible to throw them off, and the longer they remain in power the more corrupt they become. This is the case with the Republican party to-day. There are good men in that party that would gladly rid themselves of this element if they could, but so closely are they blended with the organization that the party would become utterly demoralized and ruined.

Mrs. Mays and the junior arrived last Friday evening after a refreshing ride of 28 hours. They visited the Capitol yesterday, saw both Houses in session, and went to the top of the dome, 282 steps, to get a view of Washington scenery. With a field glass they could see the smoke of Baltimore 40 miles away. After that they went to the House restaurant, to enjoy the delicacies of soft crabs, strawberries, and spring chickens, the latter about as big as a baby's hand—price 75 cents. One was enough. To-day they went to Metropolitan church, to-morrow they will go down the Potomac 18 miles to Mt. Vernon, and the next day to the Soldiers' Home and agricultural grounds, leaving for the Centennial in the evening, and expect to arrive home Friday night.

I was much pleased to meet in the Rotunda the other day, Miss Annie Rainier, who in company with her uncle and a party from Illinois, were doing the city en route for the Centennial.

Boston celebrates the Centennial Year by demolishing the Old South Church, one of the few Revolutionary edifices left in that city. It was in this church that many of the greatest meetings of the patriots of '76 were held; and it was used as a barracks by the British troops during the occupation of Boston. Unfortunately it stands, or rather did stand, on a very valuable piece of land which is wanted for business purposes. The religious society which owned the property has built a fine new temple, and down goes the old one!

From New York to San Francisco in Eighty-four Hours.

The Jarret & Palmer train arrived at the end of Oakland wharf, which is in the city limits of San Francisco, at 9:25 a. m., June 4, twenty-six minutes less than 84 hours out from New York. It arrived at the wharf in San Francisco at 9:45, and at 9:52½ the passengers alighted in the court of the Palace Hotel, dusty and travel-worn, but in good health and spirits. Engine No. 49 brought the train through from Ogden, with the assistance of an additional engine in crossing the Sierras. The time from Ogden to San Francisco was 24 hours and 52 minutes. Actual average running time from Ogden to Oakland wharf, 41¼ miles per hour. Considerable trouble was experienced on the Central Pacific from the wearing out of the brake shoes in the Pennsylvania cars, and in the mountains the Central Pacific Company put on two of their own coaches to brake the train. No accident of any kind occurred throughout the trip. Shortly after the arrival breakfast was served, to which prominent citizens, army and navy officers representatives of the press, the theatrical profession, railroad officials and the mayor of the city sat down. A salute of 13 guns was fired from the roof of the Palace Hotel on the arrival of the train at the wharf. The rest of the day was devoted to needed rest, and a serenade was given them in the evening.

Neighborhood News.

We visited several towns in the county last week, and are glad to see that each one is gradually improving.

BUTLER.

—At the above place everthing was flourishing in good shape, and if Butler gets the Canada Southern, she is boss.

—J. H. V. Thomson is the champion foot racer and makes his time in—Well, try 'em.

—We are under obligations to Mr. Ryer, the best blacksmith in the county, for special favors.

—L. J. Blair has opened an agricultural store. Farmers can get their implements of him cheap.

WATERLOO.

—At this place everything seems to be lively, as much so, however, as in any town in the county.

—Jas. Clifford has been painting and fixing up his saloon so as to make it a comfortable place for a temperance man to while away a few idle moments.

—Gust Lease, Esq., republican candidate for Sheriff, has purchased the Bull-Ock pacing horse, and is fitting him for the track.

—Paul Clifford has had his billiard room generally overhauled and now it presents a fine and tasty appearance. Paul took the first prize at the billiard match at Edgerton, O., the other week. He takes them now everywhere.

GARRETT.

—Marshal Skilling is up to his work and with Theo. Sargeant as assistant, is keeping the Garrett "roosters" quiet.

—When any of our citizens call at the above place, don't fail to call on Ira West and Jack Brown, at Bell's old stand

—Sargeant & Son are pushing their new hall, and in a few days it will be ready for guests. When completed it will discount anything in DeKalb county —we mean for accommodations.

—One man was killed and other shot within the last week. We don't blame Garrett. Its a new town, and they must have a starter for a grave yard.

At one time during the meeting three of Kelly brothers was before the chairman as delegates; but Charley wouldn't have it. He said, "there was to much Grant about it." The caucus was largely attended and each one seemed to be in earnest.

Do you believe the man who inquired of a friend why Belknap traded the Black Hills to Bristow for a mule contract that Pendleton stole from a Kentucky railroad company took a paper? You know you don't.

Young Man Drowned.—Monday evening the sad intelligence was brought to town, from Eldora, Iowa that Freeman W., youngest son of Thomas Kelley, was drowned in the river at that place a few days since. The young man had only left home a month ago in good health and spirits. The remains will not be brought home until fall or winter. Mr. Kelley's ill luck seems to be coming together, and he and his family have the sympathy of the entire community. —Waterloo Press.

Last Friday was an unlucky day. One of the greatest and most important pictures in existance was destroyed by fire in Cincinnati, while in London an æsthetically inclined thief cut the portrait, by Gainsborough, of the Duchess of Devonshire, from the frame and "lit out," the fast mail train killed its fireman and engineer, nearly every State in the Union furnished a dozen or more suicides or cases of drowning, while the rope was made to do its duty at Lebanon, Tenn., at Boston and Worcester, Mass., with scores of deaths, by accident, throughout the country.

Two Tramps, John Ryan and James Morgan, passed through this place last Sunday, and entered the dwelling house of J. A. Matson during the absence of the family stealing $80 in money, a revolver and some jewelry. The alarm was given in a very short time and A. S. Leas, R. Wes McBride and others, started in pursuit. They procured the assistance of Sheriff Darby, at Bryan, and the boys were picked up on Monday morning near that place. They were brought back to town, where they waived an examination, and in default of $500 bail each Esq. Husselman committed them to the care of Sheriff Meese. —Waterloo Press.

Our Democratic friends from all parts of the county bring us very flattering news from their respective localities. Without a dissenting voice they say the Democrats are ready to close up the rank and make a hard fight for success all along the line. Many Republicans have lost faith in Grantism and have become well satisfied that any candidate, however honest he may be if elected by the Republican party must of necessity fall into the control of the disreputable schemers who now stand at the head of affairs and they want no more of that kind of rulers. Many men who have always voted the Republican ticket are heartily disgusted with the party management and will freely [illegible] to bring about a change of rulers.

AUBURN COURIER.

THURSDAY, JUNE 8, 1876.

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

THE EAST.

MASSACHUSETTS hanged two murderers on the 26th of May—Piper, at Boston, for the murder of the little girl Mabel Young, and Frost, at Worcester, who murdered his brother-in-law nearly a year ago. A shocking accident occurred at the latter execution. When the drop fell a terrible scene was enacted. The fall was so great that the head of Frost was jerked from his body, which hung only by ligaments. His blood spurted in every direction over the scaffold and floor....No goods will be received for exhibition at the Philadelphia show after June 15....Three men were drowned at Suncook, N. H., last week, by the upsetting of a small pleasure steamer.

BY an explosion of fire-damp in a coal mine near Pottsville, Pa., last week, four men were killed and ten seriously wounded.

NINE cadet midshipmen of the second and third classes have been expelled from the Naval academy at Annapolis for stealing "gentlemen's furnishing" goods from a Baltimore drummer....The Centennial managers have again put in force the foolish rule requiring visitors to pay their admissions in fifty-cent pieces.

BY the upsetting of a sail-boat on Fresh Pond, in the suburbs of Boston, a few days ago, four persons were drowned—Mrs. Duncklee, wife of the proprietor of the Sunnyside house, Brighton, and her daughter Maud, Miss Wilson, and her little brother Johnny....At Philadelphia, on Thursday of last week, was witnessed the largest assemblage of members of the higher order of the Masonic brotherhood ever seen in America, or the world. One hundred and fifty commanderies from all parts of the Union, and many delegates from abroad, including the Grand Commandery of South Africa, took part in the parade.

HON. S. S. BURDETTE, ex-Commissioner of the General Land office, recently disappeared very suddenly. Several days subsequently his body was found near Bergen, N. J., and there was every evidence that he had been foully murdered. When last seen at the Astor house, in New York, Mr. Burdette had a large amount of money and considerable valuable property on his person, all of which was missing from the body when found.

THE WEST.

A FIRE in San Francisco last week destroyed $300,000 worth of business property....Three young men were drowned in San Francisco bay, a few days ago, by the upsetting of a boat. They were employes of the Cornell Watch Company, and recently from Chicago. ....Dubufe's great painting, "The Prodigal Son," was destroyed by fire at Cincinnati last week. Its value was estimated at $100,000.... Reports have reached Lincoln, Neb., to the effect that eleven members of a Cincinnati party who went to the Black Hills a few weeks ago, under Col. Stone, have been killed by Indians near Custer....Judgments have been entered upon distillers' bonds, in the United States court in St. Louis, to the amount of half a million dollars. Most of the bondsmen are able to pay, and will be compelled to do so.

THE sudden death is announced of George M. D. Bloss, one of the editors of the Cincinnati Enquirer, who was run over by the cars and instantly killed while walking along the track of the Little Miami railroad, near Branch Hill station, Ohio, where he resided. Mr. Bloss had been connected with the Enquirer for twenty-two years, and was widely known as an able political writer and statistician.

A DISPATCH from Fort Fetterman says all the young warriors have left Red Cloud, going north to join Sitting Bull, leaving their families to be protected at the agencies. The indications are that Gen. Crook and others will have to contend against the whole war force of the Sioux....Mr. Israel Hawes, who has just returned to Minneapolis, Minn., from the Black Hills, corroborates the statements of the rumors in regard to the Indian scalping stories, and adds that they are not half as startling as the facts. He helped to bury persons killed by the Indians every day. The bodies of those murdered are always found with six bullet-holes and six knife-stabs in them, besides the loss of the scalp, which they take off by cutting the head open in the shape of the letter V from the back of the head down to the eyes, which presents a heart-sickening sight. Indians are as thick as flies around a molasses keg. Every party that attempts to leave or enter the Hills is attacked, and more or less fall victims to the devils in human form. One party of twenty-five attempted to escape, and only one lived to tell the story of how they were butchered and scalped. More parties are leaving every day than arrive in a week. There are some 5,000 men in the Hills, among whom there are about fifty that are making $20 per day to 1,000 who make a dollar.

THE latest Chicago sensation is the startling story told to the Grand jury by Warden Kimberly, of the Cook County Poor-house and Insane asylum, that he and one Clem Periolat, a wholesale grocer, together with certain members of the Board of County Commissioners, have been defrauding the county to large amounts by a thievish conspiracy in connection with contracts, etc. The whole ring of scoundrels has been indicted and will probably be sent to the penitentiary.

A DISPATCH from Lincoln, Neb., gives the following particulars of the recent horrible massacre by Indians of a large portion of Capt. Stone's company of Cincinnatians, en route for the Black Hills: "Part of the expedition was passing through the sand hills, about fifty miles from Red Cloud Agency. The day was warm and the roads nearly impassable from sand. The men had deposited their coats and weapons behind when the Indians rushed down and cut them off from the train. The massacre followed with but little resistance, the Indians numbering several hundred. The leaders, Capt. Stone and James Wood, were among the first to fall. The bearer of the report declares that not a single one of the party of forty-nine escaped. Several of the bodies, scalped and mutilated, were taken into North Loup Fort.

SOUTH.

JOHN C. HALL, a prominent citizen of Hot Springs, Ark., and a son-in-law of ex-Senator Brownlow, of Tennessee, was recently shot and killed by Wm. P. Walsh, Postmaster at the Springs.

A NEW ORLEANS dispatch says: "Three white men, McCardle, Graham and Dumonville, while sleeping in camp, in Iberville parish, were attacked by a negro, who killed McCardle and Graham with an ax, and wounded Dumonville. The negro plundered the camp and fled."....Senator Twitchell, who was shot some time ago at Coushatta, La., by a disguised assassin, and whose left arm was amputated at the time, has since been compelled to have his right arm cut off also. Senator Twitchell received two bullets in his left arm, one in his right, one in his hip, and one in the back of his neck at the time, but is represented as cheerful and likely to recover....The Galveston (Texas) News, of a recent date, says: "Nine men were hanged by a mob for horse-stealing in Jack county last week, and six in Wise. Two of those hanged in Jack county are said to have been innocent. Two unknown men were found hanging out several miles on the prairie, near Elgin, yesterday."

GENERAL.

THE President is disposed to look leniently upon the incursions of gold-hunters upon the [illegible] in the Black Hills country, [illegible] and accomplished [illegible] of that country by adventurous [illegible]. Gen. Sheridan has been [illegible] to [illegible] permission to all persons coming [illegible] stores and supplies to the Hills. This order does not include miners at work or en route for the Hills, but their safety will be largely increased incidentally by the presence of the troops....For the first thirteen days of the Philadelphia show, the aggregate attendance was 496,838, or an average of a fraction more than 38,000 a day. At this rate, supposing it to be practicable to keep it up, the whole attendance for the season may be computed at three and a half to four millions, giving a revenue, with allowance for dead-heads, of less than two million dollars.

A HEAVY reduction in passenger rates is announced by the New York Central management, owing, it is said, to cutting under by rival lines leading west from Boston. The new tariff places the fare between Chicago and New York at $17, instead of $22 as before; Cincinnati, $15; Indianapolis, $16; St. Louis, $22; Louisville, $19; Detroit, $13.

THE recent troubles among the trunk lines of railroad between New York and the West have been followed by a general reduction of passenger rates....The American Sunday-school Union has just held its fifty second anniversary in the city of New York. The record of its work the past year shows that 1,236 new schools have been formed, and 3,216 other schools visited and aided, which have a total membership of 228,245. This work has been done in thirty-one States and Territories....A great conflagration swept over a portion of the city of Quebec, Canada, a few nights ago. The devastated district is what is known as the St. Louis suburbs, in which about 1,000 houses were burned, with a loss estimated at $1,000,000.

WASHINGTON.

THE Senate Postoffice Committee has reported a bill to restore the franking privilege for all letters or packages sent on purely official business by heads of bureaus and executive departments, or by senators or members of the House of Representatives. The bill will contain severe penalties to prevent a misuse of official franks....John J. Patterson, of New Jersey, has been appointed Doorkeeper of the House, in place of Fitzhugh, recently bounced.

THE Michigan delegation is said to stand 17 for Tilden, 3 for Hendricks, and 2 undecided.

THE testimony of Lawrence Harney, charging Speaker Kerr with the sale of a commission in the army, for one Augustus P. Green, has been the sensation of the National Capital. Green had previously testified before the committee that he was appointed to a second-lieutenancy in the army in 1865, his commission bearing date of July 20 of that year. He came to Washington with reference to his appointment several times between December, 1865, and the May or June following. He first made application to a board of officers convened in Washington for the examination of applicants, and forwarded his testimonials to it; but nothing came of this, as the board gave its appointments to Congressmen. After going to his representative and learning that the latter had already appointed a man, the witness came to Washington to see what he could do himself, and talked with an acquaintance of his, a Mr. Harney, who was at that time an assistant doorkeeper of the House of Representatives. Harney said that he could secure a nomination for a consideration, which witness agreed to. Greene said there was no understanding, nor did he believe that the money he paid Harney was paid by the latter to Mr. Kerr. Harney, when he appeared before the committee, was confronted by Mr. Kerr, and by him asked to tell all he knew about the alleged bribery. Harney then swore point blank that he paid Mr. Kerr, in the spring of 1866, while he (Harney) was a doorkeeper in the House, and Mr. Kerr a member from Indiana, $450 for securing a commission for Greene, who lived at the time in New York; that he applied to Mr. Kerr because other members had made their army appointments; that he told him in his seat in the House that he expected to pay for the appointment; that at the second interview with Mr. Kerr at his room the latter said it was worth $500 if it was worth anything, but that $450 was all that Green could raise, $410 of which the latter paid to Harney and subsequently made up the full amount by a postal order for $40, and all of which Harney swears he paid to Mr. Kerr, who asked him for it ten days before the appointment was made, when he handed it over, he says, in the east corridor of the House to him. When Harney concluded Speaker Kerr was sworn, and made a brief statement, consisting of an emphatic denial of everything Harney swore to so far as it implicated him. He did not know Harney, the latter had never been to his room, and he never received a cent from him in any way.

J. DONALD CAMERON took the oath of office as Secretary of War on the 1st inst. Ex-Secretary Taft was at the same time sworn in as Attorney-general.

A WASHINGTON dispatch says there are intimations that, "should the men who are managing the Conkling movement fail to succeed, their second choice will be for Elihu B. Washburne."

THE Treasury department estimates that the customs receipts will fall short $10,000,000, and internal revenue receipts $4,000,000 below the estimates for the fiscal year, making a total deficit of $14,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30.

THE Iowa Republican convention indorsed Blaine for President, but left the delegates uninstructed....The Louisiana delegation to Cincinnati stands ten for Morton and six for Blaine....Democratic State conventions were held on the 31st ult. in Missouri, Tennessee, Maryland, Virginia and Alabama. In the Missouri convention an attempt to offer a resolution to instruct for Hendricks created great confusion, and it was not even allowed to be read. The delegates are said to be divided between Tilden and Hendricks. Tennessee indorsed Hendricks, but gave no instructions to the delegates. The Maryland delegation is said to be for Bayard first and Tilden second. The Virginia delegation is almost unanimous for Tilden. In case it is found the latter cannot secure the nomination they will unite on Hancock. The Alabama convention left their delegates uninstructed. They are said to be about equally divided between Tilden and Hendricks. Geo. S. Houston was renominated for Governor.... THE official announcement is made by the ocean cable, that Abdul Aziz, the Sultan of Turkey, has been dethroned, and that his nephew, Murad Effendi, who was the imperial heir presumptive, has been proclaimed Emperor. This change has not been unexpected. The popular feeling of opposition to Aziz, who is a weak-minded man and a reckless spendthrift, has been growing for some years, and either his voluntary abdication or his forced overthrow was only a question of time. The change of rulers is believed to be in the interests of peace. NOTES FROM THE CENTENNIAL.

[By Our Own Correspondent.]

Speaking of the practical, reminds me of the boomerang. For more than twenty years have I searched for this extraordinary weapon. In my different trips to the old world, I sought it, but, not hearing of it, nor seeing it, concluded it was a myth, and was used as an illustration by politicians. Such an one was using a boomerang—as we would say, "hoisting one on his own petard." It is said of this formidable weapon, that when hurled at an object by a native it moves along just above the ground with great rapidity, and after reaching its objective point, leaps as it were into mid-air, and thus poised for the moment takes a retrogressive movement in an air line for the point from which it was cast, thus making it as dangerous to the thrower, if inexperienced, as a heavily charged blunderbuss. It has been as great a puzzle to the savans and scientists as the calculating machine of Babbage. Four of these curious specimens of savage genius are to be seen in the department of Australia. There are seventy-two block and slab specimens of timber from Sydney. They also exhibit saddles, wools, tweeds, and shawls, none of which will compare with the American section, and coal seams twelve feet thick are shown as specimens from Hunter river district, northern coal fields of New South Wales. There are sixty-six collieries. They also exhibit preserved meats, candles, biscuits, condiments, ores of antimony and other minerals.

In a glass show case fourteen feet square are shown, on one side, the prismatic compass, transit, sextant and other instruments used by that intrepid navigator, Lieut. DeHaven, near the frigid wilds of Western Greenland; drawings and paintings of Arctic scenery and animal life, executed by himself, and the flag of the Advance, the ship in which he made his second voyage; the three other sides of the case contain relics of the expeditions of Hayes, Hall and Bradford; the flag that Wilkes took on his Antarctic expedition in the ship Peacock, the same flag being taken by Kane, Hayes and Hall, also, on their Arctic voyages; relics of Sir John Franklin's expedition, including portions of his vessel secured by Capt. Hall in his second expedition and brought back by him then, together with relics of Parry's voyage; the journals kept by Hall in his Polaris expedition, and a fac simile of the sledge made for Capt. Hall by "Esquimaux Joe."

Brazil has $3,000,000 in diamonds to display, but the United States, requiring a personal bond in amount double the invoice from the Commission, has declined, hence we will not see the brilliants.

The Bullock printing press prints 32,000 copies per hour.

The Portuguese have a handsome building one story high within, and two without.

In the British section there are eighty-five exhibitors of chemicals, and fourteen exhibitors of watches and chronometers. The latter timepieces were invented by John Arnold one hundred years ago.

The georama of Paris is about 10 feet square, is exposed to the weather, and unless taken out of the wet, will be as the "baseless fabric of a vision."

The Navy department of the United States, in the Government building, is arranged under nine heads: Ordnance, torpedoes, equipment, navigation, construction, yards and docks, medicine and surgery, provisions and clothing, steam engineering and naval observatory and Arctic relics.

Japan exhibits two vases six feet high and thirty inches in diameter, price $2,000 gold, small vases ten inches high, $30 in gold, white and blue china goods far below the English standard at fabulous prices; $50 in gold for a table worth $10 or $15. I thought these figures of a bonanza character, but when I saw a suit of buckskin—coat, vest and pants, trimmed with a few yards of silver lace, from Mexico, price, $1,000 gold, I threw up the sponge. Shades of the Aztecs and of Montezuma, where art ye?

The bijouterie of Japan, their lacquered ware, and straw goods are superior, and many articles are low enough, but, in their valuable articles, they are in the clouds. The prices they ask would impoverish the Tycoon did he become a purchaser.

In the Egyptian department $2,000 gold is asked for a silver antique set, worth possibly a few hundred dollars; a few pieces of sandal wood, $9 gold. If the Americans can stand these extortions, they are specimens of endurance to be wondered at. What do the readers of this letter think of a backgammon board, inlaid, $600 gold? The Egyptians have a sacred crocodile with them to palliate their excesses. I am happy to state he is stuffed.

One watch factory, American, shows 2,200 watches, representing six days, of ten hours each, of the employes.

A tack factory exhibits 2,000 varieties of tacks.

Strawberries will be displayed June 7. Raspberries July 3. Peaches, grapes, nuts, cereals, honey and wax, melons, horses, cattle and poultry will follow at different dates.

In addition to Gilmore's concerts, other musical bands will perform in different parts of the main building.

The French steamer brought the French, Belgian and Russian Judges of Centennial awards, and 400 tons of French exhibits.

There will be 5,000 free seats distributed throughout the grounds.

Tropical fruits from Bermuda were shown on the 18th inst. Michigan and New York are in the front rank of apple-growers.

The Committee on Concessions have determined to enforce contracts with restaurants, the leading feature of which was fair prices.

Oregon exhibits wheat reaped in ninety days after sowing in ground neither plowed nor harrowed.

It is said Queen Victoria will "put in an appearance" at the Exhibition.

But few children as yet are seen on the Exhibition grounds.

The Netherlands show carpets from the royal factory, which would fit a room eighteen feet square, $280. Haarlem shows a magnet of pounds; price $110. Rotterdam displays an exten- eighty-eight pounds, carries a weight of 500 sive assortment of fishing tackle. Amsterdam, pipes of the quaintest Dutch style, georamas of canals, maps, and a swing double-crane bridge, and a georama of the surface of the Zuyder Zee.

Bermuda has a piece of a xanthoxylon. It was taken from a stump by a British soldier of H. M. Fifty-third. It is of yellow wood, perfectly sound, and dates back to 1612. Also, from the island, black mangrove, rubber, olive, fiddle and other woods. Arrowroot is a long, yellow-looking root like the horse radish.

The Centennial stamped envelope is good anywhere in the United States.

A silver brick has arrived from Nevada 117 pounds in weight; value in gold $1,623.65. Its something to be a "brick."

The reduction of the admission fee is in debate. As Horace Greeley would have said, "If you are going to reduce, why don't you reduce?"

The Middle States people are farming and can't come. It is too early for the West and South. Wait until July, and then see the jam.

Grand competition between the chief military bands of America in the Centennial grounds July 5th. Details will soon be arranged and published.

It takes a general manager, one captain and aid, chief clerk, a chief inspector, twelve inspectors, 102 gate keepers, 2 special gate keepers, one chief and sixteen wagon gate keepers to pass the masses in.

An iron bank vault is on exhibition, price $25,000; 10x16 feet, 14 feet high, weighs 35 tons, 4 doors and 20 bolts to each, lining steel, plate 2¼ inches, 2 feet of filing, fire proof. The same makers put one up in Baltimore 25x35, weight 200 tons. Farrel & Co., show a magnificent circular safe.

A beautiful display of ornaments are exhibited from Florida.

The American Bible Society. Resolved, "We endorse the action of the Centennial Commissioners in refusing to open the Exhibition on Sunday."

Bartholdi and Rochambeau have arrived, the former a famous French architect, the latter the descendant of a stock whose sympathies were with the Colonies in their struggle for independence.

In spite of the reports to the contrary, if you can come to the Exhibition you will find no difficulty in securing comfortable quarters and at low rates. If you wish rooms en-suite on first floor, and call for pate de fois gras, with Chambertin and Lafitte, you will find the bill as large as if in Paris at the Mille Colon, or Vie Vefour or Troisfreres. The latter is branched here.

THE FRANKING PRIVILEGE.

A Bill for its Partial Restoration Introduced in the Senate.

A bill has been reported to the United States Senate by Mr. Paddock, of Nebraska, from the Committee on Post-offices and Postroads, looking to a restoration of the franking privilege. The bill provides that it shall be lawful to transmit through the mails free of postage, any letters, packages, or other matters relating exclusively to the business of the Government of the United States, provided that every such letter or package to entitle it to pass free, shall bear over the words "official business," an indorsement showing also the name of the department or the bureau whence transmitted. Any person making use of such official envelope to avoid the payment of postage on private matter shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and subject to a fine of $300. Senators and representatives in Congress and delegates from Territories as well as the Secretary of the Senate and Clerk of the House of Representatives may send and receive through the mail free of postage letters, documents, packages, and other matter relating exclusive to public business, provided that each senator, representative, delegate, or officer, as aforesaid, shall write upon such letter, document, and other matter so sent by him his name with the proper designation of the office he holds. The penalties prescribed for violating this section are the same as provided for a violation of the former section in regard to department officers, provided that the penalty herein shall not be construed to interfere with the constitutional power of each house to punish or expel a member.

Blaine and Mulligan.

[Washington (June 1) Cor. Chicago Journal.]

The Judiciary Committee room was the scene of a most sensational event on the opening of the Blaine investigation this morning. The witness Mulligan, before proceeding with his testimony, asked to make a statement. He said that, on arriving here, he and Fisher had received a written invitation from Mr. Blaine to call at his house, but he declined to go. Fisher went. Blaine then called on him (witness) and begged him not to tell what he knew yesterday. He came again and made the same request, asking him to remember his family. He asked to see certain private letters of his (Blaine's), and asked witness what he intended to do with them. Witness told Mr. Blaine he would print them if they tried to break him down, as they were threatening to do. Blaine then begged to be allowed to read them, and said he would return them as soon as read. After reading, he refused to return them, and had them yet, and witness asked that he might be obliged by the committee to return them.

Mulligan produced a memorandum-book, in which were recorded the transactions between Fisher, Blaine, and various parties in Maine.

Mr. Blaine was sworn and said in regard to his interview with Mulligan, that the extravagant words witness attributed to him were fabricated. He did protest strongly against his private letters being printed, and Mulligan had stated that he intended to make them public if any one attempted to discredit him or impugn his motives. Mr. Blaine held that witness had no right to those letters, and so he declined to give them back. He had submitted them to two friends, and read them all. With one exception, they did not bear on the subject of the inquiry. He intended to submit them to two of the best lawyers in Washington, and to be guided by them as to whether he should produce them.

A Student's Freak.

A disgraceful and outrageous occurrence took place at Fort Edward on the night of the 11th inst., between the hours of 12 and 1 o'clock. A number of the students, as supposed, belonging to the Institute, secured the old field-piece which has done duty in that town for the past 100 years on all Fourth of July celebrations, and, placing it in front of the Institute building, loaded it up to the muzzle with powder and sod. A rope was then attached to the bell on the Institute building, and, all being ready, the gun was touched off and the bell violently rung. To describe the sensation which was produced and the fear expressed by the neighboring citizens, who were awakened from a sound sleep, would be impossible. Suffice it to say that simultaneously with the deafening report made by the discharge of the cannon, an explosion occurred, the gun flying into a thousand pieces, and the window-lights contained in the front portion of the Institute and in the neighboring dwelling-houses disappearing as if by magic. The damage done to property in the vicinity is estimated to be considerable.—Troy (N. Y.) Press.

Missouri Prison Life.

Uncle Billy McKee and Col. Con Maguire are making themselves free and easy in jail. They occupied, respectively, cells 98 and 100 last night, 99 being used as a store-room for the comforts with which they have provided themselves. They retired quite late and were up very early this morning. Not being locked up like other criminals, they came out on the balcony, and tilting back in cane-seated chairs, spent a few hours in reading the morning papers, receiving callers, and discussing the situation. About noon they retired to their cells to rest or to meditate, and did not make their appearance for some time subsequently. A contract has been made with a restaurant, under which they are supplied with regular meals, composed of all the delicacies of the market. A boy has been hired to run errands for them, and a colored man has been employed to come every morning and make up their beds and set their apartments to rights.—St. Louis Letter.

SUNDAY SPORTS IN NEVADA.

A Bull-Terrier Fights a Wild-Cat—Defeat of the Feline.

(From the Virginia Chronicle.)

Yesterday afternoon the novel contest described below took place at the race course:

GRAND WILD-CAT CHASE.

A MATCH HAS BEEN MADE
Between Bing Williams'
BULL-TERRIER DOG "PADDY" AND A WILDCAT,
—At the—
RACE TRACK, SUNDAY AFTERNOON, MAY 7, 1876,
AT TWO O'CLOCK.

The terms of the match are as follows: Williams bets one hundred dollars that his dog will catch the cat and kill him in thirty minutes after being let loose from his cage. If the dog turns four times he loses the match.

MATT BEAN, Proprietor.

At about half-past 3 o'clock the track and stand were crowded with nearly 3,000 spectators, and a few minutes afterward the fight began. The end of the cage containing the cat was knocked in, and the bull-dog made a vicious dash into the box, bringing the wild cat out hanging on to his head and nose with its claws.

For the first five minutes the fight was tolerably even, but at the end of that time the cat was so disabled that it keeled over and fought the remainder of the battle on its back and sides. The tactics of the bull-dog were rather scientific. At first he worried the cat around the forelegs and foreshoulders for about four minutes; then he tackled the head and upper shoulders, and finally the back and breast.

After about twelve minutes' fighting the dog frequently stopped to catch his wind, meanwhile walking in a circle around the prostrate cat to prevent her escaping. During some of these intervals the dog's backers seized the opportunity and sponged him. Severl of the outsiders, sympathizers of the cat, yelled out vociferously, "Sponge the cat!" But evidently the cat did not understand the charitable kindness, and met the sponging with a vicious clawing and spitting.

At last the dog satisfied himself with getting a bite wherever he could, and in twenty minutes from the commencement of the fight the wild cat gave up the ghost. It was hard to tell what bite killed her. She seemed to have died from a loss of blood and receiving too many bites all over, administered too viciously.

The bull-dog never turned at all during the fight, but stuck to his post as a bull-dog generally sticks. At the end of the battle it was hard to tell whether he was a dog or a cat. During the first five minutes of the fight the cat had clawed and bitten him fearfully. His head and back were streaming with blood, and he was scratched all over.

Knew His Business.

The witness had served in one of the Indiana regiments, and had come home from the wars with both arms shot off. He lost one arm at Fort Donaldson and the other at Lookout Mountain. When he came forward to testify the clerk commenced to administer the oath. "You solemnly swear——." "Stop! stop!" interfered the judge (newly installed) with overpowering dignity. "The witness will hold up his right hand when he is sworn." "Your honor," replied the clerk, meekly, "the man has no right hand." "Then let him hold up his left hand." "If your honor will remember, the witness has no left hand, either. He had the misfortune to lose them both in battle." Perhaps the clerk thought by this last bit of information to bring the judge down from his height of displeasure; but he reckoned without his host. "Then tell him to hold up his right leg. A witness cannot be sworn in this court without holding up something!——Silence! all of you! This court knows the law, and will maintain it." The witness was sworn on one leg.

Curious Inventions.

Among the ridiculous patents that have been granted at Washington are a trap for catching tape-worms, a combined plow and cannon, a patent brick to be tied to a cow's tail to keep her from switching her natural appendage, a house on rollers that deaden the shock of an earthquake, and a combined trunk and house. The person afflicted with tape-worm starves himself until the worm, attracted by the delicious bait in the trap, is readily caught. The combined plow and cannon is for frontier farmers, and is intended for mowing down the savages. The combined trunk and house is adapted to persons of small means, and can be extended or contracted, as they may have occasion to use a house or a trunk.

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC.

We Three.

Ah! the apple blossoms were so rosy and white,
And so sweet, oh, so sweet, in the glad June light,
And it seemed that the wide world must be all bright.

When under the boughs of a quaint apple tree
My two darling sisters sat idly with me,
While we plucked at the daisies and talked, we three.

Dainty white petals a zephyr-let fall,
And laden with perfume they fell on us all,
Or crept to the foot of the ivy-draped wall.

And gaily we guessed what our future would be,
What for Kate it would bring, what for Mary and me,
And we sat till the twilight came on, we three.

Black eyes and blue eyes and hair all astray,
And gladsome young voices with so much to say,
A star in my life is that one vanished day.

'Twas a summer long gone, but present with me,
And strangers sit under the old apple tree,
And we meet 'neath its branches no more, we three.

Why our hopes and our plans were thwarted, God knows,
Why I gathered the thorn when seeking the rose,
Why the tender young lives were brought to a close.

But I dream of a time that surely must be,
When under the boughs of a heavenly tree,
We meet to be parted no more, we three.
—Rochester Democrat.

Around the Farm.

NEWLY planted trees should have as careful cultivation as corn or potatoes.

AN old New Englander once remarked to us when we advised him to pinch back his blackberry bushes, to keep them within bounds and make them bear better, "That's so. I can remember when I lived down at Dartmouth, that we always found the most blackberries on the bushes that the old cow had browsed down."

SEEING a piece about raising canary seed in Maine, I thought I would tell you what I know about it. I sowed one cupful on the 4th day of June last to try it, and raised three quarts of good nice seed, gathering it the middle of September. I sowed it in one corner of my garden, where the ground was rich.—Maine Farmer.

THE number of swine in the country has been very much reduced, within a few years, by the ravages of "hog cholera" in the West and Southwest; therefore it behooves farmers to take good care of their breeding sows, give them warm, dry quarters, and save and rear all the pigs possible, for pork can hardly fail to bring paying prices for a few years to come.—Rural Home.

THE distance between the farmers and the fancy breeders of short-horn cattle is constantly widening. The farmers can't and won't pay the long prices asked for line-bred cattle of fashionable families; besides, and what is perhaps of more consequence, they can and do buy good cattle, thoroughbreds, at very moderate prices. The recent sales in Iowa demonstrate the ever-increasing demand in this direction.

A FARMER in Maine says: For removing the clusters of eggs of the tent caterpillar from trees, I have found nothing so convenient as a small piece of steel in the shape of a letter Y with the edges filed sharp and the shank driven into the end of a pole of suitable length for reaching the eggs from the ground. To use it, place the scissors like points of the steel under the twig containing the eggs, and by giving the pole a twist in the hand the extremity of the twig is easily broken off and falls to the ground.

BONE spavin can be cured in all stages. Primary can be cured by a simple blister compound of bin-iodide of mercury, two drachms; lard, one ounce. Secondary, by a mild scarification of the enlarged osseous deposit, and then applying the former blister on the scarified part. Purulent, by severely firing the deposit, and sprinkling the surface with bi-chloride of mercury finely powdered, which forms an intense inflammation, and the said inflammation absorbs two-thirds of the deposit, and destroys the entire lameness.

THE veterinary surgeon of one of the chief railways of Paris has invented, for the use of its working horses, a cheap and simple self irrigating machine for the feet in case of an inflammatory ailment. A box containg four cocks is placed on the animal's back, by means of a skeleton-sort of saddle; an india-rubber tube communicates between this box and a vessel placed above the manger, containing a curative solution; from each cock in the box resting on the back of the animal is a tube descending to each fetlock, terminating in a kind of gaiter, inside of which is a perforated plate, so as to allow the solution, or simple cold water, to fall in a continuous fine spray over the sprain, etc.

I SENT a yoke of oxen into the woods lumbering, and when they came home I found them alive with those big blue lice. I went to the village and bought a ten-cent bar of soap and seventeen cents worth of carbolic acid in crystals; cut up the soap fine, and put it on the stove until all disolved. Then I added just enough water to dissolve the acid, after which I mixed thoroughly with the soap. I removed the soap from the stove, to become hard, and then took a piece, perhaps two inches square, dissolved in five or six quarts of warm water, and with a good sponge I washed those cattle from head along the back to tail. Two applications effectually cleaned them out.—Cor. Country Gentleman.

About the House.

DRY bread can be utilized by placing it in the soup in which fresh beef has been boiled, for a few moments. Then dish up for the table.

EGG spoons get tarnished by the sulphur in the egg's uniting with silver. This tarnish is a sulphuret of silver, and may be removed by rubbing with wet salt or ammonia.

SURPRISE CAKE.—One cup sugar, one-half cup of flour, three eggs, three tablespoonfuls melted butter, two tablespoonfuls sweet milk, one and one-half teaspoonfuls baking powder. Bake quick in patty tins.

IN washing glass never use soap; wash off the dirt with clean warm water. After the glass is dry, rub a little paste of whiting and water in the center of each glass; with another cloth rinse over the glass, then rub it with a dry cloth till it shines like crystal.

HOUSEKEEPERS who do their own work avoid much inconvenience by always keeping one or two kinds of pastry in the house made rich enough to keep some time, so that if unexpected company finds them with a small stock of food (as it is apt to in warm weather), they will not have to cook everything for a meal.

SQUASH PIE.—Season highly some neck-mutton chops and place them in a dish in layers with plenty of sliced apple (sweetened) and chopped onions; cover with a good suet crust and bake. When done pour all the gravy out at the side, remove the fat and flavor with mushroom catsup. Pour it back in the pie through a hole in the center.

CHILDREN'S PUDDING.—Cut up a loaf of stale bread the day before it is required, put to soak in a pan of cold water; when going to mix squeeze the water through a colander; put the bread in a pan with two ounces of suet chopped fine, two tablespoonfuls of flour, some grated ginger and a little mixed spice; beat well up with a fork, mix half a pound of treacle (not golden syrup) with a little warm milk, then stir all together and boil three hours in cloth, basin or mould. This will make a large pudding much liked by children; it is cheap and wholesome.

HAVING found by experimenting a valuable recipe for exterminating bedbugs, I would like to give other housekeepers the benefit of said discovery. Take common mercantile alcohol and add all the gum camphor it will dissolve; then wet the infested places with this liquid. It will not only kill the bugs, but will destroy the vitality of the eggs if they are once thoroughly saturated. This method saves time and vexation, is easy of application and is safe in handling. I once dropped kerosene on a bedbug and watched the result. After a brief period of insensibility and apparent death, it revived and seemed as lively as ever.

Austria and the Eastern Question.

There is one phase of the Eastern question, so far as it affects the relations of Turkey to the great powers, which has not been sufficiently considered, and which affords a very conclusive reason why Austria has taken such a lively interest in the Herzegovinian insurrection, and why she has succeeded in not involving herself in the contest. Every step she has taken has been in favor of a compromise between the Turks and their Sclavic provinces, in the interests of peace, and in opposition to any increase of Austrian territory from the Sclavic provinces. The reason for this has not been clearly apparent to the general reader. The Hungarian population is composed of two distinct classes of people, the Sclaves and the Magyars. The Magyars are the aristocracy of Hungary. They are the landowners. They control the elective franchise. They are represented in the Hungarian Government. They are the ruling class, bearing the same relations to the Sclaves as the English ruling class to the Irish. They are not the original peasantry of the country, but a more recent race, which came into Hungary very much as the Turks came into Turkey, and from nearly the same localities in Asia. They number about four and a half millions, and, although numerically inferior to the Sclaves, being in about the proportion of two to three, yet they are the literary, landed, moneyed, and political class, and rule the Sclaves by virtue of this superiority, just as Paris rules the French peasantry. The Magyars, as a matter of course, do not want the Sclavic population increased, since it might prove fatal to their power and influence. If the northern portions of Turkey should be annexed to Austria, the Sclaves would far outnumber the Magyars. Consequently, the latter have resolutely, and thus far successfully, prevented any extension of the Austrian Empire. In this opposition they have had the countenance and encouragement of the Germans in Austria, who have been acting for the very same reason—that they do not want to be overshadowed by the preponderance of Sclaves. The Sclaves, on the other hand, both in Hungary and the Turkish provinces, have worked desperately to secure the annexation of Bosnia, Herzegovina, Montenegro, and Servia to Austria, and it was one of the propositions which was submitted at the Berlin conference of the Emperors of Russia, Austria, and Germany and their Chancellors, but without avail. The agreement, however, is fatal to that proposition for the present at least, and the Magyars and German-Austrians have triumphed. The great powers have conceded the reforms asked for by the insurgents and will demand that the Sultan shall enforce them, and this without any extension of the Austrian dominions.—Chicago Tribune.

Statistics of the Whisky Prosecutions.

The following are the results of the first year's prosecution of the whisky ring, the raid having begun the first week in May. The last returns of money for property seized and in proces of condemnation and sale are necessarily slow. The final collection of at least a million more than is now being proceeded against is assured:

Value of property seized	$1,500,000
Value of assessments	1,400,000
Suits on official bonds	250,000
Total	$3,150,000

From the above sources, the cash turned into the treasury to May 1, 1876, amounts to $600,000.

Criminal indictments were as follows: Distillers and rectifiers, 95; supervisors, 2; revenue agents, 5; collectors, 2; deputy collectors, 8; gaugers, 30; storekeepers, 15; other person, 19; total, 176; convictions and pleas of guilty, 110; absconded to foreign countries, 12; tried and acquitted, 17.

The total expense to the Treasury department in detecting frauds and preparing cases for the court has not exceeded $25,000.—Washington Telegram.

A SIX-POUND cannon ball was dug up in Charlestown, Mass., recently. It was probably fired by one of the British frigates at the time of the landing of the British troops to attack the American intrenchments on Bunker Hill on the morning of the 17th of June, 1775.

PASSING EVENTS.

THE British representative in Zanzibar has negotiated a new treaty with the Sultan of that country, in which provision is made for the entire abolition of the slave trade in his dominions.

THE Spiritualistic theory is that Piper, the Boston belfry murderer, was possessed by the spirit of a big, burly negro, a former slave, who was whipped to death for a gross insult upon his white mistress, and that his three murders, of which one is to be discovered, were energized by this demon.

BEFORE the next Presidential elections, which will take place on the same day, Nov. 7, in all of the thirty-seven States of the Union, seven of the States will hold elections for State officers. In September, Arkansas, Vermont and Maine hold elections. In October, Ohio, Indiana, West Virginia and Georgia, hold elections. Pennsylvania, which formerly held her State election in October, now, like most of the States, holds it in November along with that for Presidential electors.

HISTORY does not encourage the thought that the Philadelphia Exposition will pay. The first World's Fair was held at London in 1851. It was the only international exhibition that has paid expenses. The Vienna Exhibition cost $9,000,000 more than the receipts. The Grand Exposition at Paris, in 1867, perhaps, in most respects, the most brilliant and complete Exhibition that has been held, did not pay the expenses, and the French Government provided for the anticipated deficit by appropriating 12,000,000 francs for the purpose.

BOSTON celebrates the centennial year by demolishing the Old South church, one of the few revolutionary edifices left in that city. It was in this church that many of the greatest meetings of the patriots of '76 were held; and it was used as a barrack by the British troops during the occupation of Boston. Unfortunately it stands, or rather did stand, on a very valuable piece of land which is wanted for business purposes. The religious society which owned the property has built a fine new temple; and down goes the old one!

WOMAN'S pluck receives a notable illustration in the case of a Holyoke (Mass.) widow. Her husband had been sick two years and died, leaving her with two children and a debt of $400. She went to work in a mill and never lost a day. Besides doing her week's work she took in washing for two families. Her children she placed in school, and has paid their expenses, receiving no help from any one. By honest hard work she paid off the debt of $400, and, besides supporting and educating two children, has put by $400 against a time of need.

THE refusal of Great Britain to join the other powers in urging the Porte to accept the propositions of the Berlin conference, and the evident reluctance to accept them at Constantinople, make it very doubtful whether they will form the basis of an adjustment of difficulties. To add to the embarrassment, the insurgents decline to agree to an armistice. They want no truce; they assert that Turkey will take advantage of it to move up troops and get in positions disadvantageous to them. The prospects for peace, therefore, can not be said to be encouraging.

A PARIS correspondent of the New York Times writes an interesting letter from that city in which he attempts to show where the French people's money goes. It will be a matter of very general surprise in this country that the most of the money goes for the army in time of peace. The total estimate for 1877 is 2,667,000,000 francs. Of this sum the war minister asks for his department alone 536,000,000 francs, and the marine 186,000,000 more, in all 722,000,000 francs, while all the other departments together have but 473,000,000, the balance being absorbed by the public debt, interest, dotations and internal revenue service.

MR. WILLIAM HENRY HURLBERT, the new editor of the New York World, is the younger brother of Gen. Stephen Augustus Hurl*but*, who was quite distinguished in the Seminole war, was a brigadier-general in the late civil war, was Minister to the States of Colombia in 1869–'73, and is now a Republican member of Congress from the Fourth district of Illinois. While he, as his father did before him, insisted upon the spelling of the name as Hurl*but*, William Henry's finer instincts insist upon the old English name, from which the family traces, of Hurl*bert*. Those who wish to address letters to the new editor are warned accordingly.

WHATEVER may be thought of Mr. Eads' plan for deepening the channel of the Mississippi at its mouth, the fact that the steamship Hudson, of 1,872 tons, one of the largest ships of the Cromwell line, has sailed through his jetties and safely crossed the South Pass bar settles the question of its practicability. The work is only partially completed. It will take several weeks for the water compressed into its narrowed channel to wash out a deep and excellent passage-way. But the river is already doing its part of the work, and the passage of the Hudson, which draws fifteen feet of water, naturally raises the expectations of New Orleans to a high pitch.

IT is stated from Washington that the Cabinet in directing its attention to some extent to the situation of affairs in the Black Hills country. Assurances have been given that an influential band of Sioux are willing to relinquish their domain there and remove to reservations in the Indian Territory. All correspondence in that particular has been referred to the Secretary of the Interior, who will give instructions to the agents of the Interior department regarding the proper negotiation in that direction. Should this portion of the Sioux nation positively signify a willingness to settle in the Indian Territory, the hope is expressed that that entire formidable part of the hostile Indian race may soon be domiciled in that Territory.

BISHOP THIRLWALL of England, who recently died, could speak the English language and read the Latin when he was three years old; at the age of four he was proficient in Greek; at seven he was a writer of sermons; at eight he was plunging through the fields of English literature, and at eleven he composed a large and learned satirical poem. So we learn from the sketch of his career in the April number of the Edinburgh Review. Fortunately for him, nature dealt more kindly with him after his eleventh year, as he pursued his way through life. If his intellect and knowledge had kept on growing at the rate they did from his second year to his twelfth, he would have been such a prodigy by the time he was eighteen or twenty, that his soul must have wilted with the sigh of Alexander the Great for other worlds to conquer.

THE hot season has broken over the West Indies, and Cuba remains unconquered by the Spanish troops. The insurgents are more aggressive than ever before, and are constantly encroaching upon the secured Spanish positions. Meanwhile the Island Government, under the Spanish Gen. Jovellar, is endeavoring to extricate itself from financial embarrassment, but without success, and having failed to collect an income tax of thirty per cent. has about decided to increase the export duty on sugar and tobacco. This will oppress and demoralize the producers still more than heretofore, and not strengthen the loyal sentiment. Gen. Jovellar is himself tired of the complications, and desires to return to Spain. There is no money in the treasury, and gold is quoted at 227. Will the Cuban struggle ever end, and in whose favor? are questions that seem no nearer an answer to-day than at this time last year.

Does this Hit You?

It is possible that some one who reads the title of this article, says the New England Journal of Education, may find himself guilty of failing to pronounce the ei and eh in shun. I find that my lady friend, who is very precise in her language, will persist in accenting "etiquette" on the first instead of the last syllable. My good minister, who has the greatest aversion to anything wrong, was greatly surprised when I mildly suggested to him that "aspirant" should be accented on the penult, while my musical niece mortified me the other day by pronouncing "finale" in two syllables. I heard my geological friend explaining the "subsidances" of the earth's crust, but he should have accented the second instead of the first syllable. The same mistake happened the other day to my friend, the president of the reform society, who spoke of the "vagaries" of certain people by accenting the first instead of the second syllable. He also announced that I would deliver an "address" that evening, but I knew it was not polite to tell him to accent the last syllable. My boy says he left school at "recess," accenting the first syllable, and he was loth to believe that, whatever the meaning of the word, it should be accented on the final syllable. Then my friend, the president of the debating club, who is a great student of "Cushing's Manual," tells us that a motion to adjourn takes the "precedence," by accenting the first instead of the second syllable. My other lady friend says that she lives in a house having a "cupelow." She should consult the dictionary for that word. But I will close by remarking that my legal friend, who is very scholarly, always accents "coadjutor" on the second instead of the third, where it rightly belongs.

Follow up the vertical column of the year to its intersection with the horizontal column in which the month is contained, where will be found the day of the week on which the first day of the given month falls in the given year, now use the horizontal column of the days of the week that has this day of the week on the left under the number of the first of the month. For example: At the intersection of the December and 1900 is Sunday, and as Sunday is the first on the left in the fourth column, we use that column and find that Christmas, the 25th, is on Wednesday. By continuing the columns of the years backward or forward, being careful to carry every leap-year ahead one column, the day of any date may be found. The January and February on the left should be used for leap-years only.

Trees and Rain.

The bulletin of the Torrey Botanical Club contains a suggestive paragraph in reference to the influence of trees upon rain and atmospheric moisture, as shown by the experience of the island of Santa Cruz, in the West Indies. This island is said to have been a garden of freshness, beauty, and fertility twenty years ago; it was covered with woods, trees were everywhere abundant, and rains were profuse and frequent. The recent visit of a gentleman who had known the island in its palmier days revealed a lamentable change, one-fourth of the island having become an utter desert. The forests and trees had been cut away, rain-falls had ceased, and the process of desication, begining at one end of the island, had advanced gradually and irresistibly upon the land, until for seven miles it had become as dry and barren as the sea-shore. Houses and plantations had been abandoned, and the advance of desolation was watched by the people, wholly unable to prevent it, but knowing almost to a certainty the time when their own habitations, their gardens and fresh fields would be a part of the waste. Indeed, the whold island seemed doomed to become a desert. This sad result is owing entirely, according to the belief of the inhabitants, to the destruction of the trees upon the island some years ago.—Popular Science Monthly for June.

THREE years ago Rosita, the thrifty mining town in Southern Colorado, was a "howling wilderness," with not a prospect hole anywhere around. Now it contains 400 houses and 1,500 inhabitants.

NOTES ON TEXAS.

Ponies, Doves, Partridges, Mocking-Birds and Black-Birds—The Cuisine.

[From the Courier-Journal.]

TEXAS is emphatically the land of ponies and doves. There are more of both than I have ever seen anywhere else. The former are small, rugged, of variegated color, and vicious. They are inexpensive, selling, according to and size and quality, at from $4 to $10, even $25 dollars. The doves abound. They build their nests in the prairies (where the trees are scarce), on the ground, and between the rails of the fences. I saw four nests in one fence corner, and more than twenty in one small post oak. Numerous partridges, still in flocks, whirred across the road especially in the mesquite country. This favorite little bird is said to be found by the hundreds of thousands in the country between San Antonio and the Rio Grande—a flock, a friend told me, under every mesquite bush, and the bushes close together. I saw a few chaparral cocks, splendid-looking fellows, the color of a prairie chicken, somewhat larger, and with a long tail. He is almost as fleet of foot as an ostrich, flies reluctantly, and but for short distances. His safety against his enemies lies in the density of the cover he keeps, and his speed when found in open ground. His wings don't appear to be of any special use to him, farther than to enable him to mount the brush, which he leaves behind him with astonishing celerity. The mocking bird is abundant, as is also a bird called here the bird of paradise, a beautiful little fellow with an extravagantly long tail, which really seems to impede his flight. Add about six inches of tail feathers to a small mocking bird, and give him a dull, white breast, and you have this chap.

Black-birds by the thousands at times darkened the air, and crowded the heels of the plowman, while the upland plover was to be seen in all the newly-plowed land and throughout the prairies. No one who has not eaten this delicious bird at this season in Texas can have any idea of what a delicacy it is. He is hunted in buggies or open wagons, it being impossible to get sufficiently near him either on foot or on horseback.

A word of San Antonio. I took supper in a Mexican eating house. You never ate enchilada did you? I hope you never will. You never ate tamallis, did you? Well, don't. An enchilada looks not unlike an ordinary flannel cake rolled on itself and covered with molasses. The ingredients which go to make it up are pepper, lye, hominy, pepper, onions chopped fine, pepper, grated cheese, and pepper. The hominy is first beaten into a paste or dough, and this is flattened to about the thickness of an ordinary batter cake, and then turned several times upon itself, the pepper, onions, pepper, cheese and pepper being placed between the folds, and over all is poured a sauce or gravy of pepper. In point of looks, the enchilada is, as I have intimated, not uninviting; in point of taste, it is a cross between bicarbonate of soda and capsicum.

The tamallis, when placed on the table, presented the appearance of a lot of huge shuck cigarettes which had been soaked in water. They were composed of the same lye-hominy paste, shaped into cylinders a little larger than and about as long as your finger, containing some kind of forced meat. Each cylinder is wrapped and then boiled in a corn shuck and served in this envelope. A friend who was with me, and who declared he was not particularly fond of the dish, though he often ate it, soon had a pile of wet shucks by his plate six inches high. I think he ate a dozen of the things. I was satisfied with a small part of one. The tamallis tasted to me very much as I suppose boiled maccaroni, thickened with bread soda, would do. My opinion is that no man can eat enchilada and tamallis long and remain honest.

The three staples in Mexican cookery, as I observed it, are pepper, corn and pepper; the corn is sandwiched between the pepper. The corn is first husked by being soaked in lye or lime water, and then briskly rubbed and beaten on a flat stone, a process which produces a paste or dough, or meal, meaner than any lye hominy in Indianapolis.

How to Make a Valuable Receipt-Book.

Every housekeeper should have her very own receipt-book—a book of her own creation, of gradual growth and proved excellence, and we propose to show our lady readers how to make one. In the first place buy a blank-book, and write your name and date on the first leaf. Divide the book into as many different departments as you wish, heading each page with the department to which it belongs, as follows: Receipts or cleaning; receipts for soups; receipts for cooking meats; receipts for cake, and so on through family cooking. Then comes cooking for the sick, care of the sick, and all the various things that are a part of woman's duty, and for which, unfortunately, there is no school but experience. Number your pages if they are not numbered in the beginning, and make an index, leaving blank spaces in the index to correspond with blank pages between departments which you do not expect to fill immediately. Write down under these different heads every receipt which you have actually tried, or the result of which you have seen in the houses of your friends, and enter the page in the index.

The Art of Killing Made Easy.

The Paris correspondent of the London Standard says: "The art of killing made easy has made great progress of late years, but nowhere, perhaps, more than in France. The guillotine is already a very different object from what it was when it left the hands of its learned inventor, and it promises in time to become such a complete and attractive piece of mechanicism that condemned men may ultimately embrace it, if not with joy, at all events with a kind of curiosity and confidence. The high and mighty personage in France known as l'executeur des hautes œuvres—in plainer English, the public executioner—has just added another important modification to the fatal French instrument of death, by which it will be entirely self-acting. He has invented a few mysterious grooves which so work that as soon as the sufferer falls or is pushed on to the bascule, his head runs into the lunette, and the knife comes down the next second. Really, French criminals cannot complain of the kind attention shown to them by the powers that be."

INDIANA ITEMS.

JOHN [illegible], a butcher, was accidentally drowned at South Bend a few days ago.

THE Crawfordsville Star mentions the finding of the skeletons of three Indians—two adults and a child—on the farm of John Romley, near that place.

A LAD named Schlesten, fifteen years old, fell from a moving train at Lawrenceburg one day last week. He was frightfully mangled, and died the same evening.

IN Harrison county, about 10 o'clock one morning last week, S. T. Babcock was taken from his house, tied to a tree and brutally whipped with hickory gads. His father, hearing his cries, came to the place, and identified several of the Ku-klux, two of whom were arrested and brought to Corydon to undergo preliminary examination.

LEVI LEAKY, a well-known citizen of Dudley township, Henry county, who has been a well-to-do farmer, having sold his farm and obtained his wife's signature to the deed, has taken her half sister, a certain widow Scott, and departed to Iowa, leaving his wife in destitute circumstances. Much indignation is expressed at Leaky's conduct, who is an old man and a grandfather.

LAST Saturday night a man giving his name as John Horning was found beside the track of the Cincinnati, Lafayette and Chicago railroad, near St. Anne, Ill., with one of his legs crushed from the ankle to the knee, besides severe bruises to his body. On his person was a silver badge of the Grand Army of the Republic, with his name engraved thereon. All that could be learned of him was from his murmurings, that his father's name is Martin Horning, and lives in Madison, Ind. He is supposed to have fallen from the night train.

THE celebrated Wall murder case has come to a brief termination. Wall is a colored preacher, who murdered John Cronkheit, at Fort Wayne, on the 2d of last July. The first trial lasted fourteen days, and resulted in a death sentence. The case was carried to the Supreme court, which granted a new trial. Wall then secured a change of venue from Judge Borden to Judge Slack, of Huntington. Afterward, motion was made of a change of venue to another county. Judge Slack granted the change of venue and sent the case to Whitley county to be tried in September. Afterward, Wall's attorneys offered to withdraw the motion and put in a plea of guilty of murder in the second degree. The State's-attorney accepted the proposition, a plea of guilty was made, and Judge Slack then sentenced Wall to the Michigan City penitentiary for life.

THE other night, at Kokomo, while the guard was asleep, a boa constrictor seven feet long escaped from the side show of Sells Bros.' circus. Its escape was not noticed, and the side-show drove to Peru. Early the next morning one of the many boys who visited the grounds to pick up lost trinkets discovered his snakeship in a small pool of water hissing violently. The boy seized a club and beat it until he thought it quite dead, and then he took it to the high school, to Prof. McClain's class in natural sciences. During the afternoon the snake revived, and the Professor congratulated himself on securing such a rare specimen, and a live one at that. But his anticipations were blasted when one of the proprietors of the show arrived in the evening from Peru and proved his ownership to the coveted prize. The snake was given up and taken to the Kokomo house to await transportation. Here it was stolen by some boys, who returned it, but too late for shipment on the evening train. In the morning, however, the much-worried showman got away with his snake, which cost him a cool $160 only about two months ago.

ONLY six persons have been hanged in Connecticut for thirty years, only two of these for offenses outside the prison walls, the other four having murdered prison officials.

THE Baltimore Sun recently offered a list of prizes for stories, and the first five prizes were carried off by female writers, and only one, the smallest prize, was awarded to a male.

PATERSON, N. J., organized a new hose company, the hose company organized several fires, and several fine young men will go where they can't "light up on them hose" no more.

W. Y. MCCOLLUM is among the visitors registered at Philadelphia. This must be the Mr. What You McCollum we so often hear spoken of in ordinary conversation.—New York Commercial.

AN extraordinary shoal of whales visited Kirkwall bay, in Scotland, the other day, and immediately a great many boats with a view to capturing them. Altogether, sixty whales were driven ashore.

THE Graphic says: "Papers still call Mrs. Livermore a 'lecturess' and Mrs. Stowe an 'authoress.' Why not Mrs. Van Cott a ministress, Mme. Demorest a dress-makess, and Ida Lewis a sailoress?"

ARINORI MORI, formerly Japanese Minister at Washington, is now living at Toki, as Second Minister of State for Foreign Affairs, and Judge Bingham regards him as the shrewdest of Japanese statesmen.

April 29, 1875.

Strawberries are gettin ripe in this vicinity.

The clover crops will be immense. Timothy also promises well.

The Fourth of July in Auburn will be a big affair. Remember this.

Nothing like dignity. The Christian Witness speaks of a burglary where the burglars used a "James" to pry open the door.

The lady who wants her parasol in the style must get the canopy. Next week currency will describe the shape of a canopy.

The celebration on the Fourth of July will undoubtedly be a big thing. It is the last Centennial this generation is likely to see.

The Cincinnati Commercial says that Philadelphia restaurants clear forty cents on every three cents worth of butter eaten by a customer.

A Pennsylvania hotel which would have once sold for $6,000 cash was traded off for a span of horses the other day. You can't most always tell.

The third visitor let into the Centennial was tight. Any fear that the exhibition wouldn't show every phrase of human nature is now banished.

After stating that a man was "reddled with bullets," a St. Louis telegraph operator supposes that the victim was badly wounded. Wouldn't wonder a bit.

The Danbury News man's cure for warts kills the person who owns the wart, but there's nothing like having a receipt that produces some valuable effect.

"What is muscular rheumatism?" inquires a Canadian subscriber to The Detroit Free Press. Go to camp-meeting and "cut-up" and you'll not only get the disease, but the remedy.

A Boston, paper, noticing the pride of young men entering business life, says too many of them wishes to retail high-toned strawberries, instead of peddling plain cod-fish.

Tilden's subsidized newspaper are all telling the country now about that barbarons institution known as the two-thirds rule in the Democratic National Convention. They look upon that as the only barrier between them and Uncle Samuel's "barrel of money.

Dolan, the murderer who was executed in New York a few weeks ago, said he was good-hearted enough, until he sat for his photograph. The way the photographer jerked his head around and kept him on pins, soured the chap against the whole world.

Corn is doing first-rate as a general thing in the county. There is so far, a fine prospect for a good hay crop. Much of the wheat looks well and promises a good yield? but there are many pieces, and in some sections most of the fields which will not give half a crop.

Another Haunted House.

Those of our citizens who have had occasion to go up or down Hornbrook-st in the southeastern part of the city, have noticed a small, dingy-looking building near the corner of Cedar street The exterior appearance of the building would not strike you favorably, yet you could not say that it was really expulsive. The last tenants say they could not stay there any longer, the spirts having tried their patience until patience had ceased to be a virtue. The freaks of the ghost were peculiar and trying enough to "kill a hoss." When the doors of the house were carefully locked the occupants would find them wide open at the dead hour of night. Part of the front room furniture found its way into the kitchen. Not a soul knew how it came there. This was the straw that broke the camel's back. The Irish tenant said to his wife next morning, "Be Jases, Bridget, I'll leave this house immediately. Holy St. Paterick himself couldn't have performed so many miracles!" He dead leave and no money could have induced him to remain.—[Indianapolis People.

Orth made a campaign speech at his Indianapolis reception last week, but it fell flat on his audience, and is the reverse of satisfactory to all his political friends. It was expected that he would deny or explain his connection with the fraudulent Venezuela claim matter, but he never alluded to it at all. He has cooled off amazingly, and is nothing like "as hot as a lime kiln" now. It is a fact, and few Republicans will attempt to gainsay it, that Orth is a load on their ticket. He has been a scheming politician and office-holder all his life, and his record is anything but savory. The fact of his attempt to swindle the widow Peters out of her farm, and that he was at the head of the Know Nothing organization of this State, will both do him great injury; but his disgraceful connection with the Venezuela bond affair when he was a member of Congress will cause thousands of Republicans to vote against him. The leaders of the party would give a great deal if Orth had not been nominated, and it need not surprise our readers if they hear that he has been taken from the head of the ticket.

Tit for Tat

Among the annoyed and dripping pedestrians who sought the aid of a Grand River street car yerterday, to help shorten the way home, was a man with gray locks and an old maid with beau catchers and false teeth. They seemed to hate each other at first sight, for he was hardly seated beside her when he growled:

"If you women didn't ware bustles, there't be twice as much room in street cars."

"If men didn't sit cross-legged there'd be three times as much room!" she snapped in reply.

"If I was a woman, I wouldn't be gadding around when the rain is pouring down this way," he remarked.

"Yas you would. If you were a woman you'd want to go out and show those feet!"

He drew his No. 11's under the seat, flushed up a little and growled:

"They are not false, like some folks teeth!"

"No, and they don't turn up quite as much as some people's nose! she answered.

He was silented for a time, but presently he recovered himself and went on:

"Thirty years ago women got along without paint powder, bustles, straps buckles and such nonsensical fixings.

Thirty years ago she promptly replied, " it was a rare thing to see a man come out of a saloon wiping his mouth on his thumb!

He didn't say anything more, but he wondered if she wasn't looking out of the window when he signaled the car.—Detroit Free Press.

Something of a war fever appears to have broken out in England. The Mediterranean squadron has been ordered to prevent the forcing of the Dardanklles by the fleets of the allies. The order may possibly involve a naval conflict for the possession of the Golden Horn and the command of the Turkish capital for it has been understood that the German and Austrian fleets were ordered some days ago to rendezvous in that neighborhood.

The investigation now in progress at New Orleans into the affairs of the custom house in that city shows that it has been a perfect hot-bed of corrubtion, from which money was obtained to conduct Radical political campaigns. Ex-Congressman Sypher obtained $5,000 from the government for work that was supposed to be done in repairing the lighthouse, which work was never performed by the contractor. In fact, the contractor was suprised when he heard that any work at all had been done.

Political Slander.

It has come to be one of the fashions to abuse men who submit their names for office. Men of all grades and stripes of opinion seem to think they have a perfect right to malign and slander those who run for office. No one is safe. The tongues of slander is hot with words which burn deep, and are more cruel than the grave. Does it follow that because a person desires a certain office he is therefore a minion of evil, and evil only? Must a man who stands fair in the community be blackened by his opponents, simply because he submits his name for office? It is indeed strange —yea, it is not wicked?—to injure those who desire political honors at the hands of their contestents. The American people must frown down this evil, which is becoming a source of alarm to our institutions.

Everybody, almost, seem to think it is not wrong to steal from a railroad, or slander a man who desires an office. But the sin of stealing or lying will be just as potent in making him heinous who follows his wicked ways.

The time has come when we must educate the better side of our nature, exercise a spirit of forebearance, and of charity, and show men that we have faith in humanity. We hope to see in the many new questions how coming befor the people a better view taken of men, and more attention given to the real points at issue. All men need the warm and hearty support of those who are good, and all men should strive to develope the kindly spirit wich will crown the wearer with the emblems of peace—[Plymouth Democrat.

A bright young lady gave her slow lover a delicate leap-year hint the other evening. In the course of the conversation the gentleman asked her what form of marriage she thought the most beautiful. Her quick reply was, "I should care little for form. The substance seems of more importance." That girl wears an engagement ring now.

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

THE EAST.

MRS. WILHELMINA [illegible] has been sentenced to death at Buffalo, N. Y., for the murder of her step-son, last November.

COCHRANE, MCLEAN & CO., dry goods dealers at No. 462 Broadway, New York, have failed. Their liabilities are $1,800,000; their assets nearly $2,000,000.... The historic old South church, in Boston, has just been sold at auction for $1,300. It will be torn down.

THE WEST.

THE frisky grasshopper has made its appearance in Minnesota.... Orders from army headquarters have been received and promulgated at Fort Sully, directing that emigrants be prevented from going to the Black Hills across the Sioux reservation, by the Fort Pierre route. It is understood that the order applies to all routes leading from the Missouri river through the reservation.

SCANDALOUS corruption in the construction of the new St. Louis Custom-house has long been suspected, and recently the Grand jury of the United States court took the matter in hand for the purpose of ascertaining, if possible, how it has happened that for an expenditure of three millions, originally supposed to be a sum sufficient for the completion of the building, there is little more than the foundation walls to be seen. Some discoveries of misappropriation of money have been made, and several arrests have followed.... Official reports received at army headquarters in Chicago make it probable that the account which has been published of the massacre of a Cincinnati party while on the way to the Black Hills, is a cruel canard. No information of any such butchery has reached Fort Laramie, but it is ascertained that the party were met by Capt. Egan's scouting force on the 21st of May within twenty-eight miles of Custer, and far to the north of the sand hills, where the tragedy has been located.... The dead bodies of a man, woman and child, the latter about three years old, were recently found in the woods near Belleville, Ill. The bodies were identified as those of a family who had stopped at a Belleville hotel on May 4, 1876, registered under the name of Joseph May and wife, Evansville, Ind. The verdict of the jury was to the effect that May shot the woman and child and then killed himself. It is supposed that poverty led to the act.

THE Collier white lead works, in St. Louis, were partially destroyed last week, by the bursting of three of the large boilers. Three workmen received fatal injuries, and several others were badly hurt.... Thomas Kelley, Charles Peterson and a colored man, herders, were recently murdered by Indians near Sidney, Neb.

HARVEY D. COLVIN, lately deposed from the office of Mayor by the people of Chicago, has been reinstated in the office by a decision of the courts.

BY a decision of the Circuit judges of Chicago, the lately deposed Mayor (Colvin) is again in possession of the office.... Reports from Western Kansas represent that some of the Sioux, having glutted their savage appetite for blood by the massacre of scores of white people in and around the Black Hills, are now sneaking back to their reservations, to escape the wrath of Crook's warriors.

MORRISON PURCELL, a farmer living near Indianapolis, was gored to death the other by a vicious bull.... A strange case of self-murder is reported from Cincinnati. George R. Frintz, clerk in the postoffice, was to have married a young lady in the West End. The guests assembled and the bride was in readiness, but Frintz did not make his appearance. A friend calling at his room the next morning found him upon the bed. Without saying a word he (Frintz) drew a revolver and shot himself through the heart. The motive of the suicide is unknown.

A DISPATCH received at the department headquarters, at Omaha, dated at Fort Laramie, June 7, says: "An Indian courier from Red Cloud brings this report: Just before he left an Indian arrived from the mouth of Tongue river. He found there 1,273 lodges under Sitting Bull, Crazy Horse and others, who were on the way to Powder river to fight Gen. Crook. On his return he met the same band that Egan saw on May 17. They told him that they met Custer's troops and had fought them all day. Many were killed on both sides, but no result is reported. This occurred about eight days ago.".... Black Hills romancers are again at work extracting fabulous wealth from their teeming fancies. Parties are at Fort A. Lincoln from the Deadwood region, whose talk fairly glitters with golden dust. They tell of men who average $1,000 a day, and of a lucky but nameless Frenchman who loaded his pockets with fifteen pounds avoirdupois of solid gold one morning. These yarns, of course, are sheer fabrications, invented and published for the purpose of giving a fresh impetus to the Black Hills fever.

SOUTH.

THE law's vengeance has at length overtaken some of the crooked whisky crew in New Orleans. A lot of them were sentenced in the United States court there last week, the punishment ranging down from sixteen months' imprisonment and $600 fine to six months and $1,000.

THE steamship Austin recently struck a snag and sunk in the Mississippi river, a few miles below New Orleans. Loss on vessel and cargo, $200,000.

WASHINGTON.

AT a meeting of the House Judiciary Committee, on Saturday, the sub-committee appointed several months ago to consider the question of whether the House of Representatives has jurisdiction relative to the members King and Schumaker, who are accused of having been engaged in hiring members in previous Congresses, reported that the House had not such jurisdiction.

SPEAKER KERR went before the Clymer committee, the other day, and made an explanation of the circumstances under which he came to recommend Green for an army commission. He stated that he had offered to procure the commission for two of his constituents, Col. Jackson and Maj. Morrison, both of whom declined. After this no one from his district applied for the place. When the session was well advanced, and the time for these appointments was passing away, he was called upon by Augustus P. Green, of New York. "It is possible," said the Speaker, "that he was introduced to me by Harney, but if he was I have no recollection whatever of the fact. This only I know, that I did never, under any circumstances, or at any period of my life, consciously know the man Harney. I never talked with him in any conversation that could have gone beyond the merest expressions of the day. He never was at my room. He never visited me anywhere. I never talked with him on any business whatever. He never paid or proposed to pay me one penny of money for any purpose in the world. His whole statement on that subject is utterly and wickedly false.".... A Washington correspondent, referring to Blaine's explanation in the House, says: "His speech commenced in almost breathless silence. It ended in an almost perfect thunder of applause. Blaine has long been noted for the wonderful fertility of his intellectual resources, for his parliamentary skill, and for his audacious bravery. He made use of all his resources to-day. He was calm and deliberate, impassioned and audacious, by turn, and always skillful. As the climax approached, he exhibited a courage which subdued his opponents and electrified the House."

C. P. HUNTINGTON, President of the Central Pacific railroad, has withdrawn from the Judiciary Committee his recent proposition for a settlement of all affairs between the Government and that road, and submitted a new proposition, to the following effect: He proposes to pay, for ten years, $600,000 annually, and after that $750,000 annually, until all the indebtedness of the company to the Government is paid. These payments to be made in lieu of all claims which the Government now has against the company for interest for the five per cent. on net earnings, or on any other account. The proposition to give up a portion of the lands granted at $2.50 an acre is withdrawn, and the company proposes to pay six per cent. interest on all deferred claims of the Government.

A BILL is to be reported in the House of Representatives disfranchising Americans who buy, own or sell slaves in foreign countries. Slave-ownership or traffic in that sort of property forfeits the right of the offender to claim the protection of this Government or any official recognition as a citizen of the United States. A large class of American residents abroad, some of them employing numbers of slaves in planting operations, will be affected by this bill, if it is passed.

EX-CONGRESSMAN JONES, of New York, testifies in the Kerr investigation that Harney, the Speaker's accuser, called upon him (Jones) in 1860 and asked him to appoint Augustus P. Green to a lieutenancy in the army. Harney informed him that he would get a nice present if the appointment were made. Witness told Harney he had nothing to do with that, and that he had known Green longer than Harney had.

THE Senate has confirmed Wirt Sykes as United States Consul at Cardiff; James B. Sutan, of Pennsylvania, United States Consul at Florence; Hedgman Slack, United States Marshal for West Virginia; Moses M. Bane, of Illinois, Secretary of Utah Territory.

GENERAL.

A GREAT triumph of railway travel has just been achieved. A special train chartered by Jarrett & Palmer to transport a party of actors and a collection of theatrical scenery and properties to the Pacific coast, left New York at three minutes past 1 o'clock on the morning of Thursday, June 1, and reached San Francisco at twenty-five minutes past 9 on the morning of Sunday, the 4th, thus accomplishing the run in less than eighty-four hours.

THE Chicago Tribune says: "It has been finally decided by the Eastern railroads to make no further reductions in passenger rates. There is, however, no probability that the present rates will go up again before next winter."

THE following are the estimated receipts of the Government for the fiscal year ending with June:

From customs	$146,027,536
Internal revenue	116,048,387
Miscellaneous	23,166,524
Total	$285,247,397
Expenditures	263,138,833
Surplus June 30	23,108,564

The receipts show a decrease from the estimates: In customs of $10,206,090; in internal revenue, $4,151,216, and increase in miscellaneous, $3,168,549. The expenses are $5,808,680 inside the estimates.... The following is a copy of the telegram received by Representative Knott, Chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, and which Mr. Blaine charges him with suppressing:

> To the Chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, Washington:
>
> Have just read in New York papers Scott's evidence about our bond transaction, and can fully corroborate it. I never gave Blaine any Fort Smith railroad bonds, directly or otherwise. I have three foreign railroad contracts on my hands, which make it impossible for me to leave without great pecuniary loss, or would gladly voluntarily come home and so testify. Can make affidavit to this effect, and mail it if desired. JOSIAH CALDWELL.

CORRESPONDENCE between the American and British Governments, published in England, shows that the American legation in London suggested that a qualifying article might be added to the extradition treaty; that the suggestion was promptly accepted by Lord Derby; that the draft of such an article was forwarded to Washington, and that Mr. Fish refused to agree to it. In that position the negotiation remained when the papers were submitted to Parliament.

POLITICAL.

OVER two-thirds of the Wisconsin delegation to St. Louis are said to be for Tilden; the remainder for Davis, and scattering.... The Democrats have carried Oregon, and secured a majority in the Legislature.

FOREIGN.

THE Chancellors of Russia, Austria and Germany will hold another conference soon, to consider the change in the government of Turkey. The conference will take place at Ems, whither Bismarck will accompany the Emperor of Germany.... Servia refuses to recognize the new Sultan of Turkey, on account of his alleged irregular accession to the throne, and declines to pay tribute, two installments of which are now in arrears.

A BERLIN dispatch says the powers have suspended action on the Berlin memorandum for a few days, in order that the new Turkish Government may give unmistakable indication of their policy, and their power of maintaining themselves.... The following announcement of the suicide of the ex-Sultan of Turkey has been communicated to the Turkish minister at Washington by the Minister of Foreign Affairs of Turkey: A sad event has just painfully affected our august sovereign and his Government. Abdul Aziz Khan, the late Sultan, who, for some time past unfortunately gave evident signs of mental derangement, having locked himself up this morning in his apartments of the palace of Tcherazan, committed suicide by opening the veins of his arms with scissors which he had concealed on his person".... A London dispatch to the New York Herald says: "England has sent Admiral Drummond to the East with orders to prevent the forcing of the Dardanelles. Unfinished iron-clads are being completed in great haste. Regiments are under orders to be ready to start at a moment's notice.

IT is understood in England that negotiations for a modification of the extradition treaty between the United States and Great Britain are in progress—the object being to conform the treaty to the common-sense principle that extradited persons should only be tried for the crimes charged in the indictment upon which rendition is asked.... At Paris the story of the Sultan's suicide meets with contemptuous incredulity. At Rome the journals generally express the belief that Abdul Aziz was murdered.

RUSSIA has agreed to recognize the new Sultan of Turkey.... Dispatches from Melbourne announce that all the Fenian prisoners held under surveillance in West Australia have escaped on board an American vessel.... The Mexican revolution is apparently on the wane. A dispatch from the City of Mexico says: "Events of the past two weeks have all been in favor of the Government, and indicate unmistakably the approaching failure of the revolution. The insurgents have suffered reverses everywhere, and their sympathizers are rapidly decreasing in number. Gen. Alatorre gained a victory May 29, in Oaxaca, over the revolutionary forces, nearly 2,000 being killed and wounded, and many prisoners. The Government casualties were 800 killed and wounded. The Federals gained another important victory in Tlaxco on the 28th. Gen. Cortina has broken his parole, escaped, and issued a pronunciamento. If he reaches the Rio Grande he will probably give some trouble to Gen. Vicente.".... A quarrel is reported between the Sultan of Turkey and the Khedive of Egypt.... A Vienna dispatch says: "A six weeks' armistice has been agreed upon between the Turks and insurgents."

THE Servian Government has declared that it will follow the recommendation of Russia not to enter upon hostilities against Turkey.... Madame George Sand, the celebrated French author, is dead.

NOTES FROM THE CENTENNIAL.

[By Our Own Correspondent.]

In my peregrinations in and around the grounds, I hear but one expression, which is, that the Exhibition fully comes up to the standard conceived of and carried into faithful execution by its projectors. In size, architectural display, comforts, varied exhibits, management, the Exhibition of our Centennial year is a grand success, without any qualifications. So varied are the attractions that the most cynical can't fail in being led into enthusiasm, and the most careless will be charmed at some speciality that strikes the right key, vibrating the human chords with charming effect. I heard one of a bevy of sprightly girls exclaim, "Emma, let's go to Machinery Hall." "Machinery, humph! we shan't. What do women know about machinery?" Yet the same Emma was ecstasied over a Berlin vase. Thus it is there is something for all and each. "Did you see the Women's pavilion?" asks a fragile blonde to a two hundred pound avoirdupois belle. "[illegible] me, [illegible], it wasn't much, was it?" "No! some lithographs. I don't think much of it anyway." "But wasn't that one [illegible] just splendid?" And so it is. All tastes are catered to, and, as a whole, the Exhibition furnishes dainties for the most cosmopolitan taste.

The being with the most intense Diogenic instincts will be drawn out of his tub of conceit and will be skeptical no longer, but will cheerfully concede that virtue to our kind that is developed in the industrial forces and art eliminations that dazzle the beholder who is sensible to works of economical effort for the general good, and whose sensitiveness accepts the higher and nobler results of a harvest organization in the sphere of æsthetic thought.

COTTON.

The staple is creditably displayed, and justly so, as the extraordinary influence exerted in our manufacturing circles, and its importance in our exchange system, renders all matters pertaining to its culture of significant interest. The foreign exhibit shows cotton from Brazil, Egypt, Peru, Australia, Asia Minor, (Smyrna), Bengal, East Indies, West Indies, China, Africa, Domestic—Mobile and Memphis uplands. The two prize samples in the show cases, one from Memphis, the other from New Orleans, seemed to bear off the palm. There is a cotton pavilion of foreign staples arranged in decidedly good taste which will be detailed in another letter.

THE BRITISH HEADQUARTERS.

The British Government has gone to very considerable expense in erecting offices on the grounds for its Commissioners. One of the three structures which have been erected for this purpose is really a very elaborate and ornamental building. The entire group is built after the Elizabethan style of the sixteenth century, the best specimens of which may be found in Buckinghamshire. The largest of the three is used as the office of the Commissioners, while the other two contain rooms for the attendants, servants, etc. The larger house is elegantly furnished, and is, in itself, an extremely interesting exhibition. It is built of brick and timber, covered on the outside with plaster, and having tall chimneys, which give it a very quaint appearance. One side of the building is almost entirely of glass, the panes not being more than four inches square. The rooms are all papered in cool greenish tints, after elaborate designs by William Morris, the celebrated upholsterer and poet of London. The floor is carpeted with rich Brussels in small patterns; the chimney places are decorated with tiles in antique designs, and on the mantels, which are of vari-colored marble, are vases decorated in rich and vivid colors. The furniture, though modern, is heavy and covered with rich dark stuff. On the whole, scarcely any more luxurious dwelling-place could be devised, even with our modern comfort-producing inventions. Somehow it gives one a firmer belief in the reality of that romantic period in English history—the Elizabethan era—to behold this admirable representation of the solid comfort and even splendor of the average country gentleman of those days. It is a bit of the times of "Good Queen Bess," lifted out of the dim past, and set down bodily before us. Col. Herbert Sandford, the British Executive Commissioner, and his coadjutor, Prof. Thomas P. Archer, F. R. S. E., are extremely courteous and obliging, and have won highly favorable opinions from our people since they have been among us. They have certainly done their work here in the most admirable manner, and Great Britain will have every reason to be proud of the results of their labors.

WILL THE EXPOSITION PAY?

Yes! as soon as the agricultural interests are attended to, the farmers of the Middle States will come en masse, and from the Western States they will flock to the grandest fair the world has ever seen. Many will come from the South. The general impression prevailing throughout the country, that railroad fares will be reduced, is holding many back; the great rush from the South will begin in July, and continue throughout the summer and fall. In the city of Philadelphia, but few of the citizens attend regularly, as, like all things near home, the many will postpone, and then they are aware of the unfinished condition of the work and await its completion. But from the 15th of June to the close of the Exhibition, I feel assured that paying assemblages will be in order, and that the attendance will be sufficient to amply compensate, in dollars and cents, the proprietors' interests for their outlay. I believe the Exhibition will not alone be remunerative from a financial stand-point, but will pay a thousand-fold in its teachings, in the varied fields of utility and ornament.

MISCELLANY.

Hon. D. J. Morrell was re-elected Chairman of the Executive Committee; A. T. Goshorn, Director General; George W. Biddle, Solicitor; John L. Campbell, Secretary of the Commission.

The Syrians have a bazar, near the Turkish pavilion, erected by five natives of Jerusalem, of oriental woods. The sides are yellow, the roof olive green, the cornices blue and gold. The attaches are en costume, and have on exhibition and for sale bijoutry in olive wood from the Mount of Olives, banks of the Jordon, Hebron and Bethlehem, comprising jars, cases, sleeve buttons, canes, work-boxes, and varied ornaments. A Dragoman, David Jamal, is in charge.

The Bureau of Agriculture offer the following prizes: First best cow $250, second best cow $100. For first best herd $300. The scale of points to be adopted by the club is founded upon that of the Royal Jersey society.

The field trials of mowing machines, tedder and hay rakes will take place on grounds near Schenck's station, on the Pennsylvania railroad, between Philadelphia and Trenton, from June 15 to 30, and the trials of reapers from July 5 to 15.

I spoke of Australia. Few people are aware of the importance of this called island, but, instead, a continent. Australia has an area of 2,400 miles from east to west, 1,700 miles from north to south, coast line 8,000 miles, and possesses one of the greatest natural wonders in the world on the northeast coast, Great Barrier reef, length 1,000 miles, 350 of which is unbroken, all of which is of coralline structure. It is no wonder so important and interesting a member of the family of colonial nations should be represented by so distinguished a Commissioner and superb collection of articles from the natural and industrial forces of that country. It is well to have the virtues of Argus in your inspection of the beauties and wonders of the Exhibition, as a hundred eyes will serve you; but remember that don't touch is, or should be, upon each article, and think of Briareus, with his hundred arms, for it seems as if some visitors had as many, so deftly and oftentimes do they break the ruling of hands off.

The Commission has adjourned to July 1st. Geo. W. Biddle declines the solicitorship of the Commission, and Mr. Shoemaker was unanimously elected to a position he has creditably filled in the past.

Permanent headquarters for the press are established in the western wing of the department of public comfort building, east of the Judges' pavilion. The offices of the Commission will be transferred to the same building.

The Hebrew monument will be on hand in time to be unveiled July 4.

The claims of colored men are to be recognized to positions on the Centennial guard.

Oregon exhibits rye nine feet high, eighty-seven and one-half bushels to the acre; oats ten feet high, eighty-seven bushels per acre; concentrated cider put up in sheets, so an individual can carry a quart of cider in his vest pocket; canned salmon from the Columbia river; and mahogany, the only production in the United States [illegible] Brazil.

It costs fifty cents to have the regulation photograph placed in your passes.

The Centennial Exhibition ground covers 236 acres.

Her Majesty, the Empress Augusta, and her royal highness, the Princess Ludwig of Hesse Darmstadt, are contributors of [illegible] and needle work. Naples makes one of the finest displays of cameos. France distinguishes herself in filagree, surpassing, in your correspondent's opinion, the Japs. Germany exhibits artificial eyes. Bohemia has a magnificent collection in glass goods. St. Louis has a magnificent exhibit of billiard tables. The most superior finished mantel-piece in this or any other exhibition is of Mexican onyx. Rhode Island has a beautiful collection of plated goods. Dresden makes a most tasteful presentation of metal and bronze goods. Some of these goods from Berlin are of excellent finish. Hamburg sustains her reputation in ivory manufacture.

The Centennial detective force has been reduced. This argues well for the good behavior of the average American. J. B.

FORTY-FOURTH CONGRESS.

FRIDAY, June 2.—Senate.—The Senate disposed of a few bills of a private nature, and then began the consideration of the Legislative Appropriation bill.

House.—The House devoted the day to the Indian Appropriation bill, the greater part of the time being spent in wrangling upon points of order relative to amendments. A good many Western and Southern members made arguments in favor of the transfer of the Indian bureau to the War department.

SATURDAY, June 3.—Senate.—The Senate passed the bill providing for the appointment of a commission of five persons to visit the Sioux tribes of Indians to negotiate for the surrender of a portion of their reservation, including the Black Hills. The War department is required by the terms of the bill to furnish transportation, subsistence and protection to the commission.... Consideration of the Legislative Appropriation bill was resumed. The amendments of the Senate Committee, which restores the reductions made by the House, were all agreed to. The most significant action of the Senate was the vote restoring the President's salary to $50,000. The vote in detail on this was as follows: Yeas—Allison, Anthony, Bayard, Booth, Boutwell, Bruce, Christiancy, Clayton, Cooper, Cragin, Dawes, Edmunds, Frelinghuysen, Hamlin, Johnson, McMillan, Mitchell, Morrill (Maine), Morton, Norwood, Paddock, Patterson, Ransom, Robertson, Sargent, Sherman, Spencer, Windom, Withers—32. Nays—Bogy, Cockrell, Eaton, Goldthwaite, Hitchcock, Kelley, Key, McCreery, Maxey, Stevenson, Thurman—11.

House.—Wood, from the Committee on Ways and Means, made a report in regard to the Alaska fur-seal fishery lease, exonerating the officers of the Government and company from all allegations of fraud. Ordered printed.... The Indian Appropriation bill was under discussion nearly the entire day. A variety of amendments were offered, nearly all of which were rejected. Among those voted down was one proposed by Steele forbidding the furnishing of rations to white men living with Indian women.

MONDAY, June 5.—Senate.—The Senate discussed the Sundry Civil Appropriation bill nearly the entire day. An amendment proposed by Sherman was adopted, providing that the internal revenue districts be reduced to 131 as soon after the 1st of July as practicable; also vesting in the Commissioner of Internal Revenue the power to suspend collectors of internal revenue now possessed by supervisors, and all other powers now exercised by the supervisors to be vested in the collectors.

House.—Blaine (rising to the question of privilege), proceeded to address the House on the subject of investigation into the Union Pacific and Northern Pacific transactions, in which his name had become involved. The central part, and the most important part, of the whole affair was the production of the letters taken from Mulligan. This was preceded by a severe charge of unfair treatment at the hands of the sub-committee charged with investigating the various subjects with which his name had been connected. Referring to the letters, the speaker said: "I understand the Judiciary Committee to have abandoned that issue against me, but there has gone forth the idea or impression that because I would not permit that man, or any man, when I could prevent it, from holding as a menace over my head my private correspondence, there must be something in it most deadly and destructive to my reputation. I would like any gentleman on this floor, and all of them are presumed to be men of affairs whose business has been varied and whose intercourse has been large, to stand up here and say that he is willing and ready to have his private correspondence for the last ten or twelve years handed over and made public? Does it imply guilt? Does it imply a sense of weakness that a man will protect his private correspondence? No, sir. It is a man's first instinct to do it, and it is the last outrage on any man to violate it. I have defied the power to take these letters from me. I do it still. I speak with all respect for this House. I know its powers, and I trust that I respect them; but I say that this House has no more power to order what shall be done or not done with my private correspondence than it has to order what I shall do with the nurture and admonition of my children, not one particle more. But I am now going to show the letters (holding them up in his hand). I thank God Almighty that I am not ashamed to show them. There they are. There is the very original package. With some sense of humiliation, with a mortification which I do not pretend to conceal, with a sense of outrage which I think any man in my position would feel, I invite the confidence of 44,000,000 of people, and I will read these letters. [Applause, which the Speaker pro tem endeavored to suppress.] Many of these letters have not the remotest bearing on the subject, but some of them will require a little explanation. Some of them may possibly involve humiliation, but I would a good deal rather take that than take the evil surmises, and still more evil inferences, that might be drawn if I did not act with this frankness. Blaine thereupon proceeded to read and to make passing comments upon, and explanations of, various points in the several letters. The letters all referred to business transactions between Blaine and Fisher. While they go to show that the former was engaged in stock operations, his friends claim that his transactions were legitimate and perfectly honorable.

TUESDAY, June 6.—Senate.—The committee appointed some time ago at the instance of Davis (W. Va.), after an investigation into the method of book-keeping in the Treasury department, reported that they are satisfied that no cause for complaint exists therein.... The Senate discussed inferentially the question of jurisdiction in the impeachment matter at considerable length, and finally fixed the 6th of July as the date when the Senate as a court of impeachment shall begin to take evidence.... Whyte presented a petition of G. T. Beauregard, of Louisiana, for the removal of his political disabilities.

House.—The Indian Appropriation bill was passed, including the section transferring the Indian bureau to the War department.... The House, by a vote of 115 to 97, authorized the Committee on Banking and Currency to report at any time. The object of this permission is to enable the committee to report a bill repealing the Resumption act, and to put it on its passage promptly.

WEDNESDAY, June 7.—Senate.—The resolution proposing a common unit of money and accounts for the United States and Great Britain was passed.... The bill establishing Cheboygan, Mich., a port of delivery passed.... The Senate then took up and passed the Legislative, Executive, and Judicial Appropriation bill. None of the House reductions were concurred in, the bill covering about the same amounts appropriated last year.... The Fortification bill was also taken up and passed.

House.—The House passed the bill removing the forty-acre restriction upon the entry of public lands in Florida, Alabama, Louisiana, Arkansas, and Mississippi, and placing those lands under the same regulations as the public domain in the Western States. The bill had already passed the Senate.... Crounse introduced a bill authorizing a railroad pontoon-bridge over the Missouri river at Nebraska City. Passed.... The Speaker asked and obtained leave of absence for ten days, and appointed Cox (N. Y.) Speaker pro tem, during his absence.... Cannon, from the Committee on Postoffices and Post Roads, reported a bill providing a penalty for mailing obscene books, and prohibiting lottery circulars passing through the mails. Passed.

THURSDAY, June 8.—Senate.—The Senate refused to consider a resolution allowing Pinchback pay and mileage as a Senator for the time in which his claim was pending.... Sherman called up the bill to amend the laws relative to the legal-tender silver coin, and a general discussion of the finance question ensued.

House.—The House proceedings were enlivened by a wordy skirmish between Blaine and Tarbox, the latter defending himself against the charge of the gentleman from Maine that he was actuated by partisan malice in offering his resolution of investigation. Blaine replied by accusing Tarbox of stealing a copy of his speech on the currency, which was in type several weeks before its delivery, and offering to sell it to a newspaper man. Tarbox pronounced the charge false, but admitted that he had a copy.... A bill to prevent straw bids in the mail service was passed.... The bill to replace the iron-clad oath for jurors in United States courts was discussed without action.

A Wordy War Between Blaine and Knott.

There was an exciting scene in the room of the House Judiciary Committee at Washington, on the 7th inst. Mr. Blaine went before the committee and demanded a consideration of the circumstances connected with the Caldwell telegram from London. Knott stated a supposition case about a telegram from Caldwell which might have said that Blaine was guilty. Blaine calmly interrupted Knott, and said: "You will permit me to believe that it would have gone out very soon." Knott, approaching Blaine in a threatening manner, said, "What do you mean sir? What do you say? Do you insinuate that I would do you injustice in that manner?" Blaine remarked, "I mean to say that I don't think you would keep back a dispatch that would hurt me." The friends of Mr. Blaine unconsciously gathered around him, and had Chairman Knott made another step toward Blaine there would have been a personal encounter. Gen. Hunton, who is a man of remarkable composure, succeeded in enforcing order.

Knott had been terribly excited by the assaults of Blaine upon him in the House. That exasperation was increased by the fact that Blaine openly to his face, in the committee room, raised an issue of veracity, and had charged Knott with suppressing the Caldwell dispatch. Knott became greatly excited. His white mustache grew a shade paler; his fiery cheeks took on a deeper glow. He clutched his oaken stick with a firmer grasp, and advanced threateningly toward Blaine, who sat in a chair three feet from him watching every movement with unflinching eye. Knott raised his diminutive form, and you could hear in the silence of that committee room the exasperated inquiry which, being interpreted, meant

> "Who dare this pair of boots displace,
> Must meet Bombastes face to face."

When the sub-committee adjourned, Knott, approaching Frye, a member of the committee, and who has been in attendance as advisory friend of Blaine, said to him: "Mr. Frye, your friend Blaine is the god-damnedest scoundrel in America." This remark, or its equivalent, having already found its way into print, it should be added that Frye replied: "You forget yourself, Mr. Knott." "Yes," said Knott, "I do," and he thereupon withdrew the remark, and apologized for having made it.

World's Fairs in General.

Excluding the wretched failure and partial swindle in New York, in 1853, which does not deserve to be classed in the same category, there have been five world's fairs worthy of the name, and the Philadelphia Exposition is the sixth. The first was in London, in 1851, for which the Crystal Palace at Sydenham was erected, which was permitted to remain, and has ever since been a popular resort, and the favorite location for monster concerts and great public celebrations. Paris followed with its Exposition, in 1857. Then the London people, in 1861, erected grander palaces in Hyde Park and South Kensington gardens to eclipse their French rivals. But Paris was not to be outdone, and the fourth attempt was the Exposition Universelle of 1867. The fifth world's fair was located in Vienna in 1873—a city that had long aspired to rival Paris in the gay attractions of a continental capital, and expected by means of its exhibition to fix upon itself the eyes of the civilized world, and render itself famous for its beauty and pleasures. Of all these exhibitions, though none of them was profitable as a financial enterprise, the only one that can be characterized as a disappointment and a failure was the Vienna Exhibition, which was loaded down with bad management, corrupt practices and the inordinate greed of the people.—New York World.

The Use of Tobacco.

Dr. B. F. Richardson, F. R. S., in his "Diseases of Modern Life," is an uncompromising opponent to the use of tobacco. He refutes, however, the notion that tobacco-smoking causes cancer and consumption. Dr. Richardson believes that there is no ground for assuming that organic disease results from the use of tobacco, but he believes that functional disorders are inseparable from the habit of smoking, and the author gives a long description of the various disorders which he believes may be traced to tobacco. The Lancet, in criticising Dr. Richardson's work, thinks that "his statements are probably in the main accurate as regards the smoking when excessive, but that they are too sweeping when applied to all smoking, moderate and slight as well as extreme.' Somewhere, however, in the book Dr. Richardson reluctantly admits that "under certain circumstances tobacco does help to bring unnatural into natural functions, producing in the overwearied brain mental rest, partial oblivion of the past, and a tendency to that natural sleep which knits up the raveled sleeve of care."

Lover and Husband.

Perhaps there is no more painful time in a woman's life than the time of transition when the assiduous lover is passing into the matter-of-fact husband, and the wooer is gradually changing into the master. Women, who are so much more sensitive than men, more sentimental too, and less content to trust in silence to an undemonstrative affection, are for the most part happy only while they are being made love to. It is not enough for them to be loved; they want to be told so twenty times a day, and to have the harmonies of life enriched by a crowd of "occasional notes," embroidering the solid substance by which they live. Men, on the contrary, get tired of making love. When they have wooed and won, they are content to be quiet, and take all the rest for granted. They are not cold, however, because they are secure; and to most, and those the best, practical kindness is better than flattery, security ranks before excitement and hysteria, and life passed in serene friendship, fearing no evil, knowing no break, and needing no phrasing, is better than life passed in a perpetual turmoil of passion, where there are scenes and tears, and doubts and broken hearts, if there are not endless courtship and fatiguing demonstration.

THE estate of Charlotte Cushman is much scattered in this country and England.

Fenianism Revived.

The new Irish movement, led by O'Donovan Rossa and the Irish World, has gained more headway than is supposed by the uninterested portion of the public. Of course it takes the form thus far of raising money from Irishmen. Rossa has gone to California to agitate, and the Irish World, which has a large circulation throughout the United States, weekly calls for contributions for what is described as "a skirmishing fund." The professed intention is to use the money in secret operations against England. "By skirmishing," says one appeal, "those connected with and controlling the movement mean war. But war of a certain kind, war in accordance with the plans and designs best calculated to effect their purpose. Their purpose is England's overthrow and Ireland's liberation. To accomplish this they intend to harrass England by every means within their reach; to strike her in every vulnerable point; to use every available means to bring about her decadence and ruin. These blows will be dealt by bodies of men, by single individuals, or in any other way that circumstances or occasion may command. As Dr. Barrow says, it makes no difference whether you strike your enemy straight down or slantingly, provided you kill. This the skirmishers thoroughly understand. Blow shall follow blow in various ways and without cessation; where least expected, and where they cannot be met; and each attack will be so planned and directed as to preclude the possibility of failure. It is a species of movement, local in its action, swift, sudden and almost personal in its manifestations." Then follow two columns of language calculated to incite Irish hearts, and a sketch of Rossa, who is to handle the fund. The acknowledgments in the same paper of receipts show that persons are to be found who have confidence in the enterprise.—New York Sun.

How to Put Down Chinamen.

The extreme measures resorted to by the anti-Chinese element of the Pacific coast is likely to create a revulsion throughout the country in the interest of the Mongolians. The anti-coolie clubs of San Francisco are doing all that in their power lies to bring on a riot which could only result in the wholesale butchery of the inoffensive Asiatics. One plan—adopted by the South San Francisco club—is to starve out the offensive pig-tails. The way this is to be accomplished is as follows: A special committee was appointed to keep up an espionage and report the names of all persons who patronized the Chinese, and an immense blackboard was erected in a conspicuous place, on which the names of all persons who deal with the Chinese is posted. The young men pledged themselves not to act as the escort of any young lady who patronizes the Chinese washermen, and the young ladies in turn offer to cleanse gratis the dirty linen of gentlemen friends who will cease to take it to the "washee house" of detested John. The plan seems to work satisfactorily, as at latest reports the earnings of the Chinese in South San Francisco had been reduced to an average of twenty-five cents a week.

Silver Declining.

Silver continues to decline in London, and the lowest price ever known (52d per ounce) has been reached. This makes the silver tokens now coming out of the Treasury worth 82¼ cents to the dollar, and the proposed dollar of 412 8-10 grains worth 88 cents gold. The value in gold of a United States note (legal-tender) for one dollar ranged during the week between 88¼ and 89 cents. Silver tokens are coming out of the sub-Treasury here at the rate of $60,000 to $75,000 per day. The silver halves are taken at 2 to 2½ per cent. premium by bullion-dealers, to send to California, where they can be used at 95 to 96 cents gold; they are issued from the Treasury here at less than 89 gold. The premium on other small change ranges from ½ to 1½ per cent.—New York Nation.

What Ailed Him.

A little Georgia shaver recently took his first ride in a Milledgeville train. When the cars moved off he nestled close to his mother, and as its speed increased he began to show some signs of consternation. Tears stood in his eyes, and when he saw that his weakness was observed he blubbered aloud, "I ain't afraid, but I wish I had my photograph taken before I got on this thing."

AUBURN COURIER

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC.

Grapes, Wine, and Vinegar.

Weary and wasted, nigh worn out,
You sigh and shake white hairs, and say,
"Ah, you will find the truth one day
Of life and nature, do not doubt!"

Age rhymes to sage, and let us give
The hoary head its honors due:
Grant youth its privileges too,
And nations how to thrive and live.

Which has more chance to see aright
The many color'd shows of time,
Fresh human eyes in healthy prime
Or custom-dulled and fading sight?

Gone from the primrose and the rose
Their diversely delicious breath,
Since no fine wafting visiteth
An old, perhaps a snuffy, nose!

Youth has its truth: I'd rather trust,
Of two extremes, the ardent boy,
Excess of life and hope and joy,
Than this dejection and disgust.

Vinegar of experience—"drink!"
Why so, and set our teeth on edge?
Nay, even grant what you allege,
We'll not anticipate, I think.

Who missed, or loses, earlier truth,
Though old, we shall not count him sage;
Rare the strong mellow'd wine of age
From sunshine-ripen'd grapes of youth.

Around the Farm.

THE California wheat crop at ninety cents per bushel will be worth more than all the gold and silver that State will dig from her mines this year.

CUCUMBERS will grow to a trellis as readily as grape vines. Let those who have small gardens bear this in mind. A few vines can be grown occupying very little space.—Detroit Tribune.

THE town authorities of Chico, Cal., have passed an ordinance declaring swarms of the common honey bee a nuisance within the corporate limits of the town. They are destructive to fruit.

WATER should not enter the tile ditches, except through the soil. If the head of the drain opens into a swale, the inlet should be protected by a wire netting or gauze cap, which will not admit any solid or floating matter. It would be safe to have also a filter of gravel to cover the inlet.

DRY Venetian red makes a good mark on oily-wooled sheep. On any sheep use Venetian red and oil, or turpentine will do instead of oil. Keep it in the barn all the time, to aid your memory in keeping run of the flock, especially the breeding of your best ewes, or the breeding of the new ram you are trying this year.

BRITTLE hoofs are sometimes caused by the continual rasping of the crust by farriers or blacksmiths; sometimes by the use of tar upon the hoofs, and often they are a constitutional defect of the horse. To remedy the defect in the first two cases, refrain from the causes, and in any case the hoof is softened and made less brittle by rubbing it daily with pure glycerine and avoiding all contact with water or grease.

TALLOW from the kidney fat of an ox is too hard for candles. It should be softened by mixing one pound of lard with every twelve pounds of tallow. Some mix one pound of finely powdered alum, and four ounces of beeswax, with twelve pounds of tallow, the whole being stirred together until cold. This is then melted and poured into the molds, and the candles are cooled slowly. If cooled too quickly, the candles will crack and fall to pieces.

A FARMER states that he planted five rows of corn with seed taken from the cob three inches below the top of the ear, rejecting the imperfect grains at the extreme point; then five rows taken from the middle and base of the ear, rejecting the imperfect grains at the butt. The result was that the five rows planted from the middle and butt of the ear ripened about two and a half weeks before the other rows, the corn of the former being better cured and filled to the end of the cob.—Farmers' Monthly.

A CONTRIBUTOR to the Horticulturist buys bones of a butcher at a dollar the hundred pounds, and considers them the cheapest fertilizer he can obtain. He transforms them into meal by the following simple process: "I have a large, water-tight hogshead standing out of doors, near the kitchen. In the spring I cover the bottom about six inches deep with dry soil. On this I put a layer of bones, about the same depth, and cover them entirely with unleached ashes. On these another layer of bones, then ashes, and so on till the hogshead is full. I leave it then exposed to sun and rain all summer and winter till the next spring. Then on removing the contents of the hogshead, I find nearly all the bones so soft that they will crumble to powder under a very slight pressure, and they give a nice little pile of most valuable manure, ready for immediate use. Any of the bones not sufficiently subdued I return to the hogshead again, for another twelve months' slumber".

FOR BEETLES OR ROACHES.—Mix equal parts of brown sugar and Indian meal with Paris green.

OFFENSIVE BREATH.—A good disinfectant for offensive breath when arising from a foul stomach, is a small half-teaspoonful of soda dissolved in a third of a tumbler of water taken in the morning.

SAVORY DISH.—Melt a quarter pound good cheese in the oven. When this is done add one beaten egg and a wine glass of milk. Beat all these well together, then bake in a hot oven till a light brown.

EGG SAUCE.—Work well together four ounces of butter and two spoonfuls of flour; then mix in two spoonfuls of milk. Put over a slow fire. When melted, add half a pint of water, and when simmering add two spoonfuls more of milk; give it one boil, and just before serving add two hard boiled eggs chopped.

Poker and Politics.

They were talking politics and playing bean poker, twenty beans for a quarter. There were three of them, all Democrats, and for convenience we will call them Smith, Brown and Robinson. Smith was dealer, and while he was dealing the cards Brown and Robinson were discussing the overwhelming corruption among the officials of the land and shoving cards up their sleeves. The cards being dealt, Brown, who sat next the dealer, passed, at the same time remarking: "As I was sayin', the fearful corruption which runs through every branch of the public service is horrifying to every true patriot; the blush of shame mantles my cheek when I think of Grant, the President of the United States, lending himself to all kinds of thievery and jobbery, and surrounding himself with a horde of blood-sucking robbers, who are draining the very life-blood of the people."

"It's perfectly awful. I chip," said Robinson, as he neatly disposed of his hand and got four kings out of his sleeve.

"I pass out," said Smith.

"Just look at Belknap and Babcock and Blaine and the rest of them fellows. I raise you twenty beans," remarked Brown, as he deftly got from his sleeve the four aces which were there concealed.

"Yes, and I think of Bristow and them mules. Let's see; I call that raise and go you twenty better," replied Robinson.

"That sizes my pile. Just go back a few years in the administration and ponder on the Credit Mobilier, the back-pay steal, the raisin' of the President's salary, and the use of money to carry elections in New York. Such things as them were never heard of in Andrew Jackson's time, or when the Democrats were in power. I call you; what have you got?" said Brown.

"I've got pretty nigh an invincible—here's two little pairs of kings," replied Robinson, as he laid his hand on the table.

"Oh, I can rake them—here's four bullets," said Brown as he reached for the pot.

"Great snakes!" exclaimed Robinson; "you're a nice pill to be talking about the corruption of the administration, ain't you? If I couldn't play poker honester'n you I'd never ta'k about other folks. You and Mr. Smith continue this game while I go out and rustle some more soap.—Austin (Nev.) Reveille.

An Eccentric Editor.

Some personal reminiscences of Mr. Bloss, the well-known editor of the Cincinnati Enquirer, are furnished by that paper. At the time of the sad accident which resulted in his death, Mr. Bloss had been connected with the Enquirer twenty-four years. During the last few years of his service he was a privileged character, and could write as much or as little as he chose. His uncompromising honesty and independence often placed him in a position of antagonism to the policy of the paper, and the responsible editors were frequently obliged to cross out what he had written after it had been put in type. He has been known to write an editorial in direct opposition to one that had appered in the Enquirer a few hours before. Productions of this sort, of course, never saw the light of day. Before his matter had been put in type none of his editorial associates could read it. There were just four compositors in the office—known as Bloss' compositors—who could decipher his manuscript. Three of them have been working for the Enquirer over twenty years, and the fourth eighteen years. He was a man of large information, intense vanity, lovable disposition, unwearied industry, and convivial habits, without dignity or balance of mind. He never traveled, and was never easy away from his desk. Once when he had been almost ordered away for a vacation he returned at the expiration of three days, and, complaining of loneliness, was allowed to resume his work. Bloss was not more than five feet six inches in height, and scarcely ever reached 120 pounds in weight. He was forty-nine years of age.

How to Get Rid of Flies.

The warm, sultry season is rapidly coming on, and with it the advent of the troublesome house fly. Many and various have been the devices to rid the household of this intolerable pest, but none have been successful. The Rev. George Mears Drought, writing from Ireland, says:

"For three years I have lived in a town, and during that time my sitting-room has been free from flies, three or four only walking about my breakfast-table, while all my neighbors' rooms were crowded. I often congratulated myself on my escape, but never knew the reason of it until two days ago. I then had occasion to move my goods to another house, while I remained on for two days longer. Among other things moved were two boxes of geraniums and calceolaries, which stood in my window, the latter being always open to its full extent, top and bottom. The boxes were not gone half an hour before my room was as full of flies as those around me. This, to me, is a new discovery, and perhaps it may serve to encourage others in that which is always a source of pleasure, and which now proves also to be a source of comfort, viz., window gardening."

A Clash of Opinions.

An old Baptist minister enforced the necessities of difference of opinion by argument:

"Now, if everybody had been of my opinion, they would have wanted my old woman."

One of the deacons who sat just behind him, responded:

"Yes; and if everybody was of my opinion, nobody would have her."—Religious Herald.

Great Borrowers.

The capacity of the Spaniards for borrowing is remarkable. Although they have added over $1,000,000,000 to their public debt since 1872, they are trying to raise $16,000,000 more by pledging the customs revenue of Cuba. British capitalists may wisely hesitate before accepting that security.

THE SADDLE.

A Feat of Endurance at Fleetwood Park, New York—A Mexican Rides One Hundred and Fifty-five Miles in Seven Hours.

[From the New York Times.]

Francisco Peralto, the Mexican rider, succeeded yesterday in running twenty-five mustangs 155 miles in seven hours. The exact time of his riding, from start to finish, was six hours, fifty-eight minutes, and forty-three seconds. The manager of the race advertised that Peralto would ride twenty-five mustangs 155 miles in seven hours for a stake of $10,000, $5,000 of which backed the horses, and the other $5,000 backed time. At the start there were 200 people; at 1 o'clock there were 500; by 2 o'clock the number had reached 1,500, and from that time to the close the spectators filing into the park enclosure made a continuous procession. Every train on the Harlem road was crowded with passengers for Fleetwood, and the highways leading to the park were covered with vehicles of every possible description, pressing on with full loads of passengers. The sheds at the park were inadequate to store away the carriages, and the late comers hitched up wherever they could find a tree or post with sufficient hold on earth to keep their horses fast. Then came road-wagons, buggies, gigs, phaetons, and dog-carts, everything up to the great hotel coaches, which came into the park with a rumble like distant thunder. The grand stand was packed like a herring-box. The entire number of spectators could not have been less than 15,000, and of this number it was stated that over 12,000 paid the admission fee of $1. The company was of more than average respectability. It was made up of men and woman who had been attracted by the novelty of the race, and who came to witness the performance of the frisky little mustangs and the skill and endurance of their rider. There was very few betting men on the grounds, and very little betting. One man sold pools and his trade was very slow. At the outset pools sold even on rider and time. At the beginning of the fifty-first mile, Peralto being over two minutes behind time, owing to a rest of four minutes which he had taken, the selling changed, and sold $20 to $12 in favor of time. At the end of the sixtieth mile, Peralto was 10¼ seconds behind time, but a contrary impression prevailed about the poolseller's stand, and the seller was crying, "Peralto twenty minutes ahead," and was by this deception again selling pools without odds. This uncertain state of affairs continued to the end of the race.

Peralto's riding was admired by everybody. He sat upon his horse with perfect ease and grace. He looked part and parcel of the mustang that he rode. They might dance about as much as they pleased; they could not shake him off nor tire him. He has been accustomed to a saddle ever since he was old enough to straddle a horse, and is probably one of the best riders that ever visited New York. The horses seemed to behave better with him than with Parker. There were a few bolters, but the bolts were not attended with the serious losses of time that bothered Parker so much.

The care that was taken of Peralto was in marked contrast with the treatment of Parker, the rider of the last race. Parker was left to himself, and a common stableman. He ate hard-tack, ham sanwiches, and mince pie, and drank ice water by the quart. He rode always in the same direction, and came in at the end of the 226th mile blind in consequence. Peralto was in care of Dr. C. G. Stanley, and was treated in a scientific manner. His food was principally of beef tea, taken with proper frequency in proper quantities. He was furnished with fresh caps, with long visors, at intervals of five or six miles, which not only kept his head cool, but also by reason of the changes in the colors of the visors greatly relieved his eyes. He was also required to change his direction repeatedly, and though the greater part of the race was run from the right to the left, a very considerable number of miles was made in the opposite direction. He drove his horses much faster than Parker drove them. Parker's best time was 2:20; Peralto made several miles in 2:17¼. The best time, however, was 2:14¼ and 2:12¼. The first fifty miles was completed in two hours, thirteen minutes and fifty seconds, the first 100 miles in four hours and thirty-one minutes.

Following is the actual running time taken at the close of each ten miles:

California Land Barons.

The possessions of those immense land proprietors, Messrs. Miller & Lux, extend a distance of sixty-eight miles, and this body is from five to forty miles wide. On the east side they have other smaller tracts. Henry Miller, who takes personal charge of the real estate of the firm, here and in other parts of the State, displays a wonderful executive ability, and furnishes employment to hundreds of men. He has what is known as the "Home Ranch" and the "Canal Ranch," besides several dairy ranches on this body of land. He keeps an army of carpenters, wagon-makers, fence-builders, teamsters, farm hands, etc., not omitting detectives, and it is said he knows what all of them are about. This year the average of grain is not so large as in some former years, being only about 3,000 acres. There are on the premises 2,500 acres of alfalfa, from which last season three crops were taken and the fields twice pastured; there are also 1,400 acres just sown the present season. We are informed by one of Miller's men that there were two strings of fence on the land, each sixty-eight miles long, besides the various cross fences. To give some idea of the cattle belonging to this young kingdom, we were informed that this year they branded 25,000 calves. Aside from owning a large interest in the San Joaquin and Kings River canal, which runs from the mouth of the Fresno slough to Los Banos creek, a distance of forty miles, Miller & Lux are also constructing a canal on the east side of the San Joaquin, which is intended to take water from some of the numerous sloughs in that region and overflow their pasture-land in the dry season. The mouth of Salt, or St. Louis Camp slough, is fifteen miles above Hill's Ferry, and five miles up the slough stands one of Miller's warehouses, which has a storage capacity of 1,200 tons of wheat, and which is some twenty miles from his principal warehouses.—Stockton Newspaper.

Horrible Scene at an Execution.

[From an Account of the Hanging of Samuel Frost, at Boston.]

Frost had risen from his chair when the reading of the warrant was begun, and the deputy behind him had fastened the straps around his legs and arms, and before the reading was finished had shut out the light from him forever by drawing the black cap over his head. There was not an instant's delay, and less than five minutes had passed between the time the doomed man first took his step upon the gallows stairs and that in which his body was thrown downward by the release of the drop. The drop fell with hardly an audible sound, and the light body of the murderer brought the rope to a strong tension. The first thrill of a shudder had not run through the more sensitive of the spectators when the body was seen spinning at the end of the rope, almost headless, a fearful tear extending over the front of the throat, and the blood gushing out in streams. Every eye was riveted on the startling and unexpected spectacle as the body turned round, first disclosing and then concealing this gash. The blood, forced upward by the arterial movements, spurted fountain-like upward from one to two feet, the stream falling to the floor in a circle round the hanging body. This circle extended even to the framework of the gallows, which was in many places sprinkled with the blood. The welling life-blood poured from the wound down the front of the body and trickled from the feet, forming a pool directly beneath the body. This recital doubtless seems full of horror, but it falls far short of the realities of the scene. For some two minutes the arterial gushings of blood continued, and the slow dripping of blood continued a little longer. Drs. Woodward and Jewett then stepped under the gallows and made their examination of the body. The knot of the rope had been placed under Frost's left ear, almost around to the center of the neck. Frost was a man of no especial muscular development, and, though he weighed but 120 pounds, the drop was enough not only to break his neck, but to sever the spinal column entirely, leaving the body hanging by the integuments of the rear portion only. The body was allowed to hang a few minutes after the examination by the doctors, when it was lowered and carried from beneath the gallows.

Notes on Weights and Measures.

Our American bushel is the same as that which in England is known as the Winchester bushel. An imperial English bushel is equal to 1.03152 Winchester bushels, a difference of about three per cent. In the London markets grain is quoted by the quarter, equal to eight imperial or to 8.25216 Winchester bushels. In Liverpool grain is marketed by weight instead of bulk, using the cental of 100 pounds. Flour, for some reason, is bought and sold in England in parcels of 280 pounds. In London maise is quoted in quarters; Liverpool, in parcels of 480 pounds. American flour is the only flour marketed in barrels of 196 pounds each; California barrels contain 200 pounds, or two centals, each. Sometimes flour imported into the United Kingdom is designated by hundred weights (cwt.), each of which is one-twentieth of the "long" ton, equal to twenty centals, 2,000 pounds, is universally used. East of the Rocky mountains both the long and the short are used, but for different measurements. A shilling in English money is equal to twenty-five cents.—Department of Agricultural Report.

Notes in Colorado.

Nym Crinkle describes, in the World, an unusually accomplished man whom he has discovered living in a rough part of Colorado. This individual is an Englishman who settled there out of choice. He "can throw a lariat and discuss Carlyle with equal skill, and can decipher the glacial marks on his own bowlders and ride a refactory burro with equal skill. This convinces Crinkle that "the Daniel Boone business has not died out." Twenty miles from Colorado Springs he found an English castle reproduced in logs, and occupied by an educated English family of cattle herders. In the same region he met a fellow in a white corduroy suit, looking at first glance like a dandy, and having a hang-dog air. "You see," was the fellow's explanation of his shamefacedness, "I was all right till I got to Canon City, and I had these duds washed, and they come out white. I 'xpect I look like a darned horse thief, anyhow!" Being clean, unwittingly and unexpectedly, he was unhappy.

How Did It Get There?

Mr. Laughrey, of Jefferson township, in digging a well, last week, at the depth of fifty feet below the surface struck what appeared to be a drift or deposit of soil containing large quantities of vegetable matter and partially decayed wood. Among the pieces of wood taken out was a board one inch in thickness, six inches in width and eighteen inches in length. The board is tongued and grooved, and in every particular resembles a piece of modern flooring. The land upon which the well is dug is a high prairie, and no improvements had ever before been made upon it, to the certain knowledge of old settlers in the vicinity. Now, how did that piece of man's unmistakable handiwork get there? Is it a relic of the Mound-builders, or some pre-historic race? — Lineville (Iowa) Tribune.

Shakespeare.

William Shakespeare was born on the 23d of April, 1564—he died on the fifty-second anniversary of his birth, April 23, 1616. According to one account, he died of a fever that was brought on by drinking too much at a "merry meeting" he had with two other poets, Ben Johnson and Michael Drayton; and Hawthorne mentions the Stratford gossip that he was "the victim of convivial habits, who met his death by tumbling into a ditch on his way home from a drinking-bout."

A Precocious Philosopher.

A young philosopher of seven years of age, who had got far enough to hear the Holy Scriptures disputed by science, listened attentively in his father's parlor, the other evening, to a warm discussion on the Darwinian theory, and, after the guests had departed, somewhat surprised the paternal with:

"Father, I don't believe Mr. Darwin is right." "What!" said the parent, looking down at this unexpected reasoner, who stood before him with a little Bible in his hand; "you do not, and why?"

"Because, papa, my Bible says 'God created man in His own image,' and I don't believe it was a monkey."

"Well, well," said the sire, laughing, "run along, Tommy, you are too young to talk about such things."

"But, papa, almost the next verse says, 'God saw everything He had made, and behold it was very good.' Now it wasn't good if men were monkeys, was it? For you are prettier than a monkey, ain't you, papa?"

A Centennial Suggestion.

A correspondent of a Chicago newspaper, writing from Joliet, Ill., makes a proposition for doing honor to independence day that seems appropriate and entitled to consideration of patriotic citizens. It is this: Plant a gun on Bunker Hill, as a starting point of a line of cannon; from there to San Francisco, each within sure hailing distance of its predecessor. At sunrise, on the Fourth, fire this cannon, or line of artillery stretching across the continent, starting at Boston and closing at the Golden Gate, and then repeat a like return salute, or round, of the same guns, beginning at the latter place, and closing at Bunker Hill.

There would be something grand and sublime (the correspondent says) in thus ushering in this glorious day with such patriotic thunder, as it mingled with the mighty voice of two oceans, and went booming through the valleys, sending its echoes in successive peals from hill-top to hill-top, and from shore to shore!

Inferior Beings.

"It is indeed remarkable," said a noble Burlingtonian, sitting in his parlor conversing with a few visitors, "most remarkable, that in all ages, the records of which are bright with the glorious music of masters whose names are written on every page of the world's history in letters of gold, no woman has ever witten an opera or composed an oratorio that could link her name to undying fame. In the very walks of art, where one would suppose woman should reign upon an undivided throne, she is little more than a menial, an humble attendant waiting upon, and meekly subject to, the whims of her master, who——" Just then a woman's voice from the back yard split the April air like the sweep of a saber: "John Jenkins! You come here and keep this baby out of the soapsuds while I put out the clothes." And then the committee rose, and the noble Burlingtonian being excused by unanimous consent, the house soon after adjourned. —Burlington Hawk-Eye.

Five Hundred Liquor Venders Arrested in One Day.

It was a sweeping enforcement of the Sunday law that was undertaken yesterday by the police of the city. Nearly 500 dealers in liquors and lager beer were arrested at their places of business and taken to the courts, some of which were open all day, and one of them up to a late hour last night. There were 300 cases brought before the Washington Place Police court alone. The victims were taken from establishments of all classes, even from the Hotel Brunswick and other places of the same grade. Some of the liquor dealers resorted to sundry devices to evade the law; but, in most instances, with poor success. The parties put under arrest were nearly all let out on bail, or discharged, through the day, or in the course of the evening. The raid was carried out under the orders of the Police Commissioners.—N. Y. Sun.

No Dead-heads Need Apply.

The charter of the Nevada county narrow gauge railroad in California, a new road just completed, prohibits the company from issuing free passes to any but persons in its employ. The insertion in the charter of this provision was the first effective expression of public sentiment in California against dead-heading by railroads, a sentiment which culminated last winter in the passage of a law forbidding all railroads in the State from issuing free passes except to their employes and members of the transportation commission and their servants.

Sure to be Fleeced.

An eminent Scottish divine happened to meet at the house of a lawyer, whom he considered too sharp a practitioner, two of his parishioners. The lawyer jocularly and ungraciously put the question, "Doctor, these are members of your flock; may I ask, do you look upon them as white or black sheep?" "I don't know," answered the divine, dryly, "whether they are black or white sheep; but I knew if they are long here they are pretty sure to be fleeced."

Blackguard Journalism.

Said Horace Greeley: There is nothing easier than to edit a blackguard paper, and nothing more difficult than to get up a newspaper free from foulness and blackguardism. Fish women and bar-room loafers are skilled in the art of bandying epithets and bespattering each other with dirty words. It requires no brains to do this; but it does require both heart and brains to print a newspaper that a decent man or woman can read without a blush.

HERE is the punishment the Bainbridge (Ga.) Democrat would have meted to Rev. A. C. Kendrick, of Atlanta: "He deserves to be branded, stripped to the skin, and made to run the gauntlet of the outraged people of Georgia, each one of whom, being armed with a whip of steel, to lacerate his carcass of human rottenness as he passes, until he falls to earth dead, an example to the country for all time to come."

A WOMAN has been making a living in Chicago by applying to persons who advertised for servants, but making her visits tardily that the places would be previously filled. Then, with a woe-begone air, she would say that she had come from the country to get the employment, and had no money with which to return. About a dollar in each place was the profit of the business, until the police interfered.

KISSING.

Lesbia, let's live and love, and never weigh
What crabbed, censuring old men do say.
The sun may set and rise; when our short sun
Sets once, our night of sleep will ne'er be done.
Kiss me a thousand times, an hundred more;
A thousand, then an hundred as before,
We'll kiss, and kiss, and blend our kisses so
That we our count of kisses may not know;
For fear some evil eye malign our blisses,
Knowing that we have had so many kisses.

A Pig-tail War.

There is a pig-tail war in China. The following paragraph in recent Chinese advices explains it:

"A singular panic has been produced in numerous cities by cutting off of the pig-tails of large numbers of the populace. This is evidently the work of an organized band, which, mixing in the crowds at night, find no difficulty in performing their operation. The low class of citizens, however, attribute it to supernatural agency. The real purpose is unknown. Some believe it to have a political bearing; others that it is merely a device of ingenious speculators in human hair on a large scale. 1st. That we re-affirm the principles set forth in the platform of the Democratic State Convention and earnestly recommend the nomination of the Hon. Thos. A. Hendricks, as the candidate for the Presidency at the St. Louis convention.

RESOLVED. That this convention is in favor of the nomination of the Hon. Freeman Kelly for Congress, and do instruct our delegates to vote for his nomination, at the convention to be held at Goshen, on the 11th of July, 1876.

Also the adoption of the following resolutions:

RESOLVED. That we recommend that the Senatorial and Judicial Committees be held at Auburn, at a time designated by the Central Committeemen of the counties interested.

RESOLVED: That we recommend that hereafter we hold mass nominating conventions, and that each precinct be entitled to the number of votes as may be determined by the County Central Committee.

WHEREAS. The practice heretofore adopted by those wishing for nominations, as candidates for office, of canvassing the county, to secure said nominations, is fraught with many evils. Among which may be mentioned, the loss of time both by the candidates and people, the crimination and recrimination, too often practiced; causing bitterness, strife and consequent divisions in the party, not always healed within the time that intervenes between the adjournment of the nominating convention, and the election therefore.

RESOLVED. Without casting any reflection on those who have heretofore canvassed for nominations, that the good of the country, and the welfare of the Democratic party, require that said practice, of canvassing for nominations, be disconsidered, and we recommend that, hereafter, nominations be made without the names announced, or to who canvass for nomination.

RESOLVED. That the thanks of this convention, is hereby tendered to the Cornet Band of Auburn, and the Marshal Band of Franklin-tp., for the excellent music furnished upon the occasion.

We recommend that the following be laid upon the table.

RESOLVED. That the Democracy of DeKalb county instead of nominating by delegate conventions as heretofore, adopt the popular vote or primary system in the future.

After brief address by Mr. Kelly, Maj. Sprott, and Mr. Little, the convention adjourned "sine die."

All Goods Retailed at Wholesale Prices

This is the Only Secret of Our Immense Trade.

we purchase at first hands and sell direct to the consumer, so there is no middlemen to eat up profits. Some goods—take teas for instance—pass through four different hands before they reach consumers, and each one has to have his profit, so that 40 to 50 per cent. is added to price. The impor has his profit of 10 per cent, the jobbing merchant his profit of 10 per cent., the speculator and whol sale merchants, 10 to 20 per cent, and the retailer all he can get. So Sugars, Coffees, Spices, Prune Fruits, Tobaccos, Liquors, or anything we deal in. Our customers get the benefit of all these inter edi item profits. No middlemen with us. The Sunday School Convention met in the Methodist and Baptist churches last Tuesday and Wednesday, day and evening. The attendance was large and a good time was had. The children had a story from each speaker which was enjoyed. One of them begged of the little ones not to go to sleep while he was talking. Experience and natural ability is ahead of common schools.

We understand that Gen Reub. Williams has repurchased a half interest in the Indianian at Warsaw, and will assume editorial control on the 1st of July. The Indianian without Reub is like lemonade without the lemon, or a mint julip without the necessary intoxicating ingredients, and we wish him the splendid success he had before.

It is a question of veracity between Keer, a gentleman of unimpeachable indignity heretofore, and one Harney, formerly an assistant doorkeeper of the House, as to whether Mr. Keer ever received any money for an appointment there is no corroborating testimony as to this point, yet Mr. Keer is feeling terribly grieved over the matter, and it is certainly hastening his end, for he is sinking rapidly, and may not live out the season.

There has been still another reduction in passenger rates. The Baltimore & Ohio road has reduced the rate from Chicago to Baltimore and Washington to $14. The Michigan Central is now selling tickets for $14.40 from Chicago to Philadelphia over the Michigan Central, Great Western, Erie & Lehigh Valley roads. It is rumored that, the Grand Trunk and Vermont Central will make the rate from Boston to Chicago as low as $12.

We cannot too highly commend the following, from the Milford News, to the thoughtful consideration of young America: "There are but very few boys who know how to treat older people. It is not in good taste for a young boy to call an older person by his given name. Age ought to command respect. The custom of many of our fast boys which calls an old man Hello, Dave, is a mean custom and ought to be abandoned at once. Commence aright, while young, and you are sure to be right when old.

The County Convention.

The Democratic County Convention held here last Saturday, was more largely attended than any ever before known and the enthusiasm and harmony was complete. We felt differently than we did at the result of the last Convention, out of which arose bickerings and discord. Not so this time. The delegation was an intelligent one, a very fair representation of the people of the county. We believe the nominations were made fairly, and the ticket selected is a most excellant one. The number of candidates for the various positions, rather induced our Republican friends to believe that there would be a bitter fight, and they must have been anxious to see it, for a great number were present. But the gallant Democracy stood true to their posts and no dissensions were heard throughout the entire session. All was harmony and good feeling, and with this unity of purpose, an earnest purpose, to retain our tax-ridden people from the corrupt and degenerating influences of the present administration, we will go forward in the campaign, each putting his shoulder to the wheel, active and vigilant in the cause of the right, until the ideas of October shall usher in a glorious success and victory shall perch upon our banners.

And now is the time to organize, and do gallant services in the cause. Though there may be some who are not entirely pleased with the ticket, and we have yet to hear of there ever being a ticket nominated in this sad world of ours, that did suit everybody, yet we must acknowledge even those who are not pleased, must concede the fact that there is not a bad man on the ticket, that they are qualified for the positions they aspire to, that they are honest and capable, and therefore worthy of our support. The issues in the campaign are too great, the future is fraught with too much interest for our common wealth to pull back now. Pull back is not the style of a good democrat, and no one worthy of the name, will hesitate to lend his strong right arm to strike the blow that is to free us from the ills under which our country now suffers.

Let us have that quiet steady work, not bitter partisan gusto, that shall deliver us out of the bondage of the present administration, that will put a party in power, which, should it prove as regreant to its trusts as has the Republican party, we will as earnestly assail as we now support.

A most startling revelation was made by our neighbor of the Republican last week. It is all the more startling because of its being made by our neighbor. Now, Bro. Weamer is not regarded as a walking volcano, but rather as an easy, elegant gentleman, and this announcement, coming as it did like a clap of thunder in the clear sunlight of noonday, is a contradiction, a kind of locus nature, that is so difficult sometimes of human comprehension. The announcement was that some body had been copying extracts from our letter from Washington without giving the proper credit. Well, as long as we don't object, we don't see why our neighbor should be a mean man. That a newspaper office of which he had once been foreman, should adopt our style and diction, is only an evidence of good taste and fine discrimination yet we fear from subsequent events that these qualities werevested only in the editor of said office, and that the good seeds fell among stones and brambles, the employees being the aforementioned S and B. But we are glad to see that our neighbor is watching our columns so closely, or that some body else is for him. It shows a literary acumen of distinguishing between original and selected matter, rarely equaled, and now wasting its sweetness on the desert air. For the benefit of Bro W. we will say that the last sentence above is not original.

The Centennial.

We were suprised on our arrival to find impressions here that the centennial was a failure. Such is surely not the case. We left there last Thursday after several days spent in viewing the unnumerable attractions on exhibition. We would almost guarantee to pay the expense of any one who would go there and not be interested, not get a good return for his money. It is simply immense, and cannot be described. There are about fifty acres under cover under the control of the managers, and about twenty five more belonging to states, &c. The dense department in the main building, with its wonderful exhibition of handiwork, the Japanese, with this curious devices, the great organ, the large blocks of gold and silver, the great corliss engine, 1400 horse power, with seven miles of shafting, the walk through the main building is twenty-two miles without repeating a step, the making of Brussels Carpet, of gold watches, of 200 newspapers in one minute, of 2000 envelopes an hour, and hundreds of other things, all to please the eye and inform the mind. The artificial cataract of water falling fifty feet, in machinery hall, the fine display of beasts and birds, &c., in the government building, the many queer and useful implements, in agricultural hall, the fine delicate work of the ladies, in the woman's pavillion, the old style New England cabin, and grandest of all, the Art Gallery building, with its thousands of contributions from the master spirits of this and other ages, the beautiful lawns and inviting seats beneath the cool shade, the long walks flooded on each side with beautiful flowers, the music of bands the playing of fountains, the floating of flags, and busy moving, but not overcrowded throng, all make up a scene not to be described, and never again be seen by mortal eye living. We don't get any pay for this article, so that we are untrameled in our opinions and have no desire to state other than facts. If we had ten years to live and only ten hundred dollars to live on, we would spend the money for the last year at the Centennial, and live one year less. All who can afford it should go by all means. This is not from the Mac-a-cheek Press.

We were present in the House when Blaine made his grand dramatic attack on Knott, last Tuesday week. Knott done wrong we think in keeping back the dispatch, though he did not do so with any evil intent toward Blain, believing all the time it was a spurious message. When Blaine walked down the aisle, as he always does when he wants to produce an effect, and asked Knott about the dispatch, Mr. Knott replied truthfully that he had. Jim, with his peculiar intonation charged that it was suppressed purposly and the excitement became intense. But the next day or so, Blaine went too far. He charged Knott with having appointed this sub-committee, after the Tarbox resolution was introduced in the House. Mr. Knott proved by Mr. Fry, Blaine's colleague, that the sub-committee, had been appointed weeks before that, but Blaine failed to show the same manliness that Knott had in the House by acknowledging he was mistaken. Most of these southern members are manly, generous, and honorable. Judge Hunton, of Verginia, whom Blaine tried to excite and confuse, acted nobly under the abuse of Blaine, yielding every time to questions from Mr. Blaine, but Hunton was calm and unruffled, and Blaine saw in a few moments that he could do nothing with him. Blaine is a perfect bully in these scenes, and attempts to talk down all opposition. Somebody to a point of order, and asked the chair whether the remark Blaine had made was parliamentary. Blaine answered back, "of course it was," to the discourtesy of the presiding officer, who answers all such questions. Little Sammy Cox was on the chair. Sammy is not very large, but he has as much back-bone as a man who weighs a ton. He promptly remarked that the gentleman from Maine might sit down, as there was a question of order raised, and he rapped until the big man from Maine did sit down. He then said it was proper for the chair to answer questions, and not the gentleman from Maine. Blaine did not like it, but we think we saw a merry twinkle in the eye of Cox at the result. BLIND NED.

Who is dat 'ar a playin'? Shucks! I wish I wasn't blin';
But when de Lord see tuk my eyes, he lef' my years behin'.
Is dat you, Mahs'r Bob? I t'ought I reco'nised your bowin';
I said I knowed 'twas you, soon's I heard the fiddle goin'.

Sho! dat ain't right—jes' le' me show you how to play dat tune—
I feel like I could make the fiddle talk dis afternoon.
Now, don't you see that counter's jes' a leetle bit too high?
Well, nebber mind—I guess you'll learn to time her by an' by.

You's jes' like all musicianers dat learns to play by note;
You ain't got music in you, so you has to have it wrote;
Now dat ain't science—why the debbil don't you play by yeah?
For dat's de onliest kin' ob music fittin' for to heah.

Do you suppose, when David was a pickin' on de harp,
He ebber knowed de difference atwixt a flat an' sharp?
But any time [illegible], he could pick it all de same,
For David knowed [illegible] 'dough he didn't know de name.

Now, what shall I [illegible] give, sah, an' quick,
Well, sah, j[illegible] "Cap'n Dick."
Yah! yah! yo[illegible] you want to pat?
You'll hab to practice awhile afore you ekals dat!

Dere ain't nobody 'round dis place kin play wid Uncle Ned;
Dey hain't got it in deir fingers, ne'der in deir head;
Dat fiddler Bill dey talks about—I heered him play a piece,
An' I declar' it sounded like a fox among de geese.

A violeen is like an 'ooman; mighty hard to guide,
An' mighty hard to keep in order after once its buyed—
Dere's allus somefin 'bout it out ob kelter, more or less,
An' 'taint de fancies' lookin' ones dat allus does de bes'.

Dis yer's a splendid inst'ument—I 'spec' it cost a heap;
You ra'ly ought to let me hab dis fiddle for to keep—
It ain't no use to you, sah; for, widout it's in de man,
He kain't get music out de fines' fiddle in the lan'.

It 'quires a power ob science for to fiddle, sah, you see,
An' science comes by natur'; dat's de way it is wid me—
But Lord! dat Bill! It 'muses me to heah him talkin' big;
You never heard a braggin' fiddler play a jig!

But Bill, he is a caution, yeah! I wonder now whar he
An' oder folks I knows of—yes, I wonder whar'll dey be
In hebben, when de music's playin', an' de angels shout—
If Bill should jine the chorus, dey would hab to put him out.

Well, good-by, Mahs'r Bob, sah; when you's nuffin else to do
Jes' sen' for dis ol' darkey, an' he'll come an' play for you:
An' don't gib up your practisin'—you's only sebenteen,
An' maybe when you's ol' as me you'll play de violeen.

NO. 25 IN OUR SQUARE.

It is a large brick house, with five windows to the front, and a long balcony, full of mignonette and geraniums throughout the summer. For a long time nothing was known of its inhabitants beyond the information contained in the directory, where they were registered as Miss Keith and Miss Indiana Keith. Indeed, for ten years Our Square was kept in total ignorance of their history. By sight we all knew them well, for frequently, if the weather was fair, they were to be seen walking in the Square garden, and were generally accompanied by a dark-complexioned but pretty girl, and a Hindu, who, though dressed like an Englishwoman, was supposed to be an ayah. The little Leila, who must have been about three or four years old when they came to No. 25, never joined in the games of the other children in the Square, but used to walk with the ladies and the ayah, chattering away in a tongue which the wondering nurses supposed to be Hindustanee, and which seemed much more familiar to her than English.

At church the Misses Keith were most regular; and generally, on a Sunday morning, Leila accompanied them, with the ayah, who seemed to follow her like a shadow. In all parochial charity lists their names appeared, and the clergyman was inclined to ascribe many an anonymous donation to their liberality; and often, on a week-day afternoon, their carriage, instead of taking the direction of the park, would convey them to the workhouse or hospital, where they were ever most welcome.

Of their personal appearance we have hitherto said nothing. Miss Keith, who might have been about thirty when she came to live in Our Square, was small and insignificant-looking; but her expression was mild and agreeable, and the tone of her voice pleasant. Miss Indiana, who must have been nearly ten years younger than her sister, was tall and slight, and her features were delicate and beautiful; but her whole air and manner was that of a person who has passed through a great sorrow; and the sallowness of her complexion rather marred her general effect. Her voice, more musical than her sister's, was mournful in its tone, expressive of a sort of quiet weariness, and very different from Anne's cheerful, rapid accents; and yet, dissimilar as they were, the closest affection united the two. And now, instead of letting our readers grope, as we did, in the dark, we will, without further preamble, admit them into the secret of No. 25, and tell them the story as it was told to us nearly twenty years ago.

Anne and Indiana Keith were the only children of Sir William Keith, who occupied a high judicial appointment at Agra, and had spent the greater part of his life in India. Soon after the birth of Indiana, Lady Keith was ordered to return to England, for the sake of her health, and her two children went with her; and when, in a couple of years, she died, they remained there with their grandmother, till her death deprived them of their home, and they went out to join their father in India. At that time Indiana was seventeen years of age, and her beauty struck and delighted all the English residents of the city. Her rich coloring was a positive feast to the eye, after the sallow cheeks of the Agra ladies, and only enhanced the luster of her glorious dark eyes; so that in a very short time the whole garrison was at her feet, and all the civil servants were hopelessly in love. The elder sister was completely thrown in the shade, and she knew it; but she was quite free from any feeling of jealousy, and delighted in the universal admiration that Indiana inspired. Of course, among her worshipers there was one that the beauty preferred; and, though the spirit of coquetry which possessed her rendered her sentiments doubtful for a time, she submitted at last to become the betrothed of Capt. Henry Willoughby, of her Majesty's One Hundred and Thirty-first Regiment of Foot, a gallant officer and excellent man, who was a universal favorite, and especially approved of by Sir William. It is true his means were small, but then the lady's fortune would amply suffice both; and, as there was no particular reason for delay, Indiana consented to the day being fixed for the marriage.

One morning, as she and her sister were occupied in looking over a number of trousseau dresses just arrived from Calcutta, she was told that a person wished to speak with her, and two native women entered the room, the first thickly veiled, the other with her face uncovered, and carrying a baby of about a year old. To Indiana's rather hasty inquiry of what they wanted, the foremost answered by removing her veil, and displaying features which, though dark, were strikingly handsome, and then, approaching the white beauty, timidly asked, in broken English, if it was true that the Bebee was going to marry the Soubahdar Willoughby.

Indiana nodded assent, with a smile and a blush, and Meenah Baee continued, "Does the English law allow men to have two wives?"

"Good heavens!" exclaimed Indiana, angrily, "what does all this nonsense mean?" while her calmer sister answered, "Englishmen can never take a second wife till the first is dead."

"Then the Bebee mustn't marry the Soubahdar Sahib;" and she handed to the sisters a piece of paper, which Indiana took and opened, and perused with an angry frown, though, as she finished it, she laughed, and said, "This is some stupid joke meant to frighten me. Somebody has been making a fool of you, I fear." Then, turning to her sister, "Look, Anne; a contract of marriage between Henry Willoughby, Captain in her Majesty's One-hundred-and-thirty-first Foot, and Meenah Baee, daughter of Holkar's Dewan, with some unreadable name or other, dated two years ago at Indore. Do you mean to say," and she turned fiercely to the woman, "that you consider yourself married to Capt. Willoughby?"

Meenah Baee answered timidly in the affirmative. A thick cloud rested on Indiana's brow, as she again examined the document.

"It is his signature," she said, with choking voice. "Here is a note I had from him yesterday; it is undoubtedly his writing—signed by a clergyman, the Rev. W. Jones."

"There is Henry coming," exclaimed Anne, who was looking out of the window.

"We will have him in here," said Indiana, coldly, and gave orders to a servant. "You, Meenah Baee, remain veiled till I bid you show yourself."

Capt. Willoughby entered the room with a look of deep depression on his face, which at any other time would have roused Indiana's tenderest sympathy; but now, without observing it, she bowed in a manner that at once startled and confounded him, and, before he could approach her, said: "Capt. Willoughby, you are come at a moment when your testimony is wanted. Have you ever seen that person before?"

At her signal Meenah Baee raised her veil, and Willoughby started slightly, as he beheld the beautiful face, and answered, rather vehemently, for he fancied that Indiana was jealous, "Never, that I can remember."

"Would it be inconvenient to you to exert your memory a little?" demanded Indiana, in the same cold, hard voice; while Meenah Baee, exclaimed, "It is he! it is my husband!" threw herself at his feet, embraced his knees, and kissed the hem of his garment, in her rapture.

Poor Capt. Willoughby, thoroughly bewildered by this ebullition of tenderness on the part of a perfect stranger, and by his betrothed's sudden change of manner, and also oppressed by the sad news that he had to communicate, could not speak for a while, and his silence confirmed Indiana in her suspicions of his guilt. At length he replied, "I cannot recollect having ever seen her before, and what she has to do with you and me, on my honor I cannot conceive."

"Your conscience should tell you," said Indiana. "So you persist in disavowing her?"

But Henry Willoughby's patience could last no longer, and, without noticing the last question, he exclaimed, "What all this means, Indiana, you best know; but I confess it appears to me a very dull jest, especially under the present circumstances. I have sorrow enough already without your adding to it. You, from whom I hoped for comfort," he added, with emotion. After a moment he recovered himself, and went on, "My regiment is just ordered to march, at a moment's notice, against the Sikhs, and we start this evening."

Indiana's cheek grew pale, but otherwise she gave no sign of emotion, as she handed him the paper, and said, "It may appear a jest to you, but it certainly is none to me. Read that."

Willoughby read it as desired, and then said, "I never signed this paper. It is true I was at Indore about the time when this marriage is said to have taken place; but surely, Indiana, you cannot believe such a story about me? O, Anne! she cannot really believe it?"

Miss Keith shook her head sorrowfully, but did not speak; and Indiana, without looking at him, said, "Meenah Baee, can you swear to this man as your husband?" and the woman unhesitatingly answered, "Yes."

On being further questioned by Anne, she related that her husband had been obliged to leave Indore a few days after the marriage, but that she had lived on there till the birth of her child, when her father, in ignorance of it all, and of her change of faith, was anxious to give her in marriage to one of her own nation; and, to escape his importunity, she had fled Agra, and, while making inquiries respecting her husband, she had seen him on parade, and hearing that he was about to be married, had come forward to assert her own claims.

In answer to all this, Capt. Willoughby could give nothing but an emphatic denial; but he owned that appearances were against him; and Sir William, whom Anne had summoned to the conference, looked disturbed, and said that it was just as well that Willoughby should have to leave Agra now, before the story got abroad. He would cause the affair to be thoroughly sifted, and the witnesses sought out whose names were appended to the document, and for the present, anyhow, the engagement had better be considered as at an end.

Capt. Willoughby, whose pride was deeply wounded at his word being doubted, acquiesced, and approached Indiana to bid her farewell; but his offered hand was rejected; and haughtily bowing, she turned away; and when that evening the One-hundred-and-thirty-first left Agra, in high spirits at the prospect of an encounter with the Sikhs, perhaps the saddest heart among them was that of Henry Willoughby, whose only hope now was that he might fall in battle, and that Indiana might then repent her injustice. But he was disappointed, and passed through all the battles of Moodkee, Ferozeshah, and Sobraon, without a scratch; and though risking his life on every occasion in the most reckless and daring manner, and performing feats of the most heroic bravery, failed in finding the death that he desired.

After Willoughby left her father's house, Indiana still preserved the same stolid composure; her pride was deeply hurt at the indignity that had been offered her, and yet, with strange inconsistency, she insisted on Meenah Baee's taking up her abode in the house, and showed the greatest kindness toward her and her child.

Perplexed by her sister's conduct, Anne Keith knew not what to do, or how to rouse her from her unnatural calmness; but this was suddenly ended, for, as the troops left Agra, they had to pass by Sir William's house, and at the sound of the drums and fifes Indiana fainted away, and it was some hours before she recovered her senses. A long illness ensued, and left her so weak that the doctors assured Sir William that his only chance of saving his child's life was to send her back to England; and, as his own health was giving way, he decided on resigning his appointment, and returning with her.

He had not forgotten his promise to Willoughby, and every inquiry was made, but in vain. The Rev. Mr. Jones had been dead for a year or more; the Dewan, though he had discovered that his daughter had married an Englishman, was either unable or unwilling to give further information; and the two native witnesses whose names were appended had left their country during some troubles, and could not be traced; and even Anne Keith's faith in Willoughby was beginning to give way, though she still clung to the belief that some fatal mistake had occurred.

Indiana's long illness had destroyed the freshness of her beauty, but she still possessed sufficient charms to attract numerous admirers, and one of the most pertinacious was a Mr. Spurgeon, who had been long devoted to her, and who, on Willoughby's departure, and, it was reported, dismissal, again took the field, though with no more success than before.

Sir William had stayed too long in India, and after leading an invalid life for a year at Bath and Tunbridge Wells, he died, leaving a fortune to his two daughters, who thereupon established themselves in Our Square, and led the useful and secluded life that we have described. Meenah Baee, who, though she had been baptised, was still known by her former name, and the little Leila accompanied them; and the child was the object of the warmest affection of both sisters, and more especially of Indiana, whose resentment had long since been extinguished by Anne's kind and Christian counsels, and who now felt only pity for the unfortunate Willoughby, with an occasional feeling of pride when she saw his name mentioned with praise in the dispatches, and of regret at the thought that such brilliant qualities should be united with so much baseness.

One day, ten years after the Misses Keith's establishment in Our Square, Anne was confined to the house with a cold, and Indiana went alone to the hospital where they were accustomed to pay weekly visits. In one of the wards she missed a familiar face, and, in answer to her inquiries, was told that the poor sufferer had died only the day after her last visit. "He talked a great deal about your kindness to him, ma'am," said the nurse, "and was very quiet and gentle to the last. But the patient who has his bed now is very troublesome. He was brought in nearly a week ago, having been run over by a cab, and was hurt so badly that the surgeon doesn't think he'll get over it; and I am afraid, ma'am, that he isn't in a right frame of mind, for he used dreadfully bad language when they brought him in, though lately he has been quieter."

When Indiana had gone the round of the ward, with a few kind words to each patient, and the reading aloud of a psalm and a prayer to such as could bear it, she approached the bed of the man of whom the nurse had spoken, and though rather in dread of what he might say to her, sat down by him, and, gently expressing her sympathy in his misfortune, asked if she should read to him. The man, whose eyes had followed her with interest ever since she came in, assented with a readiness and civility that surprised the nurse; and as she read on in her sweet, low voice, his groans and restless movements gradually ceased, and he gazed on her still beautiful face with an expression from which all ill-humor and suffering had vanished. When she finished one psalm, he begged for another, and when at last she prepared to go, he said: "Did I not hear them call you Miss Keith?"

"My name is Keith," she wonderingly replied.

"Can it be that you are the Indiana Keith whom I knew at Agra some ten years ago? You have her voice and her features; but you are somewhat changed, though not so much as I am."

"Yes, I am Indiana Keith, and was living at Agra ten years ago; but who are you? I seem now to remember your face, but not your name."

"Have you quite forgotten Fleetwood Spurgeon, who was one of the many you made fools of?"

He spoke with an excess of bitterness, and Indiana felt it, and colored as she answered, "I remember you now; but you are very much changed. How came you in this place?"

"When you left Agra, I didn't care what became of me, and soon got into trouble, and had to leave the place; and then I went to Calcutta, and so on to Australia, where, after some time, I got some gold. But I soon lost the greater part by gambling; and so, tired of knocking about the world, I came back to the old country, and a warm reception has she given me. The very day I landed I met with this accident; and, unless the pain in my side gets better, I don't suppose I shall ever go out from here."

His reckless tone distressed Indiana, and she began to urge on him the necessity of seeing a clergyman, and preparing for his end; but he interrupted her by saying, "A parson would do me little good; but there is one thing which I must confess before I die, and to you only, for it principally concerns yourself. You remember Willoughby, of the One-hundred-and-thirty-first. Indiana's blush answered, for she remained silent, and Spurgeon proceeded. "You probably thought that the cause of your quarrel was known only to yourself—I mean his previous marriage with Meenah Baee—but I knew it all, for it was a plot of my own devising. I was mad with jealousy at Willoughby's success, and was meditating in what way I could injure him, when my evil genius threw in my way Meenah Baee, who had come to Agra in search of her husband, who was captain in the one-hundred-and-thirty-first Native Infantry, but, as I well knew, had been missing for a year or more, ever since some skirmish or other. His name, Henry Millingby, so capable of transformation into Willoughby; the fact of the number of their regiments being the same; and a certain similarity between their persons—they were both tall and fair, and a delusion that the poor woman had got into her head, that Willoughby, whom she saw one day on parade, was really her husband, suggested to me the practicability of destroying his prospects; and, under pretense of assisting her search, I procured from her her marriage contract, which I destroyed; and substituted in its stead a forged deed, imitating Willoughby's signature and those of the witnesses, who I ascertained were safe out of the way. Meenah Baee, who could not read English, never discovered the forgery; and after making her promise that she would not betray me to Willoughby, who would, I told her, never forgive me for destroying his prospects of a rich marriage, I sent her to you, and my plot succeeded beyond my hopes. Your indignation, and the regiment's sudden removal, were most favorable to me; and though I was deeply wounded at being a second time rejected, it was some comfort to know that my hated rival had no better chance than myself.

"Can this be true?" gasped Indiana, who had listened in speechless astonishment. "Surely you could not have been so cruel? Poor Henry!" she murmured, in a low tone to herself, "if I had only known the truth! Mr. Spurgeon, it is a hard matter, but still I forgive you the wrong you have done me; perhaps you hardly knew how great it was. Although it is too late to do so now, I should wish to be able to clear Capt. Willoughby's name of the stain that has rested upon it, and write down the deposition that you have just made."

Spurgeon, who, to do him justice, had never known the extent of her affection for Willoughby, agreed and affixed his signature to the paper; and then, with trembling limbs, and an agitated look that surprised the nurses, she left the hospital, and hurried home to rejoice her sister with the intelligence that her confidence in Willoughby's honor had not been misplaced.

As she entered the drawing-room, where she knew she should find Miss Keith, she exclaimed, with breathless eagerness, "O, Anne, Henry is innocent; it was all a wicked—" but stopped short on seeing two strangers engaged in conversation with her sister and Meenah Baee. Her bewilderment did not at first allow her to distinguish their features, but she felt a strange trembling as she marked the tall figure of the one who came forward to meet her. No, she could not be mistaken; and in another moment her hands were clasped in Henry Willoughby's, and her tremulous "Henry, can you forgive me?" answered by their warm pressure. Excess of happiness was almost too much for Indiana after her long trial; but by degrees she recovered sufficiently to be able to learn how this happy meeting was brought about. And first, Col. Willoughby—for he now held that rank—had to present to her his friend, Maj. Millingsby, who had unwittingly been the cause of their long estrangement.

"After you left Agra," continued the Colonel, "I went through all the Sikh campaign, and then my regiment was ordered to Gibraltar. After that—rather unfairly, as we thought, though had it not been for this piece of injustice, as we considered it, I might never have seen you again—we were ordered back to India. This time I saw no service beyond the trifling business of reducing a refractory Mahratta chief, whose fort we took; and there we found poor Millingsby, who had been prisoner for ten years and more, and was believed to be dead by his own people, and so had given up all hopes of getting free again."

"Yes," said Maj. Millingsby, "if you only knew what the feeling of utter hopelessness was. I could hardly realize that I was free when the fort was taken. But go on with your story, Willoughby."

"Well, Millingsby, when he had recovered his senses a little, began talking of his wife; and when I heard her name and birth, the truth suddenly flashed upon me; and though it was impossible to account for the substitution of my name for his, I felt sure that the mistake had arisen from the similarity of sound, and that you, Indiana, had been equally deceived with me. Of course I hurried home at once; and I will own that my first impulse was to meet you with reproaches; but your exclamation as you entered the room disarmed me."

All was now joy and happiness at Number 25; and Meenah Baee, or, as we ought to call her, Mrs. Millingsby, was in a state of ecstasy at her husband's return, though most penitent for the delusion which had caused Col. Willoughby and Indiana so much misery.

Spurgeon's confession, although not necessary, as it turned out, was satisfactory, as clearing up the mystery of the story; and the wretched man, during the brief remainder of his life, was nursed with tender solicitude by her whose happiness he had so nearly shipwrecked, but who was now, thanks to the guiding of a merciful Providence, after long trials, given back to her faithful lover.

The Dethronement of the Sultan.

The important news comes from Turkey that a revolution has broken out in Constantinople, resulting in the dethroning of Abdul Aziz, the Sultan. His successor, Mohammed Murad Effendi, the presumptive heir, son of the last Sultan, Abdul Medjid, succeeds him under the Turkish law of succession, which gives the throne to the oldest male member of the family of Othman, sprung from the Imperial harem, which is considered a permanent State institution. The late Sultan, who was second son of Mahmoud, II., was born February 9, 1830, and is ten years older than his successor. He succeeded to the throne June 25, 1861, and at the outset of his career promised to be a model ruler—for a Turk. He was lavish in the announcement of reforms he intended making, and made good his promises for a time by dismissing the corrupt Minister of Finance, reducing the civil list, abolishing the seraglio, declaring that he would not indulge in polygamy, and inaugurating many measures in the interests of the public welfare. In order to avail himself of the benefit of European civilization he traveled through France, England, and Austria in 1867, and on his return allowed foreigners to hold real estate, establishing public high schools and scientific institutions, and ordered the Supreme court to draw up a civil code. Among the important political events of his career were the recognition of the independence of Italy, the negotiation of commercial treaties with England and France, the suppression of rebellions in Montenegro and Crete, the signing of the treaty deneutralizing the Black Sea, and the acknowledgment of the accession to the Roumanian throne of Prince Charles of Hohenzollern. The promises of the earlier years of his reign, however, were not fulfilled. The seraglio was re-established. Corruptions of every description crept into his administration. He squandered the money loaned Turkey by England to repair the losses occasioned by the Crimean war in the most reckless profligacy, and has reduced Turkey to bankruptcy. The crowning misery of his career has come in the uprising of the Sclavic Christians against long-continued misrule and tyranny, arbitrary and onerous taxation, unjust discriminations, and persecutions of the most cruel description.

It is as yet somewhat premature to speculate upon the effects that this change will have upon the relations between the Turks and the great powers. It is safe to assume that it will hardly result in mitigating the asperities of the Mussulmans to the Christians from a religious point of view. The late Sultan had always been distasteful to the orthodox Mussulmans, their hatred of him commencing when he made his European tour, and the Softas, a very powerful and fanatical sect, have for some time been plotting for his abdication and inciting the people to revolution.—Chicago Tribune.

Our Presidents.

Mrs. John Adams was the first mistress of the White-house. The building was unfinished and unfurnished. It could hardly be warmed or lighted. The most graphic letters written by Mrs. Adams describes her sufferings there. Her week's washing was hung up in the east room. Her style of living, adopted not from parsimony but from necessity, would disgust an ordinary treasury clerk. Washington exacted the strictest economy at home, that he might serve his country and not impair his private fortune. Jefferson was well off when he went into public life. He inherited 1,900 acres which he increased to 5,000. His income, independent of his farm revenue, was $3,000 a year. His wife's dowry was $40,000 in cash. Had he left public life alone and tended to his real estate he would have been a rich man. His public career closed in 1809. For nineteen years he was absent from Monticello, and seven of these years were spent abroad. He returned to find his estate ruined, his property squandered, and his fortune scattered. All attempts to retrieve his fortune were in vain; he was adjudged a bankrupt. New York city sent him a donation of $8,500, and other cities were alike generous. Jackson had a style of his own. Like a good soldier he lived within his income. At the Rips Raps in the summer, in a low farm-house, coat off, feet in slippers, a cob pipe in his mouth, he gave audience to embassadors. Van Buren had a private fortune of his own. Pierce, by rigid economy, carried $50,000 out of the White-house.

Scourged by Fire.

Early summer has again brought to Quebec the scourge of a sudden and serious conflagration. It was on the 28th of May, 1845, that the first great fire swept 1,500 houses away from the suburb of St. Roch, and just a month later that 1,300 houses were destroyed in that of St. Jean, conflagrations described so graphically by Elliot Warburton in his "Hochelaga." June 14, 1846, came the burning of the theater in which nearly fifty persons were roasted to death or suffocated. None of the fires since then have resulted in as great destruction of property or life, though in 1862 and again in 1866 the flames swept away several hundred houses. The fire of the 30th ult. destroyed 1,000 houses, and rendered several thousand people homeless. Quebec, as did Chicago before her residents had learned more wisdom, presents all the essentials for a grand conflagration in her inflammable wooden houses closely packed, her deficient water supply and inadequate force of firemen, and her situation in a very cave of Eolus. Nothing is wanted but the careless smoker, or the boy addicted to fire-crackers, or the crazy stove-leg, to lay a suburb in ashes. And as these things have always been in Quebec, so doubtless they will also continue to be until the people learn the necessity of employing some cheaper and less inflammable substance than pine boards in the construction of their dwellings.

THE STEAMER.

BY GEORGE LUFF.

Majestic on the wave
The ocean [illegible] rides;
For her the sea, a willing slave,
Rolls forth his crested tides.
Dashed from her breast she heaves
The [illegible] and trampled foam;
Her glorious track behind she leaves!
Speed her, ye waters, home!

Ah, gently, cruel main,
The freighted treasures bear!
Voices thou hast like summer air,
Or virgin's murmured prayer.
From out thy cave, O sea,
Breathe them in music's sound,
Toned to their heart's true harmony,
The glad, the homeward bound.

Joy! joy! the glooming mist
She cleaves with landward bow;
Coyly the billows, lightly kissed,
Leap from her arrowy prow.
Joy beams in woman's eye,
And laughs in childhood's mirth;
And manly hearts give fond reply,
For thee, O mother earth!

Sovereign o'er vanquished fear,
The lord of pride and power,
Man in his glorious strength is here,
This is his triumph's hour.
Hush! hush! what shock of dread
Distorts his blanching brow?
Stern as the bolt of death it sped;
O man, what art thou now?

Thou saidst "a king" thou wast
On ocean's stormy throne;
Now he is strong, and fierce, and vast,
Thou powerless and alone.
Lo! with resistless grasp,
This wide, relentless sea
Folds like a toy in icy clasp
Thy shattered bark and thee!

God rules upon the deep;
There He alone is king;
The wild, wild waves that o'er them sweep
Perpetual dirges sing.
Woe! woe! a thousand homes
Their coming wait in vain,
And far and wide above them glooms
The desert of the main.

LAWYERS are sometimes very particular. The other day one of those learned and admirable gentlemen was waited upon by a young man who wished his advice, and began by saying: "My father died and made a will——" "Is it possible? I never heard of such a thing," answered the lawyer. "I thought it happened every day," said the young man. "But if there is to be any difficulty about it, I had better give you a fee to attend to the business." The fee was given, and then the lawyer observed: "Oh! I think I know what you mean, that your father made a will and died." "Yes, yes; that must be it."

It was not until closing-up time that the broker discovered the trick of the man who had fallen among thieves.

BLOOD FOR BLOOD.

A South Carolina Tragedy and its Awful Sequel—Lynching of Six Murderers.

THE CRIME.

[Abbeville (S. C.) Cor. Charleston Courier.]

The victims, John D. Harmon, aged seventy-five, and his wife, Catherine A. Harmon, aged fifty, lived at Winter Seat, in Edgefield county, near the Abbeville line, and twenty miles from Greenwood. The murder was committed on Wednesday night about 8 o'clock, it is supposed, in the front or sitting-room of Mr. Harmon's residence, a two-story structure. The murder was first announced on Thursday morning by a negro man, Stephen Lake, who, according to his own story, had gone, as was his custom, to get the crib keys. The alarm was instantly given, and a runner was dispatched to the various neighbors with the horrible intelligence. Eight or nine gentlemen repaired to the house and at once entered by the front door, which was unlocked, and by which, as was supposed, the murderers effected an entrance.

The sight which met the gaze was most horrible. The room was filled with smoke and the odor of blood and burning kerosene. To the left of a center-table, on which were placed four lamps, a Bible, and a vase of roses, and upon which rested the bludgeon that had been used in the murder, lay the body of Mr. Harmon. The murdered man was lying on his back, with his head turned up, exposing to view the ghastly gash in his throat, which had been cut from ear to ear, with his right hand raised above his body, clutching a pencil, and with his left in the same position slightly nearer the wound—the pencil touching the left hand, but pointing directly to the wound. Between the knees of Mr. Harmon lay his hat, and near his feet his spectacles. About four feet from Mr. Harmon, near the fireplace and in the left-hand corner of the room, lay the body of his wife, with two gashes on her head, one on each temple, and her throat cut from ear to ear. She had fallen upon her front, with her face slightly turned toward her husband, and had [illegible] died without a struggle. The floor was dyed with blood, the blood from Mrs. Harmon's body passing across the room and under the person of her husband. The fire which had been kindled by the assassins for the purpose of covering up the traces of their [illegible] crime, was still burning when the room was entered on Thursday morning. It had been kindled with a garment saturated with kerosene, and was slowly working its way. The oil had been procured from the store-room in a ten-gallon tin can, which was supposed to have contained about half a gallon of oil. The dwelling and store-house had been robbed of everything of value in clothing, money, jewelry, and provisions, in the search for which the fiends must have spent the greater portion of the night and just before daybreak set the kerosene on fire.

The inquest was adjourned from day to day, the excitement in the community running very high, and fresh developments constantly resulting as to the fearful crime, culminating last Tuesday morning in the full confession of one of the murderers.

THE EXPIATION.

[From the Charleston News.]

The scene of the lynching was at or near the residence of the murdered Harmons, a point about twenty-five miles from Abbeville and thirty from Edgefield Court-house. The discovery of the dogwood club and the confession of one of the murderers led to the immediate arrest of five other men, and of three women who were likewise implicated, one the wife of Luke, and the other, Betsy Perrin, the Harmons' cook. The examination by the Coroner's jury, of which James Callison, a most prudent and respected citizen, was foreman, conclusively demonstrated the guilt of all six of the men, all of whom, indeed, confessed to having participated in the murder and robbery. The examination being concluded, the Coroner formally delivered the prisoners into the possession of Sheriff Richardson, who was present. He had no sooner received them into his custody than he was approached by a party of men, who told him they would relieve him of any further trouble, and at once bound and blindfolded him. The prisoners were then immediately formed into line and shot to death. Upward of five hundred people were present, about fifty of these being colored. There was no excitement, and the whole proceeding was conducted with the utmost deliberation. The reason assigned for shooting instead of hanging the men was that by this means the whole party might share in the execution, while hanging would have made a few of the party the more prominent as ringleaders, which result it was desired to avoid. The lynchers openly acknowledged their participation in the affair afterward, and expressed their willingness to submit to the action of any authorized tribunal. The feeling among the colored people was as strong against the murderers as among the white people, and they even said that if the whites did nothing the colored people would take the law into their hands. One white man was supposed to have been concerned in the murder, and would undoubtedly have shared the fate of the others, but no proof was found against him and he was discharged, as was also another, an old colored man. The prisoners testified that the three women were present at the murder, but were not more directly concerned in it. The lynchers turned them loose, upon condition that they leave the country forthwith. They complied at once, and this accounts for their alleged disappearance. It is denied that they were violently disposed of. All the lynchers were from the counties of Abbeville and Edgefield. They listened quietly to remonstrances of some of the older persons present, but said they were fixed in their resolve. Nine-tenths of those present, and at least an equal proportion of the citizens of the county, approved of the lynching.

A Boston Boy on Fish.

Fish lives in the Atlantic ocean, Buzzard's bay and some in Charles river. When they are small they are codfish, herrin, and sich; when they grow up they are whales. Whales is very useful; they sometimes swaller a whole ship and all the crew. The fat of whales is biled out, and made inter kerosene oil for gas light. Their bones is made inter whalebone for ivory pianner keys and domines, also for horn handles for jack-knives. I wish a whale would swaller my school and all the teachers. Fish is always eat Friday. I hate fish; there is too many bones to pick out when you eat 'em. I'd ruther eat a piece of pine fried in lard. A whale could lick all the boys in the Harvard Grammar school. Could lick thunder out of 'em and make 'em look sick, and don't you forget it.

Ravages of the Potato Beetle in Pennsylvania.

A letter from Milford, Pa., says: "The beetle which did so much damage to potatoes and other vegetation throughout the States last year are already appearing in immense numbers along the Delaware and Lackawaxen rivers, and have begun their work of destruction. The injury to potatoes thus far, however, is not very great, as very few have been planted; but vegetation in general has been considerably injured. These pests are much larger in size than last year, and after a heavy rain appear in the air like thick floating clouds before a shower. Gardens as well as farms are infested with them, and it is no uncommon thing to pick a pint of beetles from a single hill of potatoes. Farmers have applied almost every known remedy for their destruction, but with little benefit; for as soon as one army of beetles is destroyed another takes its place and continues the work of destruction. Many potato-growers along the Pennsylvania side of the Delaware river and along the Lackawaxen, who usually grow large crops, will this year plant only enough for their own use."

A Pedestrian Failure.

Joseph Spencer, who has been lately attempting the feat of walking 3,000 miles in sixty days at Cremorne Gardens, Chelsea, England, has at last decided to give up the attempt on the serious representation of Dr. Crisp, of Chelsea. Notwithstanding the very unfavorable state of the weather last week, Spencer succeeded in covering an average of 50 miles up to Wednesday last, but only got over 42¼ miles during that day. On Thursday, after walking 32¼ miles, he felt so unwell as to require medical assistance. Feeling better on the following day he determined to resume his journey. After walking 10 miles he again felt so unwell as to be compelled to give up the attempt. The distance covered during the last week was 185 miles, making the total distance traversed during the 29 days that had elapsed since the start 1,326 miles. Being thus 124 miles behind he felt that further exertion would be unavailable. Spencer is fifty-seven years of age.

Cooks on a Strike.

According to the Constantinople correspondent of a French journal the Sultan is even harder-pushed financially than has been suspected. The correspondent writes: "A few weeks ago the Sultan, returning in a caique to the palace, found ranged on the bank about fifty individuals, humbly bent, the eyes bowed down, and the hands respectfully crossed on the breast; before them stood a personage having his arms raised in the air, and holding in his hands an immense arzoukhal (petition). 'What is that?' asked his Majesty, 'give me that paper!' They were the palace cooks, who declared to their sovereign master that thirty-three months' wages were due to them, and that they wanted something on account. The Sultan got into a violent and very legitimate passion, the Minister of Finance was dismissed, and the cooks received—absolutely nothing."

Chalk Houses in Kansas.

One of the curiositis of this country, says the Hays (Kansas) Sentinel, is the vast beds of chalk. There is a large house built of chalk bricks at Trego, and it surpasses anything in the building line we have ever seen. The chalk is sawn into bricks smooth and regular, and the whole structure has a handsome appearance. John Henry, the proprietor, informs us that he had some of the chalk analyzed by a chemist in Chicago, with the following results: seventy-eight per cent. was pure chalk, one per cent. was moisture, and one per cent. was limestone. This, for purity, far exceeds the English chalk, which is now in general use. Mr. Henry informs us that in his vicinity there is an immense supply of it—enough to build a large city. Undoubtedly Western Kansas will become celebrated for its chalk productions.

Behold that pale, emaciated figure, with downcast eye, like some criminal about to meet her fate! See that nervous, distrustful look, as she walks along with a slow and unsteady step. The pink has left her cheeks and the cherry her lips. The once sparkling, dancing eyes are now dull and expressionless. The once warm, dimpled hands are now thin and cold. Her beauty has fled. What has wrought this wondrous change? What is that which is lurking beneath the surface of that once lovely form? Does she realize her terrible condition? Is she aware of the woful appearance she makes? Woman, from her very nature is subject to a catalogue of diseases from which man is entirely exempt. Many of these maladies are induced by their own carelessness, or through ignorance of the laws of her being. Again, many Female Diseases, if properly treated, might be arrested in their course, and thereby prove of short duration. They should not be left to an experienced physician who does not understand their nature, and, is, therefore incompetent to treat them. The importance of attending to Female Diseases in their earliest stages cannot be too strongly urged. For if neglected, they frequently lead to Consumption, Chronic Debility, and oftentimes to Insanity. In all classes of Female Diseases, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is without a rival. No medicine has ever surpassed it. In "The People's Common Sense Medical Adviser," of which R. V. Pierce, M.D., of Buffalo, N. Y., is the author and publisher, is an extended treatise on Woman and her Diseases. Under this head, the various affections to which woman is incident are carefully considered, accurately portrayed, and a restorative course of treatment suggested. Every woman, as she values her life and health, should possess a copy of this valuable book. If she be diseased, this "Adviser" will show her how she may be restored to health, and also direct her how she may ward off many maladies to which she is constantly being exposed. Let every suffering woman heed this timely advice and see herself as others see her. Price of Adviser, $1.50 (post-paid), to any address.

Dr. Schenck's Pulmonic Syrup, Sea Weed Tonic and Mandrake Pills.—These medicines have undoubtedly performed more cures of Consumption than any other [illegible] known to the American [illegible]. They are composed of [illegible] and contain nothing which can be injurious to the human constitution. Other remedies advertised as cures for Consumption probably contain opium, which is a somewhat dangerous drug in all cases, and if taken freely by consumptive patients, it must do great injury; for its tendency is to confine the morbid matter in the system, which, of course, must make a cure impossible. Schenck's Pulmonic Syrup is warranted not to contain a particle of opium; it is composed of powerful but harmless herbs, which act on the lungs, liver, stomach and blood, and thus correct all morbid secretions, and expel all the diseased matter from the body. These are the only means by which Consumption can be cured, and as Schenck's Pulmonic Syrup, Sea Weed Tonic and Mandrake Pills are the only medicines which operate in this way, it is obvious they are the only genuine cure for Pulmonary Consumption. Each bottle of this invaluable medicine is accompanied by full directions. Dr. Schenck is professionally at his principal office, corner Sixth and Arch Streets, Philadelphia, every Monday, where all letters for advice must be addressed.

VEGETINE.

Taking into consideration the character of its vouchers, the history of its cures, and the immense increasing demand, Vegetine may be fairly entitled the leading medicine of the age.

For Scrofula in the blood, Vegetine is an infallible remedy, and no person need suffer from tumors, ulcers, and all diseases arising from impure blood, if Vegetine is used according to directions. There is not a case of Scrofula in existence that Vegetine will not cure, provided, however, the vital functions have not lost their power of action, all that may be said to the contrary notwithstanding.

Vegetine is pleasant to the taste, mild in its influence, and absolute in its action on disease, as the following unquestionable evidence will show:

Paid Nearly $400.

January 9, 1875.

H. R. Stevens, Esq.:

Dear Sir—When about six months old I was vaccinated. The parties who were vaccinated from the same virus died from the humor. The humor spread over me to such an extent that I was rolled in bran to prevent me from scratching my person. The disease finally settled in my head. I remained in this condition about twenty years, troubled all the time with sores breaking in my head and discharging corruption from my ear. At this time a small kernel appeared on my neck, gradually increasing in size until a tumor formed of such immense size I could see it by turning my eyes downward. All this time I was taking various remedies for my blood without any substantial benefit.

I then went to a prominent physician in Boston, who, during his treatment of six months, lanced the tumor eight times, which cost me nearly $400. This left me with a rough, aggravated sore, without at all diminishing the size of the tumor, and in a sickly, feeble condition. I consulted another physician in Natick, who, after considerable time, succeeded in healing the sore without reducing the size. At this point I commenced to use Vegetine, through the earnest persuasion of a friend. After I had taken this medicine about one week, I experienced wonderful sensations. My whole body seemed to be undergoing a radical change, until, finally, the tumor broke and discharged frightful quantities. From this time it decreased in size, until the bunch disappeared, but my neck still bears the ugly scars of the sore and lance. I am now healthy and strong, and able to work every day.

I will also mention that I have been an acute sufferer from inflammatory rheumatism ever since I can remember, until, commencing the use of Vegetine, when almost immediately all rheumatic pains ceased. This statement I volunteer for the purpose of benefiting other suffering humanity, and you will confer a favor by giving it as much publicity as thought proper.

Very gratefully,
O. M. SAVELS,
Ashland, Mass.

COLLINS' VOLTAIC PLASTERS.

Electricity, as a grand curative and restorative agent, is not equaled by any element or medicine in the history of the healing art. Unless the vital spark has fled the body, restoration by means of electricity is possible. It is the last resort of all physicians and surgeons, and has rescued thousands, apparently dead, from an untimely grave when no other human agency could have succeeded. The great difficulty has been to bring it into a popular, efficient and economical form, and never until the invention of the which consists of Voltaic Plates of Silver and Zinc carefully attached together and imbedded in a Medicated Porous Plaster, has it appeared possible. In this case, as in all others where genius is at work, success is complete. When the Plaster is placed upon the affected part, which can be done as quickly and conveniently as with the ordinary porous plaster—that is, by mere pressure of the hand—the natural warmth and moisture of the skin causes the plates to throw out a current of electricity so gentle that it is scarcely possible to feel it otherwise than by the soothing and grateful warmth produced, yet so penetrating as to stop almost immediately the most excruciating pains, soreness, [illegible] from the lungs, [illegible] spleen, bowels, bladder, [illegible] muscles.

COLLINS' VOLTAIC PLASTER,

COLLINS' VOLTAIC PLASTER,

for back pains, [illegible] numbness, [illegible], spleen, bowels, bladder, heart and muscles, is equal to an army of doctors and acres of plants and shrubs. It instantly banishes pain and soreness, gives life and vigor to the weakened and paralyzed muscles and limbs, and is so grateful and soothing that one used in the above ailments every other external application, such as salves, ointments, lotions and liniments, will at once be discarded. Even in paralysis, epilepsy, or fits, and nervous muscular affections, this Plaster, by rallying the nervous forces, has effected cures when every other known remedy has failed.

"NATURE'S GREAT REMEDY."

This Cordial is a CERTAIN CURE for Coughs, Colds, Inflammation of the Lungs, Sore Throat and Breast, Bronchitis, and if taken in time, will arrest that fatal disease Consumption. The basis of this medicine is a preparation of Tar obtained by a peculiar process from the sap of the Pine Tree, the medicinal properties of which are well known. With this powerful element are thoroughly incorporated several other vegetable ingredients, each of which possess soothing and healing attributes, thus making it the most POTENT ANTAGONIST to all diseases of the pulmonary organs, that has yet been introduced.

PINE TREE TAR CORDIAL
is not a new remedy that has never been heard of before, but an old, RELIABLE AND WELL-TRIED medicine that has been in daily use by families and intelligent physicians for the last sixteen years, and is spoken of in the highest terms by all who have used it, as thousands of UNSOLICITED TESTIMONIALS prove.

If you suffer from any disease for which this Cordial is recommended, we unhesitatingly say: "TRY IT, WE KNOW IT WILL DO YOU GOOD." A single bottle will demonstrate its valuable qualities.

"THE VIBRATOR"
1000 SOLD LAST SEASON
WITHOUT ONE FAILURE OR REJECTION

This is the famous Threshing machine that has "swept the field" and created such a revolution in the trade, by its MATCHLESS GRAIN-SAVING AND TIME-SAVING principles.

THE ENORMOUS WASTAGE of grain, so inevitable with other styles of Threshers, can be SAVED by this Improved Machine, sufficient, on every job, to more than pay all expenses of threshing.

FLAX, TIMOTHY, MILLET, HUNGARIAN and like seeds are threshed, separated, cleaned and saved as easily and perfectly as Wheat, Oats, Rye or Barley.

AN EXTRA PRICE is usually paid for grain and seeds cleaned by this machine, for extra cleanliness.

IN THE WET GRAIN of 1875, these were substantially the ONLY MACHINES that could run with profit or economy, doing fast, thorough and perfect work, when others utterly failed.

ALL GRAIN, TIME and MONEY wasting complications, such as "Endless Aprons," "Raddles," "Beaters," "Pickers," etc., are entirely dispensed with; less than one-half the usual Gears, Belts, Boxes, and Journals; easier managed; more durable; light running; no costly repairs; no dust; no "litterings" to clean up; not troubled by adverse winds, rain or storms.

FARMERS and GRAIN RAISERS who are posted in the large saving made by it will not employ inferior and wasteful machines, but will insist on this improved Thresher doing their work.

FOUR SIZES made for 6, 8, 10 and 12 Horse Powers. Also a specialty of SEPARATORS, designed and made EXPRESSLY FOR STEAM POWER.

TWO STYLES OF HORSE POWERS, viz.: our improved "Triple Gear," and our "Spur Speed" (Woodbury Style), both "Mounted" on four wheels.

IF INTERESTED in Threshing or Grain Raising, apply to our nearest Dealer, or write to us for Illustrated Circular (sent free), giving full particulars of Sizes, Styles, Prices, Terms, etc.

To sell the new Patent Improved EYE CUPS. Guaranteed to be the best paying business offered to Agents by any house. An easy and pleasant employment. The value of the [illegible] Eye Cups for [illegible] and diseases in the [illegible] testimonials of [illegible] more than 1,000 of our [illegible].

The Patent [illegible] philosophical discovery. [illegible] ALEX. R. WYETH, M. D., and WM. BEATLEY [illegible] writes, they are certainly the greatest invention [illegible].

Read the following certificates:

FERGUSON STATION, Logan Co., Ky., June 8, 1872.

DR. J. BALL & CO., Oculists:

GENTLEMEN: Your Patent Eye Cups are, in my judgment, the most splendid triumph which optical science has ever achieved, but, like all great and important truths in this or in any other branch of science and philosophy, have much to contend with from the ignorance and prejudice of a too skeptical public; but truth is mighty and will prevail, and it is only a question of time as regards their general acceptance and indorsement by all. I have in my hands certificates of persons testifying in unequivocal terms to their merits. The most prominent physicians of my county recommend your Eye Cups.

I am, respectfully, J. A. L. BOYER.

WILLIAM BEATLEY, M. D., SALVISA, KY., writes: "Thanks to you for the greatest of all inventions. My sight is fully restored by the use of your Patent Eye Cups, after being almost entirely blind for twenty-six years."

ALEX. R. WYETH, M. D., ATCHISON, PA., writes: "After total blindness of my left eye for four years, by paralysis of the optic nerve, to my utter astonishment your Patent Eye Cups restored my eyesight permanently in three minutes."

REV. S. B. FALKINSBURG, Minister of the M. E. Church, writes: "Your Patent Eye Cups have restored my sight, for which I am most thankful to the Father of Mercies. By your advertisement I saw at a glance that your invaluable Eye Cups performed their work perfectly in accordance with physiological law; that they literally fed the eyes that were starving for nutrition. May God greatly bless you, and may your name be enshrined in the affectionate memories of multiplied thousands as one of the benefactors of your kind."

HORACE B. DURANT, M. D., says: "I sold and effected future sales liberally. The Patent Eye Cups, they will make money, and make it fast, too; no small, catchpenny affair, but a superb, number one, tip-top business, promises, as far as I can see, to be life-long."

[illegible] November [illegible], 1869: [illegible] and am satisfied they are [illegible] They are certainly the greatest invention of the age."

HON. HORACE GREELEY, late Editor of the New York Tribune, wrote: "DR. J. BALL, of our city, is a conscientious and responsible man, who is incapable of intentional deception or imposition."

PROF. W. MERRICK writes: "Truly I am grateful to your noble invention. My sight is restored by your Patent Eye Cups. May heaven bless and preserve you. I have been using spectacles twenty years. I am 71 years old. I do all my writing without glasses, and I bless the inventor of the Patent Eye Cups every time I take up my old steel pen."

ADOLPH BIORNBERG, M. D., physician to Emperor Napoleon, wrote, after having his sight restored by our Patent Eye Cups: "With gratitude to God, and thankfulness to the inventors, Dr. J. Ball & Co., I hereby recommend the trial of the Eye Cups (in full faith) to all and every one that has any impaired eyesight, believing, as I do, that since the experiment with this wonderful discovery has proved successful on me, at my advanced period of life—90 years of age—I believe they will restore the vision to any individual if they are properly applied."

ADOLPH BIORNBERG, M. D.

To know whether a garden has been planted or not an exchange gives the following rule: "If one forgets whether beds are planted or not a good way to tell is to turn a stray cat into the garden if the beds are pleanted the cat will proceed to race round and dig into them and act as if it had relatives in China whom it was anxious to get at; while if they are not it will sit down calmly in the path and seem to be meditating on the progress of missionary work in America. A cat's instinct seldom deceives it in this matter.

Girls Getting Dressed in a Hurry.

On a recent Sunday, two girls, pupils of an Illinois seminary, were about leaving their room for church, when a dispute arose as to which had occupied the most time in dressing. The discussion waxed warm a bet was made to be decided on the spot, and three other girls were called in as judges. The contestants removed all their clothing, and at the call of "time" sprang to the contest. For a few moments the air seemed filled with flying bits of feminine drapery—shoes, stockings, garters,, &c.—and the winner was all "hooked up" and had her bonnet on in seven minutes and thirteen seconds, the other girl coming out in less than half a minute behind.

An Awkward Pause.

A young gentleman undertook to relate a circumstance, one Sunday evening in the presence of some young ladies. He commenced as follows:

"A lady friend and myself last Sunday evening went to Bed—"

With a sudden spring the old lady bounced him out of the house. The next day the old gentleman met him in the Street and asked him for an apology

"I was about to say," commenced the young man, "that a lady friend and myself went to Bed—" when a thrust from the old man's cane started him back several feet upon which he exclaimed: at the top of his voice—

"A lady friend and myself went to Bedford Street Church, you old fool."—[Newark (N. J.) Union.]

A Printer's Dream.

A printer set in his office chair his boots were patched and his coat threadbare, while his face looked weary and worn with care while sadly thinking of business debt, old Morpheus slowly round him crept, and before he knew it he soundly slept; and sleeping he dreamed that he was dead, from trouble and and toil his spirit had fled, and that not even a cow bell tolled, for the peaceful rest of his cow hide sole. As he wandered among the shades, that smoke and scorch in lower Hades he shortly observed an iron door, that creakingly swung on hinges ajar, but the entrance was closed by a red-hot bar, and Satan himself stood peeping out and watching for travlers there-about, and thus to the passing printer spoke, and with growing voice the echoes woke: "Come in my dear, it shall cost you nothing and never fear; this is the place where I cook the ones, who never pay their subscription sums, for though in life they may escape, they will find when dead it is to late; I will show the place where I melt them thin, with red-hot chains and scraps of tin, and also where I comb their heads with broken glass and melted lead, and if of refreshments they only think, there's boiling water for them to drink; there's the red-hot grindstone to grind down his nose, and red-hot rings to wear on his toes, and if they mention they don't like fire, I'll sew up their mouth with red-hot wire; and then dear sir you should see them squirm while I roll them over and cook to a turn." With these last words the printer awoke and thought it all a practical joke; but still at times so real did it seem that he cannot believe it was all a dream; and often he thinks with a chuckle and grin of the fate of those who save their tin, and never pay the printer.

THE EAST.

George D. Lord, one of the indicted members of the New York canal ring, has been convicted at Buffalo.

A Providence dispatch says the trustee of the A. & W. Sprague Manufacturing Company has given orders to shut down all their many mills and print works as soon as the stock can be run out. The cause is the present depressed condition of the market for cotton goods. Production will not be resumed till prices are materially improved.

THE WEST.

St. Louis papers give meager particulars of a terrible flood that recently inundated portions of Douglas county, Mo. Thirteen lives were lost, and a vast amount of property, consisting of mills, dwellings, etc., swept away.

An extraordinary suicide—among the most singular and remarkable of any ever known—is reported from Lafayette, Ind. A skillful mechanic and inventor named Moore, tired of life, brought his genius to bear upon the contrivance of a species of automatic guillotine, the workings of which were arranged and secured with patient deliberation and absolute accuracy, so that when the proper time had arrived the horrid machine did its work with inexorable precision, and the head of the scientific suicide was severed from the body at a single stroke. The rude guillotine consisted of a large ax, suspended by a double cord. Between the cords stood a candle arranged so that when it burned down to the cords it would sever them and set the ax in motion. The suicide then laid himself down in such a position that the ax would strike his neck when it fell. Gas was noticed burning in his room during day, and when it was opened he was found with his head in a box placed to receive it, and a bunch of cotton or wool by him, supposed to have been saturated with chloroform, which he took. No reason is known for the extraordinary act.

The United States court in Milwaukee has sentenced Jacob Nunnemacher to pay a fine of $10,000 and be imprisoned five months in jail, for conspiracy to defraud the revenue on crooked whisky. The track is already laid [illegible] east of Los Angeles.

Though the worst stories of killing by the Indians are not confirmed, Black Hills emigration has been utterly demoralized, partly by the poor return of the mines, but chiefly by the aggressive hostility of the red-skins....Chicago elevators, as per official returns, contain 1,282,818 bushels of wheat; 1,232,458 bushels of corn; 413,823 bushels of oats; 57,619 bushels of rye, and 289,313 bushels of barley, making a grand total of 3,275,531 bushels, against 6,683,972 bushels at this period last year....Late arrivals at Bismark report that Gen. Gibbon's command had reached the Powder river country, and were so completely surrounded with redskins that no couriers would probably be sent out until the force reached their objective points on the the Yellowstone. This information lends some probability to the report received from runners by way of the Black Hills, of a battle fought north of the Hills, in which considerable numbers of whites and savages were killed.

The Chicago Tribune of Friday says: "It will be gratifying news to her friends, and to the public generally, that yesterday Mrs. Abraham Lincoln was adjudged sane by a jury in the County court, and her property restored to her own control. The whole proceedings were of an amicable character."

They had been cutting wheat, and had stepped under a tree out of the rain, and while under it were struck by lightning.

WASHINGTON.

Jacob Thompson, who was Secretary of the Interior during Mr. Buchanan's administration, visited Washington last week, and was served with a process in a civil suit to recover $1,000,000, the principal and interest of bonds taken from the department, and for the amount received by him from the Confederate States, but which it is alleged reverted to and became the property of the United States and $1,000,000 as interest ...The House Committee on Indian Affairs have authorized Representative Page to report, with a recommendation for its passage, a joint resolution declaring the Black Hills country open to exploration and settlement. The joint resolution also declares that the true intent and meaning of the treaty of April 29, 1868, is, that men are not excluded from traveling over or settling upon any portion of Wyoming Territory not included within the boundaries of the permanent Sioux reservation established by the second article of the treaty. The committee add the proviso that this act shall not be construed to affect the right of the Indians to hunt in the Black Hills country.

The people of the capital were startled, on the morning of Sunday, the 11th inst., by the sudden and dangerous illness of Mr. Blaine. Mr. B., accompanied by his family, walked from their home to Dr. Rankin's Congregational church, a distance of half a mile. The heat was excessive, but Mr. Blaine made no complaint of it. When he reached the steps of the church, however, he put his handkerchief to his eyes in a strange manner, and his wife asked him what was the matter—if he had anything in his eyes. He said: "No, but I think I am sunstruck. Oh, my head! Oh, my head!" and sank down insensible in his wife's arms at the threshold of the church. The gentleman was at once conveyed to his home. Physicians were sent for and soon arrived. They pronounced the attack one of sunstroke. Dr. J. W. Pope, the family physician, stated that the cause of the attack was cerebral depression, the consequence, primarily, of great mental strain, and, secondly, of the excessive heat. It was several hours before Mr. Blaine returned to consciousness sufficiently to recognize any members of his family, and for a time grave apprehensions were felt regarding the issue of the illness.

The fact is generally remarked, says a Washington telegram, that although the acquittal of Mr. Kerr substantially accuses Harney of perjury, the Committee on Expenditures in the War department do not recommend proceedings against the latter. It seems, however, that the committee concluded to leave this part of the case to Kerr, whose friends will undoubtedly see that the testimony is transmitted to the grand jury....The Blaine inquiry has been suspended, but will be taken up again about the 1st of July.

Belknap's counsel have presented to the impeachment managers a list of 197 witnesses whom they desire to have summoned for the defense. The list includes all the post-traders, by whom it is expected to prove that they did not divide with him. Under the rule adopted by the Senate, Belknap will have authority to file a supplemental list. Most of the witnesses live in the far West. The fees and mileage of witnesses alone would probably be $50,000.

The health of Speaker Kerr is gradually improving....The counsel for Belknap have now alighted upon a scheme to which they cling with much satisfaction. The point is made that the plea of absence of jurisdiction recently considered was a complete defense in itself—that is, if it had been sustained, it would have acquitted Belknap—therefore, nothing but a two-thirds vote (as is required in vital questions) could or can empower the Senate to establish that jurisdiction which would compel the thieving ex-Secretary to commence a more pertinent proof of his "innocence."

FORTY-FOURTH CONGRESS.

Friday, June 9.—Senate.—The amended Postoffice Appropriation bill was passed. It covers, within a small fraction of $37,000,000, instead of $33,500,000, as provided in the House bill.

House.—The House passed the bill to pay the widow of President Polk $1,800 for ten mules, which were taken off her plantation during the war by the Union army....There was another exciting scene on the floor of the House, growing out of the Blaine investigation. That gentleman claimed the right to call up his motion to have the Caldwell dispatch printed with the evidence taken by the committee, but in his absence, Hunton, of the Judiciary Committee, moved to lay Blaine's motion on the table, thus obtaining control of the matter. Blaine entered the hall as the vote was being taken, and denounced the Speaker pro tem. (Cox) for a ruling which he charged was manifestly unjust to him. After considerable wrangling and filibustering, the motion to table was carried—129 to 81.

Saturday, June 10.—Senate.—There was scarcely a quorum present at the opening of the session, and before the close a quorum had disappeared. No business of importance was transacted.

House.—Two financial measures were passed by the House. The first was the Payne Silver bill, authorizing the issue of $10,000,000 additional silver coin. An effort was made to attach to the measure a provision repealing the Resumption act, but the motion failed and the bill went through without division. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to issue the silver coin in the Treasury to an amount not exceeding $10,000,000 in exchange for an equal amount of legal-tenders, the notes so received to be issued only for a like amount of fractional currency, which shall be destroyed and credited to the sinking fund. The second bill which was passed is what is known as the Randall bill, providing for the further issue of silver coin. It provides that, in addition to the amount of subsidiary coin authorized by law to be issued in redemption of fractional currency, it shall be lawful to manufacture at the several mints, and issue through the Treasury, such coin to the amount of $20,000,000. The silver bullion required for this purpose is to be purchased from time to time at the market rate, with any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and the resulting coin may be issued in the ordinary disbursements of the Treasury, but no purchase of bullion shall be made when the market for the same shall be such as will not admit of the coinage without loss to the Treasury. ....Bills were also passed as follows: Providing that when Colorado is admitted as a State the laws of the United States shall have the same force as elsewhere, and that the State shall constitute one judicial district; amendatory of the Bankrupt law—the same measure that passed the Senate; reducing the number of the medical corps of the army....The bill prescribing the oath for jurors in United States courts was recommitted. ....The majority and minority reports of the election committee on the Massachusetts contested election case were presented and ordered printed. The majority report favors the substitution of Abbott, Democrat, for Frost, Republican and sitting member....The Senate amendments to the Executive, Legislative, and Judicial Appropriation bill were non-concurred in....The special committee on Louisiana affairs was instructed to investigate the outrages alleged to have been recently committed in West Feliciana, La.

Monday, June 12.—Senate.—There was no quorum present during a considerable portion of the day, and very little business was transacted.

House.—The joint resolution to modify the treaty with China so as to restrict immigration was passed. ....The Appropriation Committee reported the Army Appropriation bill some $10,000,000 less than the estimates, and with sections reducing the force of the army and the pay of officers....Lord introduced a joint resolution recommending an additional amendment to the Constitution providing that officers of the United States, such as assessors, postmasters, marshals and collectors, except collectors of customs duties, shall be elected for a term of four years......The committee on expenditures in the War department made a report exonerating Speaker Kerr from the charge of accepting a bribe for the appointment of a lieutenant in the army. The committee declare that "they have found no difficulty in reaching the conclusion that the charge, as made by Harney, as to the payment of the amount of money as stated, or any other sum, to Mr. Kerr for the object and purpose named, is unqualifiedly false;" and that "Mr. Kerr stands fully exonerated from all implication in anywise affecting his personal or official integrity." Speeches expressive of confidence in the Speaker's integrity were made by Danford, a Republican member of the committee, and Hurlbut and Garfield, and the House, by a unanimous rising vote, confirmed the verdict and ordered it spread upon the records.

Tuesday, J[illegible].—Senate.—The Senate was not in session.

House.—The [illegible] passed a bill from the Military Committee [illegible] Secretary of War to detail addition[illegible] officers as instructors in the educational [illegible]....The Military Committee reported ba[illegible] and other papers of the military court [illegible] in Gen. Babcock's case, and in accordance with the recommendations of the committee they were referred to the committee on whisky frauds....Holman reported back the Postoffice bill from the Appropriations Committee, with the recommendation that the House non concur in the Senate amendments. ....Hancock introduced a joint resolution directing the Committee on Ways and Means to inquire into the propriety of relieving from taxation all domestic fermented beers....Mr. Roberts introduced a bill to reduce the taxation on the circulation of State banks to an amount equal to that paid by National banks.

Wednesday, June 14.—Senate.—Not in session.

House.—Not one seat in ten was occupied. The House promptly went into committee of the whole on the Army Appropriation bill, Blackburn in the chair. After speeches by Smith, of Georgia, and Bright, in relation to the currency; by Felton, in favor of granting pensions to the survivors of Indian wars, and by Lawrence, in reference to the Pacific railroad bonds, the committee rose and the House adjourned.

Thursday, June 15.—Senate.—The chair laid before the Senate a message from the House, announcing its non-concurrence in the Senate amendments to the Legislative, Judicial and Executive Appropriation bill. The Senate insisted upon its amendments, and Morrill (Me.), Windom and Withers were appointed a conference committee.

House.—Randall, Holman and Foster were appointed a Committee of Conference on the Senate amendments to the Legislative Appropriation bill....Dunnell, from the Committee on Commerce, reported a bill authorizing the construction of a railroad bridge across the Wabash river. Passed....The bill prohibiting ownership or traffic in slaves, by Americans residing abroad, was reported to the House, with a recommendation that it pass.

A. T. Stewart's Will.

It seems that with all the vast interests at stake, and the lawyers employed in the matter, the will of the late A. T. Stewart was at last improperly admitted to probate. The statutes of New York require that notice shall be published, citing all parties in interest, next of kin, etc., to appear at a day named, and attend at the probating of the will—which, of course, is that they may have opportunity to make contest of its validity. The next of kin are to be named in the notice, if their names can be ascertained. But it app ars that in the Stewart will case, upon the ex-parte affidavit of Mrs. Stewart that she was the heir, as he left no relatives, the Surrogate dispensed, or attempted to dispense, which was manifestly illegal, with the publication of the notice required, and, three days after Stewart's death, admitted the will to probate. The omission to publish the proper notice will doubtless of itself be held sufficient to invalidate the probate, so that the whole matter will have to be commenced over again at the beginning.

Queer Dwellings.

From a paragraph published in the Pall Mall Gazette, it appears that some of the poor in England are solving the cheap tenement question by occupying old railway carriages as dwellings, some of them even letting seats in these vehicles to lodgers. The matter was brought into prominence by a complaint entered against a widow by a sanitary surgeon for overcrowding her dwelling. This dwelling was an old railway carriage, in which the woman lived with her three children and a lodger. It was proved that they were all in perfect health, but the court ordered the woman to dismiss her lodger. She complained that it would be very hard, as the lodger had helped her bring up her children since her husband died, but the court, however, was inexorable.

A bill has been introduced into the Texas Legislature declaring drunkenness to be a misconduct, and making it punishable by a fine of $100.

CENTENNIAL NOTES.

[By Our Own Correspondent.]

Many people speak of the intense heat of Philadelphia, as is supposed to be the case in all large cities; hence feel deterred from visiting the Exhibition during the heated term. The following is the average for the last ten years: May, 63; July, 78; October, 56 degrees Fahrenheit. There are a few warm days in all cities in our country in July and August. The area of the city is immense, 129 square miles. This added to a magnificent water-power that showers and cools the air of many squares, and is used freely in lakes, pools and fountains on the Exhibition grounds and in the buildings. This power fills the reservoirs which hold 145,672,078 gallons, machinery of turbines, and two breast-wheels. Then we have the largest park in the world. Hyde Park, 389 acres; Regent, 450 acres; Windsor Great Park, 3,800 acres, London; Bois de Boulogne, Paris, 2,158; Prater, Vienna, 2,500 acres; Richmond Hill, England, 2,468 acres; Phœnix Park, Dublin, 1,752 acres; Shaw's Garden, St. Louis, 276 acres; Fairmount Park, Philadelphia, 2,740 acres; to which add the beauties of the Exhibition, and it will pay a man from the most remote spot on earth to pick up his "kit" and come.

THE CATALOGUE DEPARTMENT.

The catalogue is now undergoing a thorough supervision, and when completed, will be a splendid work of reference. This important branch of the service is in charge of the competent assistant secretary of the commission, Prof. Dorsey Gardner, whose reputation as a scholar has eminently fitted him for the position he holds. His two valued aids, Messrs. Lombard and Long, with an efficient corps of assistants, will soon accomplish the difficult and arduous task of placing each article on exhibition in its appropriate place, arranged in seven departments, which are divided into 374 classes, occupying five buildings, main, art, machinery, agricultural and horticultural. The difficulty those gentlemen have to surmount may be conceived when one considers the technicalities in the different languages, and the various changes each fabric has in foreign make up. I am indebted to these gentlemen for a thorough examination of their work, and pronounce them the right men in the right place!

MISCELLANY.

The most superior blanket in the Exhibition, astonishing as it may seem, is the Etoile du Nord, manufactured in Minnesota. This speaks well for the West. Massachusetts exhibits flannel of superior finish. There are 1,511 works of art on exhibition from the following countries: Mexican, 66; Brazil, 19; United States, 252; Canada, 80; France taking the lead, with 578; Germany, 46; Netherlands, 117; Denmark, 15; Sweden, 95; Norway, 47; Italy, 80; Argentine Republic, 44; loan collection, 70. If the West exhibits the best blanket, so she does the most beautiful bedstead, being one from Grand Rapids, Mich. A very neat patent on exhibition is an automatic window shade. Also an attractive exhibit is a working model of Pennsylvania oil works. A model railroad ticket office is shown. Rhode Island makes an extensive exhibit of silver-plated goods. Philadelphia makes the finest pharmaceutical display in the world. A valuable article is an extension ladder. Egypt presents among other valuables an antique case, $3,000 gold. Corn from Egypt looks like the nubbin from a Western stalk. On the corn question, the old world is behind. The home of the Pharaohs have sent a large variety of seeds, beans, lentils, gum arabic, etc. The Russians, who have been delayed, are opening, and make a grand display. Their collection is divided into 743 exhibits, embracing articles in the various fields of art and industry. They show rare goods in malachite lapis, jaspar, rhodonite, neperite, and Labrador, with bronze fittings. One malachite center-table, $6,000; a Mexican onyx mantel, spoken of previously, worth $2,000. In speaking of the art exhibition I have only given those in the buildings. There are in the main building, works from New South Wales, Victoria, South Australia, New Zealand, Cape of Good Hope, Egypt, China, Japan, Hawaii, Switzerland. The British department is not officially catalogued. Russia exhibits a telementer, an instrument for measuring distance without chain or rod.

The shipping interests are varied and very attractive to those who are fond of nautical manners, from the tiny boat of one's boyhood to the leviathans of the trans-Atlantic lines. And models can be seen in all shapes embracing boats and sailing vessels, yachts and pleasure-boats, row and life-boats, fishing smacks, Sardinian zebecs, and Genoese fellucas, with Chinese junks in appearance, blue-noses, clippers, galliots, gondolas, flats, pirogues, batteaus, and the celebrated ice yacht, the Whiff, that makes sixty miles per hour. In connection is seen submarine armor, diving-bells, dredging machines, salvage apparatus, etc. A meeting of the Seventy-six club, an organization of the women journalists, have had a reunion, and addresses by Miss Susan B. Anthony, Mrs. Heron Foster, of Pittsburgh, and Miss Maxwell, of Colorado. This lady, who is in charge of the Colorado Zoological department, claims she has killed 200 bears. Three trains of thirty cars, containing 1400 New York bank clerks, made an excursion to the Centennial. This was succeeded by an excursion of presidents, managers and directors. There is a pig of iron exhibited made in 1770. A glass of pure milk can be had on the Centennial grounds for five cents, pies ten cents, oaten grits with a bowl of milk fifteen cents, good sandwiches ten cents, a good roast dinner for fifty cents. The jewelry of the French department is valued at $200,000. One Italian exhibitor has a collection of gems, onyx, sapphire, carved and antique, valued at $250,000. A chandelier made of amber and meerschaum in the German department is valued at $6,000. The National Agricultural Congress meets September 12, 13 and 14.

Our Labor Supply Drying Up.

The continued depression of trade in the United States, as well as the scarcity of money among the agricultural and laboring classes in Germany, has had the effect of materially checking the outflow of labor from the latter country; and from the returns given by Consul Annesley in his commercial report on Hamburg for the past year, just issued, it seems that emigration from Germany to America was nearly one half lower in 1875 than in 1874. The number of German emigrants in 1875 was 31,810, of whom 18,782 went by steamer direct to New York, 481 to Brazil, Monte Video and Buenos Ayres, 480 to Chili and 20 to the West Indies; 1,798 emigrants went by sailing vessel direct to Australia and South America, and 377 to other ports, while 9,872 went by steamers indirect to North America via Hull and Liverpool. Of the emigrants forwarded direct, 12,678 were male and 8,883 female, 16,815 being adults, 3,706 children under ten years of age, and 1,040 infants. Besides the decrease in the numbers bound to the United States, the numerous warnings that have lately appeared respecting the unsuitability of the climate of Brazil for northern constitutions have at last produced an effect on the Germans, and emigration to that country has decreased nine-tenths in two years. The following figures show the remarkable extent to which German emigration has fallen off within the past five years: In 1871 the number of emigrants were 42,224; in 1872, 74,406; in 1873, 69,176; in 1874, 43,443, and in 1875, 31,810. As emigration from Great Britain to the United States is also on the decrease, and that from China is to be forbidden in future, the Americans will probably in a few years be thrown on their own resources for a supply of labor, and perhaps they will be none the worse socially, physically and politically for a little healthful exertion.—Pall Mall Gazette.

PASSING EVENTS.

This is the age of ingenious advertising. One journalist, instead of paying $100,000 for advertising his paper, pays $50,000 for a fast horse, and all the papers in the world advertise horse and man and paper for nothing. A great showman buys a railroad train and runs it himself, and it pays for itself in making him still more notorious. And now Jarrett & Palmer indulge in a brilliant stroke of genius by chartering a train and speeding to the Pacific in half the usual time.

Joyce, the whisky ring thief, was seen at the Missouri penitentiary last week by a reporter, who describes him as looking pale and wasted. He makes an effort to keep up his old time gayety, but his stilted talk and political quotations are noticeably missing. McDonald's health has improved since his imprisonment, he has grown plump and seems not to suffer from depression of spirits. Avery is acting as a nurse in the prison hospital and is very lonesome and dejected looking.

The contestants of the Stewart will really do seem to have some ground to stand on in their objections to the hasty probate of that document. The principal objection is that no citation or notice to appear or attend the probate of the bill was issued or directed to or served upon the heirs at law as required, nor was any such citation issued or directed to or served upon the Attorney-general of the State of New York, or any one representing the State of New York, as should have been done if their was a failure of heirs-at-law.

There can be no doubt that the Centennial Exhibition is fast getting into real order, and as little doubt that it contains within itself the elements of a greater success than has yet been achieved by any of these colossal tournaments of art and industry. By the 4th of July the merits and the magnificence of the Exhibition will begin to be recognized for what they are, and we may expect about that time to see its influence really felt as it has not yet been felt on the railway travel of the country.

The proprietor of one of the New Jersey watering places advertises himself as a novel and entertaining kind of bigot by proclaming that "Jews are not admitted" to his house. He will hardly be troubled with any applications from the class referred to, and it is very doubtful whether his patronage from other reputable classes will be increased by his proscription. He will be compelled to discriminate, however, very carefully should the Jews desire to annoy him. If he confines his proscription to religious grounds he is safe; but if he puts it on the ground of race he becomes liable to prosecution under the Civil Rights bill.

Reports from Cuba all agree that the insurrection in that island is gaining strength continually, in spite of the most determined efforts of the Spanish authorities to crush it. The impossibility of reconquering the island begins to dawn on the Spanish mind, and the Captain-general has become somewhat alarmed at the situation. The Spanish Government has empowered and authorized him to draw upon the Spanish treasury for $50,000 in gold daily to meet the exigencies of the army. It certainly looks as though the inhuman contest for the possession of an island which Spain cannot govern, and only holds to curse, is very nearly at an end. Events have shown how much wiser and better it would have been had the Spanish Government yielded to the advice and solicitations of the United States years ago, and thereby saved thousands of lives and millions of treasure.

A lull appears to have taken place in Turkish affairs, owing to the Port's offer of amnesty to the insurgents, the granting of a six weeks' armistice, and the apparent accord with the general basis agreed to by the powers. Meanwhile the clouds continue to settle heavily in the continental horizon, and to threaten a rupture at no distant date. The hostile tone and attitude assumed by the English Government, so much in contradiction of the Premier's declared desire for peace, forebode no good to the British Empire. At the Berlin conference the three powers—Russia, Prussia, and Austria—appeared to regard England as out of the field altogether; but they have found their advance stopped by her presence, and should her policy be pursued to the extent of war she will have to stand alone against the united strength of Europe's greatest powers. France could not assist her, nor could Turkey; the smaller powers might.

The New York Girls' Way of Looking at It.

This young lady informed me that her trousseau cost upward of $10,000, and when I expressed astonishment at this extravagant expenditure of money, she naively replied: "Yes, I spent a great deal of money; but one never expects to marry more than once in a lifetime, and beside, papa may fail. Emma —— often expresses regret that she did not buy lots of pretty things when she was in Europe; for her father failed immediately after their return, and a few thousand dollars more would not have made much difference."—Noah's Sunday Times and Messenger.

A Broken Rule.

A Centennial gate-keeper would not let a big Illinois fellow into the show the other day, because he presented two quarters for admission instead of a single half dollar. "The order is to take exactly a half dollar piece, and nothing else," said the keeper, "and I can't break the rule." "Well, you will break the rule," said the big Westerner, growing suddenly angry and showing fight. "You'll break the rule or I'll break your neck!" The gateman's intuitiveness immediately whispered to him to choose the least of two evils—a broken rule or a broken neck—and he choose the former without further delay.

It must make a man feel mean to pay an old debt because he thinks he is going to die, and then have the doctor pull him through all right.

A Desperate Duel.

A duel was fought at River Bend, Col., sixty-six miles east of Denver, on the Kansas Pacific railroad, on the 8th inst. The parties to the affair were Calbert Jessup, of the firm of Ernst & Jessup, owners of 10,000 head of cattle, and O. Davis. They were seen conversing together, but in such a quiet tone that bystanders did not suspect the nature of the talk until the two men were seen going out on the plains alone. Davis carried an improved Winchester rifle, while Jessup had a Colt's improved revolver hanging from his belt. They walked close together, and appeared to be engaged in confidential conversation, neither one gesticulating or exhibiting signs of anger or excitement. When about 500 yards from the station, on the open prairie, Jessup and Davis shook hands and took positions fifty paces apart. Before the spectators, who now saw what was about to occur, could reach the dueling ground, the firing commenced. Jessup, who now showed some excitement, glancing around along the cactus plants, fired his three shots wild, neither ball touching his adversary. Davis, taking steady aim each time, fired two shots from his Winchester, the second one piercing Jessup through the heart. He fell forward on his face, with his right hand clutching the revolver. The spectators reached the spot just as Jessup fell dead. Davis, who displayed remarkable coolness, helped carry the body of his victim to the station. He refused to divulge the nature of the difficulty between himself and Jessup, simply saying that the latter challenged him to a duel at fifty paces, three shots, each man to choose his weapons. Davis is a quietly-disposed person, and was never before known to have a personal difficulty. He is the son of a very wealthy stock-grower. Jessup, who was of a very quarrelsome disposition, is the son of a prominent banker in Wall street, New York. In the dusk of evening Davis mounted a swift animal and rode away over the prairie.

A Louisiana Swamp Tragedy.

Reuza Jackson, a negro, at a lumber camp in the Des Glaize swamp, killed his employers, Frank McCardle and Murray Graham, and dangerously wounded Dumonville Devellin, after they had retired to their beds in the small cabin. It was a deliberately planned butchery. Approaching Murray Graham's bed, he drew aside the mosquito bar, exposing the head of the sleeper, and raising aloft his heavy ax, buried its blade in the skull of his victim. Then he turned to McArdle's bed, and, first with the butt and then with the sharp edge, struck so hard and so often that Dumonville heard the blows, and starting from his second sleep, exclaimed, "Boys, boys, the camp is falling." The negro heard this, and, dashing at Dumonville, made a blow at him through the misquito bar. The blow happened to be with the flat of the ax and struck Dumonville full in the breast. Dumonville being unarmed, crept under the bed, and there received another blow, and a third that knocked him into the water.

Attached to the raft on which the cabin or camp was built was a skiff, which Dumonville seized by the stern, but the negro discovered him, and forced him to let go his hold. The negro supposed his victim was drowned, and turned toward the cabin, but Dumonville had strength enough left to cling to some bushes about twenty feet off and watch the monster's movements. As the negro turned away he hissed between his teeth, "You white ——, I've got you, too." The negro then poured coal oil over the cabin on the raft, and, before setting it alight, turned to the corpses of his victims, still warm, and coolly rifled them of everything valuable, rolling them over and over, and then throwing them overboard. Then changing his clothes, he picked up McArdle's carpet-bag and set the raft on fire. Dumonville saw him disappear, and at last the fire died out.—New Orleans Bulletin.

Sheep-raising as an industry is overworked in the southern part of California. A party of capitalists propose to erect an establishment near Fresno, in that State, for the purpose of butchering sheep and placing the various portions of the animal in a marketable condition. The pelts will be saved; the horns and hoofs made into glue; the tallow rendered from the carcass and the residue made into soap. The country is overstocked, and it is with difficulty that wool or sheep can be parted with at any price.

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC.

Night on the Farm.

Now all clucked home to their feather beds
Are the velvety chicks of the downy heads,
In the old Dutch style with the beds above,
All under the wings of a hovering love,
With a few chinked in, as plump as wrens,
Around the edge of the ruffled hens!

With nose on the grass the dog keeps guard,
With long-drawn breaths in the old farm-yard
The cattle stand on the scattered straw,
And cease the swing of the under jaw.

The cat's eyes shine in the currant bush,
Dew on the grass and stars in the hush,
And over the marsh the lightning-bug
Is swinging his lamp to the bull-frog's chug,
And the slender shape in the greenish tights,
That jingle and trill the sleigh-bells nights.
The shapes with the padded feet prowl round,
And the crescent moon has run aground,
And the inky beetles blot the night
And have blundered out the candle light!
And everywhere the pillows fair
Are printed with heads of tumbled hair.
Time walks the house with a clock-tick tread,
Without and within the farm's abed!

Around the Farm.

So far we have observed (both races together and in the same neighborhood, more spare honey is obtained from the common bees than from Italians, and as many swarms.—Detroit Tribune.

I have learned by experience that if you can behead a sheep and let it bleed and kick until it is dead, and then hang it by the hind legs and skin it, and then remove the entrails without letting any of the contents of the bladder get on the meat, you will have good, sweet mutton; if otherwise, you will have something you can't eat.—Williamette Farmer.

A cheap garden roller is made of a joint of stovepipe. The ends are stopped by a bit of board cut in a circle, with holes in the center for a half-inch iron rod. The pipe is filled with dry sand after one piece is put in and the rod inserted. Then put in the other end piece and nail tight. Make a small box to go on top and attach the handle to this box. The roller can thus be weighted as much as is necessary—Rural Affairs.

A correspondent of the Utica Herald says that the simple treatment of indigestion in horses consists in feeding on boiled oats and hot bran mashes twice daily, and giving alterative medicine. Give one of the following powders every evening mixed in a mash. Sulphate of iron, two ounces; carbonate of soda, one and a half ounces; nitrate of potash, one ounce. Divide into fourteen powders. Moderate exercise and careful grooming are also essential.

A correspondent of the Chicago Tribune says: It is not generally known that cisterns can be made without either brick or stone wherever the earth is sufficiently compact to admit of digging out the soil and leaving a firm bank on which the cement can be spread to the thickness of one or two inches. The cement soon hardens, making a wall as stiff as a stone jug. The top may be covered with plank, with timber support, and then cover over all with about two feet of earth to keep out the frost. A man-hole through which the cistern may be entered for cleaning is necessary.

June is the best month in the year for pruning, because the wounds made by the saw or knife hardens soon, and the new wood and bark immediately commence to grow over and cover them. [The pruning of young trees should be carefully attended to in order to bring the head into a desirable shape, and the present month is the right time for the operation. An indiscriminate pruning in June should not be practiced, for large trees are generally covered with fruit at that time, and very few fruit-growers like to cut off large limbs or branches which are in full bearing. Old trees that have set no fruit may be severely pruned at this time, crossing branches removed from all trees, and suckers grubbed up. A low growth of branches should be encouraged, not only for shading the trunks from the direct rays of the sun, but also for keeping the fruit near the ground where it can be conveniently gathered.

The farmer who keeps the bulk of his farm in well-managed grass and maintains a select stock of dairy cows is generally in more comfortable circumstances than the man who keeps the greater part of his land in tillage. It requires considerable skill to keep up a stock of superior milch cows and to select males that will impress their good qualities on the young stock so that a continual improvement will be taking place. In the case of milch cows it is said "that which comes out in the pail must go in at the mouth." It is certain that an abundance of milk of the best quality cannot be obtained without a plentiful supply of pasturage or forage of the best kind and pure water. The most successful dairymen find sowed corn and sugar beet valuable supplements to pasture and hay, at the most critical time. In summer the watering place for stock should be in the wood lot where the shade of trees keeps the water cool, and is also a protection to the cattle from the direct rays of the sun.

About the House.

To strengthen weak eyes, not sore eyes, bathe several times a day in salt water; sea water is still better.

Jelly-molds should be washed with the white of egg to insure a clear impression. Dipping in hot water spoils the sharpness of outline.

Death to Ants.—One of our correspondents suffers from the incursions of large black ants, and asks how they may be destroyed. The surest method is to place old bones or a sponge saturated with molasses and water near their haunts, and when the bate is well covered with ants, plunge it and them into scalding water.

Cauliflower.—Cut in the early morning, when the dew is on it, trim off the outer leaves, cut the stem away close, and an hour before it is cooked, put it into cold salt water; then put it into salted boiling water, and boil slowly till it is tender, which will require from fifteen to twenty-five minutes, according to size. The moment it is done, drain from the water and serve immediately with melted butter.

Mashed Turnips.—Boil till tender, press out the water, mash, and pass them through a colander; then put them in a saucepan over the fire—salt, pepper, a little powdered sugar, butter, and cream; stir till they are dry, and serve hot. There is very little nutriment in turnips, but in early spring they make a delightful relish.

A correspondent of the Germantown Telegraph says: If the weather is cool we kill and clean a chicken a day or two before using it. Cut up and parboil as usual, without salt or pepper. Then pour off the liquor, add a good lump of butter to the chicken in the saucepan and a little flour, stir until very slightly brown, return the liquor seasoned with pepper and salt, and cook slowly with careful stirring until quite done. We are not heavy handed with salt, as this can be added at the table to suit tastes.

If one portion of vegetables are boiled in pure water, and another in a little water to which salt has been added, a decided difference is perceptible in the taste and odor, and especially in the tenderness of the two portions. Vegetables boiled in water without salt are vastly inferior in flavor. This inferiority may go so far in case of onions that they are almost entirely destitute of odor or taste, though when cooked in salted water they possess, besides the pleasant salt taste, a peculiar sweetness and strong aroma. They also contain more soluble matter than when cooked in pure water. This explains the advantages of an addition of salt to the boiling water. And it is impossible to correct, by addition of salt to the vegetables, the want of flavor in such as have been boiled without it.

A Rat.

Yesterday morning (says the Burlington Hawkeye) a lady who lives out in West Hill was moved, by reading the "city lyric" on the subject, to go down into the cellar and see how the moisture was. She did not go down, however, for the water was there before her, and had been there all night, and had driven the rats out to higher ground, like the poor people in Happy Hollow. She had not more than opened the door when a great rat sprang between her dress and pet—oh—ur—oh—skirt, and scrambled up to an kneasy resting-place. The next instant the lady had him in her nervous grasp, holding dress, skirt and rat with a desperate grip, despite the wriggling and squirming of the rodent. And back into the kitchen she went, and the matinee opened. The lady is a good church member, and has never taken a lesson in dancing in her life, but she waltzed across the kitchen, and galloped through the sitting-room, and polkaed down the hall, and schottisched back to the dining room, and reeled back into the kitchen, where she jigged, and shuffled, and pirouetted, never missing a step, and furnishing her own music all the time, while her sister and three children ran after her, shrieking and wailing for help, under the impression that she had gone mad, and beseeching her to tell what was the matter. She told them at last, when the orchestra was out of breath, and, when she told them, they all shrieked in chorus and ran out of the room, but returned, climbed up on the table, and begged her to turn the rat loose. Perish the thought, she said. In all her wild dance, while striving to quiet her nerves, she had clung to that rat. It had caused her too much fright to escape now. She held on to him, and wasn't going to let go of him till the headsman was ready. A council of war determined that the best way to kill a rat was to put him in a bag and pound or drown him. The lady ordered the galleries cleared, and then, with many shrieks, and trembling but determined hands, she emptied the rat into the bag that her sister had given her, and called in the family. When the house was again in session, the rat was chased into a corner of the bag, the lady who had captured it put her foot on the bag to keep him in his place, and her sister, poising the heavy poker over the rat, took good aim, raised the poker high above her head, shut her eyes, and averted her head so that she might not see the carnage, and then, summoning all her strength, struck the deadly blow. A loud, piercing scream, that curdled the blood with the intensity of its agony, and as the executioner opened her eyes she beheld the unfortunate rat-catcher at the other end of the room, seated on the floor, swaying to and fro, nursing her bruised and beaten foot, while the rat, greatly frightened by the noise, ran out of the bag, jumped on the baby's head and scared it into convulsions, leaped from the baby on to the table, flopped into a crock of butter, scrambled through a pan of milk, jumped off the table on to the window sill, and ran under the house to conceal its emotion.

Bloss' Manuscript.

Of the late George M. D. Bloss' curious manuscript the Cincinnati Enquirer, with which paper he was editorially connected for twenty-four years, says:

"The peculiarity of his chirography, which was so often commented upon, was supposed to arise from some peculiar defect of the brain. Although he knew well enough what the characters ought to be, he lacked the ability to transmit to the muscles and nerves of his hand the conception of his mind. He had the pen by the extreme end. His writing was simply a species of hieroglyphics, but he made his characters always alike, and one could by close study in time learn to decipher them. Many persons suppysed that his bad manuscript was caused by chorea scriptorum or Scrivener's palsy, but this was not the case. His chirography was something wonderful in its illegibility, and there is scarcely a printing-office in the country where there isn't a sample of "Bloss" hung up somewhere to try the compositors.

Exiles of Erin.

A rumor reached this country a few days ago that all the Fenian prisoners confined in Western Australia had escaped in an American whaling ship. According to a prominent Irish-American nationalist who was interviewed by the New York Herald, the rescue of these exiles had been in contemplation for four years, and was probably effected nearly two months ago. The details of the plot he declined to make public, on the ground that it might jeopordize the safety of those who aided in the escape.

A SCALPED MAN'S STORY.

How It Feels to Have Your Top-knot Torn Off, by the Aid of an Indian's Knife.

[From the Kansas City Times.]

There arrived here on Friday evening's Kansas Pacific train a party of three persons, direct from Deadwood City, the new mining town in the Black Hills. Learning that one of the party had been shot and scalped by Indians, a reporter sought them out, and from Mr. A. P. Woodward, formerly of Boston, but latterly of Custer, obtained the following interesting facts relating to a recent massacre about seventy miles north of Fort Laramie. Mr. Woodward was accompanied by T. S. Gates, of St. Louis, and Herman Ganzio, of Milwaukee, the latter wounded and suffering from a wound in the scalp. The scalp is, in fact, half gone.

It has often been said that a man can live after being scalped; but until last Friday evening no ocular proof had been produced in this city substantiating that fact. Herman Ganzio's head, from the center of the forehead back to the crown of the head, is at present one mass of sores. The hair has been cut away by the surgeons in charge at Fort Laramie, but the pear-shaped patch made by the scalping knife is thus made all the more distinct. The poor fellow has been in hospital since the 13th of April, but his companions have stood manfully by him, and reiterated their intention to see him through to his home. In conversation with the reporter, with whom he had been previously acquainted, Ganzio said, describing his mishap:

"You see we were coming down into the valley of Hut creek, on our way to Fort Laramie, when we thought we saw Indians coming down the creek to the right. Instead of camping there, we thought it safer to water our stock and go on into the hills and make a dry camp in the bushes, if we could not make Running Water creek, where a large camp of freighters was reported.

"I had been sent on ahead up the hill, just where the big stone hut stands by the road, and with a boy named Kountze, from Omaha, sat down to wait for the wagons, which were slowly coming up out of the valley. When the wagons reached us I started on alone through the rocks and pine bushes to seek a good camp. A few hundred yards further on I looked down a ravine to the right and saw five mounted Indians ride across the valley. I started to go back to the train, when at least a dozen Indians ran at me out of the brush, and you bet I ran and hollered for help. In a minute more two or three of them shot at me. I felt a sharp, stinging pain in my left leg, and another in my left shoulder, and I fell. Then they were upon me in a minute, and one of them put his knee on my back, while another hit me a clip with a club or a butt of a gun, I don't know which. I had no time to think. All I knew was I was being scalped; my hair was held tight. I felt a hot, a red-hot, stinging sort of pain all around the top of my head—being torn out by the roots; it was too much; I couldn't stand it; I died—at least I thought I did. But my scalp was saved just as it was being torn off. The boys at the wagons had seen me running; saw the Indians and came on—thirteen of them—and got up just in time to prevent the red devils finishing their work. The Indians, as well as my friends, thought I was dead. But I came to again, and my scalp was laid back. It was only half torn off, as you will see, and is growing again nicely."

The poor fellow was taken to Fort Laramie, and received every attention, and as soon as he was able started for his parents' home in Milwaukee. He is the first white man who has felt the "Injun's" hand in his hair this year who has lived to come home and tell how it feels. The Black Hillers spent yesterday in the city, and last evening continued their journey eastward.

Decline of Pennsylvania's Iron Trade.

"Yes, sir, Pennsylvania has lost its iron trade, and we are sorry to say that we think the best days for the trade in this State are over," said one of the leading iron men of the Keystone State. "And I will tell you why we think so," he continued. "Look at that mill across yonder. It is the largest of its kind in America. The Phœnix Iron Company commenced building it five years ago. It has a greater rolling capacity than any other establishment in the country. They finished it just as the great panic of 1875 struck them. It has never been in full operation, and it is a question whether it ever will.

"Note the furnaces that are idle. Go up the Lehigh valley, as I have done lately, and then come down the Susquehanna districts, and thence through the Schuylkill valley, and see how many stacks are in blast. Fully two-thirds are cold and bleak as black ghosts, and hundreds of thousands of dollars are invested and not a cent of income is derived. Around Pittsburgh there are a few mills going, but the margins are so very narrow that the mill owner is constantly crowding down the prices of the workingmen, and the result is continual strife and discontent.

"The truth is, and we might as well acknowledge it now as at any other time, Pennsylvania is played out as an iron commercial center. It may never again have the great trade it once possessed. It has shifted, and slowly but gradually the iron business is being divided, and it will not be long before each State will more or less contribute to its own demand.—Phœnixville (Pa.) Cor. New York Sun.

Frozen to Death in May.

Two Swedes, crossing the Snowy range on foot, left the Summit house in Berthoud pass, on Sunday, and started down the west slope. Both carried bundles of blankets and provisions, each pack weighing seventy-five or eighty pounds. On Tuesday evening one returned to the Summit house. He was snow-blind, frost-bitten, and had barely strength enough to walk. He reported that his companion had frozen to death. Soon after leaving the Summit the storm set in, and they became bewildered, benumbed with cold, and lost their way. They threw away their blankets to facilitate their movements, and the matches with which they were provided, being wet, refused to ignite. A party of men at Summit went down the trail, or road, and on Wednesday found the dead Swede. The snow was so deep that the removal of the body seemed out of the question then, so they buried it temporarily under six feet of snow.—Denver (Col.) News, March 27.

In a Den of Rattlesnakes.

The stream known as Pine Creek has long borne the reputation of one of the most prolific of trout streams. During the latter part of last week our townsmen Henry Morse and Wm. Kimball having received favorable reports of the May fishing started for their favorite summer quarters. After half a day's fishing they filled their baskets, and in capital spirits set out for their lunching place. The spot chosen was a ledge of a precipitous bank of rocks, shaded by a giant hemlock tree about thirty feet above the stream, and bounded on all sides, save the one facing the water and a rather narrow passage way, by an unbroken rocky wall ten or twelve feet in height. A sufficient number of trout were soon dressed, the lunch basket was taken from its place of security, and a blazing fire kindled to cook the fish. But as the heat began to increase, a colony of rattlesnakes grew uneasy, and determined to investigat the cause of their disturbance.

Kimball at this time had descended from their elevated position in quest of some Bordeaux, while Morse was busy cooking the fish. The snakes, several in number, had crawled meanwhile from their hiding places and were sounding the ominous rattle, familiar to man and beast alike as the certain precursor of danger ahead. But the crakling of twigs in the fire deafened the sound. It was not until Kimball was climbing upward that he took in the situation and apprised his brother sportsman of his danger. The snakes stood coiled, and prepared for an attack. Morse sought hastily for a way of escape, but the reptiles stood in his path, and, save the deep pool far below him, he was hemmed in on every side by a precipitous wall of rock. His face blanched with fear, but his resolve was soon taken, and, leaving rods, luncheon basket, and well filled creels, he sprang with a bound into the pool thirty feet below.

Fortunately, his descent was attended with no more serious results than a thorough drenching, for the water was deep and being an expert swimmer, he found no difficulty in regaining a foothold on the opposite shore, on less dangerous ground. Both Morse and Kimball by this time concluded they had had sufficient experience for one day, and without rods or fish baskets, with the bottle of claret as their only consolation, they lost no time in taking the nearest route for their hotel.—Rochester (N. Y.) Express.

A Load on Romance.

Like a chapter out of some weird romance it sounds, the story of Helen Smee and William Kempton Vance, as it came out upon their trial, concluded on the 2d of June, in the Central Criminal court at London. It appears that the woman had been abandoned by her husband and had been very sick, and had made up her mind, if she became sick again, to commit suicide. To procure the means of doing this in such a way as that a post-mortem examination would not discover her self-destruction, and that there might not be any scandal about it, she inserted an advertisement in one of the daily papers stating that a professional gentleman engaged in an interesting experiment wanted the assistance of a medical man or student well up in chemistry, whose services would be well paid for. The advertisement attracted the attention of Vance, a chemist, who seems to have been well nigh as poor and woe-begone as Romeo's apothecary; and, after some correspondence, it was agreed that he should be paid £10 for furnishing her a poison such as directed. At this stage the negotiation was interrupted by one of the letters between Vance and Smee happening to go to the dead-letter office, where its strange contents excited suspicion, and it was turned over to the police. The result was that both were arrested and tried for conspiracy to murder and to commit suicide. On her arrest, Mrs. Smee, with a simple pathos that told volumes of misery, merely said: "I only intended to have the drugs in readiness, as I have been very ill and weak, that I might have used them in case I was ill again. I have been very lonely since my husband left me." But that availed nothing, and, under the English law, both were convicted of conspiracy to compass her suicide, and Vance was sentenced to imprisonment for eighteen months, and Mrs. Smee for six months—which, of course, will make her more liable to commit suicide than before.

A Desperate Lover.

A Maine man, being refused by a widowed lady for whom he worked, and to whom he made an offer of marriage, went into the kitchen, emptied a pail of water on the floor, spread out a red bandanna handkerchief on it, tied another around his neck, laid down in the puddle, and uttered a sound half way between the notes of a dying swan and a calf with the colic. The lady of the house went to the spot as soon as she could, but when she stepped in the water and in the dim light of the morning saw Tuttle stretched out among the red stuff, she was so terrified with his sanguinary appearance that she went into a swoon, from which she was not restored until three hours had elapsed. Tuttle was arrested and put under bonds to keep the peace—so ended his dream of love.

Shutting Down.

Hard times and the approach of dry goods prices to "hard-pan" have induced the managers of the Atlantic cotton mills, one of the largest concerns of the kind in Massachusetts, to make arrangements for a cessation of work when the stock on hand is worked up. The nominal net assets of the mills are nearly $2,000,000, but the debts, something more than $800,000, are likely to be troublesome, and unless additional capital is furnished, may entail sacrifices. The flush times which were enjoyed by manufacturers for a dozen years are not likely to return in a hurry.

Alcohol, as a stimulant, has been discontinued for the last three years by the Wrexham Union Board of Guardians in England. They substituted beef-tea, milk and eggs where pauper inmates needed extra nourishment, and have thus not only saved six shillings annually per head, but the health of the paupers have greatly improved.

EUROPE.

The Eastern Question—Prospects of a Second Crimean War.

[From the Chicago Tribune.]

Is Europe drifting into war? Two weeks ago Abdul-Aziz, Sultan of Turkey, was deposed by a sudden popular revolution, and Murad Effendi, his nephew, ascended the throne of Othman. The news was received in England with jubilation. It was regarded as in the interests of peace, notwithstanding England's refusal to accept the Berlin agreement of the three powers. Under the influence of this feeling Turkish securities improved, and the English creditors felt easier, while the three great powers that had met at Berlin remained ominously silent. In diplomacy, as in war, radical changes are made in a day. Abdul-Aziz has left a legacy of trouble to his successor. Before he is fairly upon his throne, he finds himself surrounded with the preparations for a great war—the Servians and Bulgarians collecting their armies and hurrying them to the frontier to make common cause with the other Sclaves; the Black sea swarming with Russian gunboats; the English war vessels steaming across the Mediterranean toward the Bosphorus; Greece placing her little army on a war footing and negotiating a war loan of money.

The relations between Turkey and the Christian insurgents and between Turkey and the three powers now begin to lose interest as compared with the disturbance of the relations between Great Britain and Russia. If the signs are to be trusted, the Eastern question looms up again, and another Crimean war is inevitable, in which England must side with Turkey without the co-operation of France, and with Austria and Italy in active sympathy with Russia.

It is to prevent the absorption of Constantinople by Russia, and to seal up the Bosphorus against her, that England is now moving her fleets. Russia, while ostensibly remaining quiet and urging a pacific settlement, is in reality engaged in active warfare against Turkey. Servia, Bulgaria and Roumania swarm with her agents, exciting disaffection among the people. The Servian troops, which are now ranged on the frontier, are officered by Russian generals. She holds the Sclavic provinces like hounds at the leash, ready to let them slip at the proper moment. She has already many war vessels in the Black sea, and has issued orders for the construction of many more. If she can obtain control of the Bosphorus, she will not only have an outlet to the Mediterranean, but she will never again relinquish her hold upon it. Once in possession, she threatens Egypt, compels England to hold Alexandria in order to defend the Suez canal, and threatens not only to cut off England's route to Asia, but to endanger her Asiatic possession. Once in possession of the Bosphorus and locking it up, she holds Asia at her mercy. She will sweep down the Euphrates to the Persian gulf through Turkey in Asia. She already holds Toorkistan, and will drive the weak powers—Persia, Cabool and Beloochistan—before her like chaff before the wind, thus reaching the borders of Hindostan and threatening British India. All this hangs upon the possession of Constantinople. The little breeze which began in Herzegovina a year ago has now developed in a tempest, and the dreaded Eastern question is forced upon England again. Diplomacy may once more ward off the conflict; the events of one day may precipitate it. In case it comes, the map of Europe must be reconstructed. Roumania, Bulgaria, Constantinople, the Bosphorus, all go to Russia; Servia, Bosnia and Montenegro to Austria, forming a colossal Pan-Sclavonic empire; Macedonia and Thessaly to Greece; Northern Austria to Germany, whose cunning Chancellor sits like a spider in his web, watching the flies buzzing about him. What goes to England? She will take Egypt, if France will allow it. Meanwhile, the Russians will be between her and India. There may be another Crimean war, but this time England will not have France, Italy and Austria to help her.

Did the Sultan Kill Himself.

[From the New York Sun.]

Mankind will be apt to remain in doubt for some time whether the deposed Sultan really committed suicide or whether he was assassinated, according to the old Turkish custom which has been illustrated even within the present century. It is the official announcement that he committed suicide; but the fact of its being official does not give assurance of its trustworthiness. The conspirators of the Divan had learned that the news of the strangling of the dethroned sovereign would not be received with satisfaction by the Governments of Europe. The Emperor of Russia had instructed his Ambassador at Constantinople to look after the safety of Abdul Aziz, and Queen Victoria had sent similar instructions to the British Ambassador. The Turkish Minister of Foreign Affairs was so stirred up by the reports sent abroad on the subject, that he telegraphed to the Turkish representatives at all the courts of Europe a hasty denial of the "malevolent rumors concerning the deposed monarch's fate." But it would not be out of keeping with Turkish tradition, if at the time this dispatch was sent out, Abdul Aziz had already been disposed of. The very day after his dethronement we received a dispatch, which was immediately contradicted, that he had been suddenly overtaken by death. It will be hard to penetrate the mysteries of the palace of Tcheragan, in which he has been confined since his overthrow.

There is doubt that, if he was assassinated, the new Government would deny it, and trust to the concealment of the fact.

Whatever may have been the fact, it is certain that Abdul Aziz must have been almost distracted by the troubles which preceded his dethronement; and, therefore, the account of his suicide is not entirely incredible.

Not Guilty.

There was a pretty sharp tramp tried before a jury in the Recorder's court the other morning. The Recorder asked him if he had any objection to make to the jury, which looked like it might have been a detail from Falstaff's recruits with which he said he was ashamed to march through Coventry. The tramp replied to the question by rolling up his eyes and calling on "the power above" that whenever he objected to a jury like that he hoped his right arm might cleave to the roof of his mouth. The jury pronounced him "not guilty" without leaving their seats.—San Antonio Herald.

Gravediggers' Strike.

There has been a gravediggers' strike at Liverpool. It seems that the Burial Board lately refused a demand made by their gravediggers for shorter hours. This refusal led to the men striking work. Since then violence has been used toward one or two of the new gravediggers, engaged to replace the others. There is something alarming in the prospect of a general strike of gravediggers. Even the warmest advocates of cremation can hardly view without anxiety the sudden stoppage of the present mode of sepulture.

Auburn Courier.

AUBURN, INDIANA, JUNE 22, 1876.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

DEAR COURIER.—Nothing gave me more pleasure on my arrival here, than reading the report of the Committee in Speaker Kerr's case. A full and complete vindication of one of nature's noblemen is not alone gratifying to the party with which he affiliates, but to the whole people, especially in these troublous times of dishonesty and corruption. I cannot call to mind another person, who is a fairer specimen of my idea of an honest man, than Mr. Kerr. He is so constituted that it is simply impossible for him to be other than honest Ought notsuch a man, then, be deserving of great credit for the possession of such a quality; only by comparison, I think. The whole country will rejoice over the complete refutation of the charges against him. The Committee unanimously report that the charges have not been sustained, and the Republican members thereof, when the report was made to the House, expressed their entire confidence in his integrity. Then the vote was taken on the report in the House. Mr. Garfield moved that each member rise, and it was a proud movement for Mr. Kerr, when every member present stood upon his feet. I noticed an item in the State papers, a few days ago, saying that Mr. Williams our candidate for Governor, would not even buy a revenue stamp during the war. In a conversation with "Uncle Jimmy," recently, I found out all about that stamp business, which runs about as follows:

During the war a large cattle dealer, a neighbor of Mr. Williams', bought $1200 worth of stock of Mr. Williams and as he had not the money with him at the time of purchase, he offered to give his note until the next day, when he would draw the money from bank and pay it off. Mr. Williams, knowing the entire responsibility of the purchaser, said no, he did not want his note, that he could hand him the money in a day or two, and jocosely remarked that it would save him a revenue stamp of 50 cents. Here was an old farmer who had confidence in his neighbor, and trusted him for a few hundred dollars, and now the act is construed by his political enemies as unpatriotic, because he did not compel his neighbor to give his note and pay for a revenue stamp. What think our farmer friends of such an act upon the part of our candidate for Governor. Was it rebellious in fact, or appearance, or did not it partake rather of that spirit that was heralded to the shepherds, nearly two thousand years ago, in those beautiful words, "Peace on earth good will toward man." It evinces a finer, deeper strata of goodness and neighborly feeling, than is usually found in politicians, and doubt whether unscrupulous tricksters will be able to make much headway with the good elements of society, against such qualities of the heart, as was shown by this act.

THE CINCINNATI CONVENTION.

There was a terrible excitement here during the sitting of the Republican convention at Cincinnati. It was generally believed that Blaine would win and hundreds of bets were made in his favor. The Democrats were perfectly willing that he should be nominated, well knowing that he could be beaten as easily as any other man. When the first ballot came his friends were jubilant, and held to him to the last. The nomination of Hayes was quietly received here, and he is regarded as a light but available candidate. The ticket partakes, in one respect, more of the skunk, the tail end being the strongest. Mr. Wheeler is a much more able man than Hayes, and the ticket would be stronger by turning it around. Bristow would have been much better, a much stronger candidate than Hayes, but his reform proclivities, were not popular with his party. The Democrats conclude him to be the hardest man to beat, but, as it is, they feel that a good nomination at St. Louis will come out victorious. Blaine's friends are terribly down, and although there is an expression of apparent satisfaction over the ticket, there is a strong under current not entirely harmonious.

The plank in the platform endorsing the administration is received with a dubious shake of the head. What more absolute, and positive endorsement can be made than the following:

> "The national administration merits commendation for its honorable work in the management of the domestic and foreign affairs, and President Grant deserves the continued and hearty gratitude of the American people for his patriotism and his immense service in war and in peace." [Cheers.]

That this spirit of endorsement animated the convention is evinced by the presiding officer who said: "The brightest pages of American history are but the life story of the Republican party.' Yes. What a beautiful page is that which tells how Delano swindled the poor Indian! What a splendid page is that which relates how Belknap cheated the dead of the republic out of their tombstones, and narrates the way in which he let loose his bands of predatory post-traders upon the living soldiers on the plains! What a thrilling chapter is that which tells how the whisky ring swindled the treasury out of hundreds of thousands of dollars! The page which details the enterprise of Babcock in opening safes, and of Boss Shepherd in running up a debt of twenty millions of dollars, is the most glorious of all. The credit-mobilier page is a magnificent one; and like to the freedman's bank page there is nothing in all our history. The party ought to be proud of the whole volume. And yet a clear and explicit endorsement is asked of the American people for this administration and it declares that the gratitude of the country is due to Grant for the Babcock crooked whiskey frauds, the Tom Murphy customhouse frauds, the postoffice straw-bid frauds, the navy contract frauds, the freedman's savings bank frauds, the secret service fund fraud, the Chorpenning frauds, and Schenck protection, the Belknap soldiers' grave-stone fraud and Belknap protection, the District ring frauds and Boss Shepherd protection, the Indian ring frauds and Delano protection, the safe burglary villainy and the Babcock and Harrington protection—yes, yes, for all this the Republican party and President Grant deserve "the continued and hearty gratitude of the American people,"

The eye of the country is now fixed on St. Louis, and from out that city should come a ruler, that can rule the people in the interest of economy and honesty. We have the material to select from, by which the people can rise in their might and put their seal of condemnation upon this endorsement of a corrupt administration. Let the Democracy select a good man, and I firmly believe we can elect him. It is evident that the Republicans are working every point to win. They are not flushed with confidence as their selection would indicate. They feel that there is a great struggle to come, and it will require all their resources to win, if win they can.

I wish you would inform our Bro. Weamer, that this is not from the Mac-a-cheek press the paper of which he was foreman.

If butter proves to be a sure remedy for complaints that are very common among many of our people, we may expect to see the price go up. And each doctor purchase a fresh milch cow. And a patent churn man would'nt do bad, either.

He was intoxicated or perhaps would not have done so. We know a man in this town that you could'nt cut his cheek with a cleaver

It is a circumstance to be considered that the more metropolitan newspapers—those whose editors do not come in contact with the people—consider the nominees of the Cincinnati Convention very strong, whereas the papers that draw their inspiration direct from the people take the opposite view of it.

The Republican convention will meet at this place Saturday. We expect to see a large crowd and would like to have our Democratic friends come out and see the fight. The expenses of the Morton delegations that visited Cincinnati during the convention and formed the great crowds that did the cheering at the Morton headquarters, were paid by somebody. It must have cost the senator a round sum. Many of the delegation wearing Morton badges never staid so long at a respectable hotel in their lives before without cutting on their bills.

Because we happen to take our shotgun and start out for a Saturday afternoon's gunning it is no reason that half a dozen impudent persons should inquire if we were on a tour for collecting subscription money. The times are hard, and ammunition costs too much to be wasted on delinquent subscribers just now.

Parties are starting a candy factory in the building opposite the Auburn House. And where Dawson's Furniture Room was is a large carriage factory with a fine selection of buggies on hand. Day by day some new enterprise is started and if the COURIER fails to mention any of them we hope some one will remind us of it. We are always glad to lend a helping hand to strangers.

Mr. J. R. Laning who was suggested as the chairman of the Democratic central committee requests us to announce a call of the committee for next Saturday the 24th inst, the following are the members of the committee, viz: L. A young man who wants to marry badly was buzzing around the court house all day yesterday. Unfortunately for his hopes, he is a hopeless orphan, not yet 21 years old and not in possession of a guardian. All sorts of affidavits would have to be made out in his case, and he worked heroically to find somebody to fix things. After quite a struggle with our best attorneys he was informed he could not get a license. He asked us for our advice and we told him go to Michigan, young man, go to Michigan! If you are over 18 and your girl is over 16 there will be no need of commiting any crime to get your neck in the matrimonial noose.

We would have been pleased to publish the proceedings of the Dekalb Sunday school Association, which convened here two days last week, but owing to getting the copy at too late an hour it was imposible for us to do so. The convention was largely attended and a great deal of good done. Ministers from all parts of the county were in attendance and each one addressed the audience turn-about. The M. E. church not being large enough to comfortably seat all, part of them were taken to the Baptist and Presbyterian churchs. It was no fault of the secretary that the COURIER and the "Press" did not get the proceeding.

The candidate for state treasurer on the Republican ticket, George F. Herriot hastened to telegraph home the following: "Hard money platform. All pleased." Mr. Herriot will find out when he commences his canvass with the people that he will have to confront tens of thousands of Republicans in this state who will not be pleased with either the platform or with Herriot, who is so jubilant over the hard money plank. There is a looseness of party ties this centennial year that will render futile any attempt to dragoon the masses against their political convictions George F. Herriot, acting under the enthusiasm of Cincinati, has made a blunder.

The streets of Auburn were crowded on Saturday last with people from all parts of the surounding country.—The fact is we have the prettiest country and city in all this great west; and we are pleased to state that our town is steadily growing. A number of very nice new building are being erected and improvements of a modern style are being made on the residences of many of our citizens. The new brick houses four in number will soon be finished and that, together with the little groceries on the conner will add very much to the looks of Main Street. We can't expect all to have the enterprise, but yet we have the assurance of, at least, half of our citizens being full of vim and go-a-head.

A gentleman and lady were having a conversation in a depot, not a hundred miles away, and through common courtesy, of course, the gentleman offered his services, both going the same way. They both fell half a sleep, and, after the gentleman imitating the puffing noise of the steam, he called out "Butler," and in a moment "Waterloo." He roused up a little and says, "change cars," after another moment he called out, "all aboard for Auburn," and looking at the lady says, take a seat, "I'll see you through." The night watch came in and shook him. He looked up and says, "I'll see you through." But after an extra shake he woke up, asked for the lady first and then for the train. He was informed that both had gone and he inquired for the nearest hotel.

And it came to pass on last Friday, that a foot race took place at Butler. And a large crowd from this city was sent forth. Twenty foot start was given the Butler man and he came out a-head They were to start at the crack of a pistol, but the pistol didn't crack—it was the cap. They all went up into the city and lo, and behold, Geogenagle's door was closed. Then there was weaping, and blowing off of mouths, and the children of Auburn boarded the Air Line train and went to Waterloo. From Waterloo they started homeward to tell their fathers of their success, but their father's doors was closed against them, and they were burdened and heavy ladened, but finally found a place to rest their weary heads. The next day they all gathered together and told of what had happened, and thought their work was well performed.

Scribner for July, though not entirely given over to Centennial topics, contains much, the publishers claim, that will just now be of peculiar interest to the American public. The accounts of the singing of the Declaration (even those by the singers themselves) are very conflicting, and Col. Higginson's "Story of the Singers," in this number, is a concise and reliable review of the subject. The illustrations of this paper are quite striking. Recent research has shown that some of our most orthodox and cherished legends of the Declaration will not do 'to tie to.' But if we must give up the 'Ring! Grandpa!' story, as Col. Higginson seems to think, we shall find, by way of compensation, plenty of authentic legends about Washington in the next paper; "A Little Centennial Lady," by Mrs. Constance Cary Harrison—a delightful illustrated sketch of Sally Fairfax, Gen. Washington's pet and friend. This is a rare piece of magazine writing, and embodies portions of Sally's journan, written in the quaintest of language, and many other very interesting things that will entertain all.

AN AMERICAN SINGER.

Her Struggles and Triumphs—The Life and Adventures of Emma Abbott.

In 1854, a poor music teacher, with a sad face, sat in the Peoria, Ill., depot consoling a sick wife and a group of restless children. The father, hoping to better his condition, had left the busy city of Chicago and brought his little flock of helpless children with him. Among the children was a little, bright four-year old girl. They called her Emma. The little thing, surrounded by poverty, sang and hummed and prattled, for, like her father, she was fond of music. The poor music teacher moved into a little wooden house on the hill, and, after a while, Providence put enough pupils in his way to keep poverty from his door. At night Mr. Abbott came home tired and discouraged, but the warblings and happy chatter of little Emma cheered him up. From her earliest infancy the little child had taken intense delight in music. A song or an organ in the street would draw the little thing hungry from the table. A touch on a guitar would set her in ecstasy. At the age of six little Emma had dreams of singing in public. At six she was constantly singing about the house, catching every tune she heard her father play, and at nine, to the surprise of everybody, she began to play the guitar herself. She became so proficient with the guitar, and created so much talk among the neighbors, that her father thought he would better his circumstances by bringing her out with her little brother George in a concert in Peoria. The night came. The little thing, not much taller than her guitar, amazed and delighted the audience. Her debut was so successful that her father resolved to take her on a concert tour. This he did, and the child singer appeared hundreds of times before delighted country audiences before she was thirteen years old. At the age of thirteen little Emma was invited to visit some school friends at Mount Pulaski, not a great way from Peoria. While there, knowing the poverty of her father and wishing to surprise him with money earned entirely by herself, she resolved to get up a concert "on her own hook." She went to the Pulaski printing office in short dresses, got trusted for her own handbills, and then went and posted them around town herself. On one of these handbills now before me is printed:

Miss Abbott will sing "The Merry Swiss Girl," a chorus!

The little girl didn't know what a chorus meant, but it looked nice, and so she had it put on the bill. She drew quite a house; took $10, and took $7 home to her mother. Her father now becoming sick and discouraged, little Emma went down to Lincoln, sang in a school house, and then came home to give guitar lessons at twenty cents per lesson to pay her own tuition in a select school. At fifteen little Emma secured a class of twenty poor children, who came to recite at her mother's house. On Sundays she sang in the Hebrew synagogue—a kind old rabbi, Marx Moses, teaching her to pronounce in Hebrew and German.

The spring of her sixteenth birthday found Emma's father poorer than ever before, and the little woman, to help her mother, tried to secure a clerkship in a store, but failed. She saw her father sick and discouraged, her mother sick, and brothers and sisters hungry. In the midst of her great distress she heard of a school nine miles from Peoria which needed a teacher. Thither she went on foot through the mud and slush. She found the principal trustee, a kind old man, at dinner.

"What do you want, my little woman?" asked the old farmer, as he laid down his knife and fork to survey our little heroine.

"I live in Peoria, sir, and I've walked——"

"What! walked, child? w-a-l-k-e-d!" interrupted the old man in astonishment.

"Yes, sir; and I want to teach your school."

"Well, I declare! But, my child, there are fifteen applications in ahead of yours."

"But I don't think that any of them need it as bad as I do," said Emma.

"No, and you are the smartest-lookin' one in the whole lot, and as plucky as Julius Cæsar. Have you got your certificate?"

"No, sir," faltered Emma.

"Well, my girl, if you've walked nine miles through this mud and slush you'll do to teach school for me. Sit up and have some dinner!"

Emma began the school the next week, won the respect of the parents and the love of the children, and in four months took $40 back to her mother in Peoria.

After school closed, Emma, assisted by her father, gave her first large concert in Peoria. Quite a number of amateurs assisted her, Rouse hall was filled, the people cheered, and her poor father and mother received $100. This was all used by her father and mother, except $3. With this amount in her hand, she left her father sick at home and started for Rock Island, to visit a young lady friend who thought she might get up a concert in Rock Island. She found her young lady friend absent and her money dwindled to twenty cents.

"What shall I do?" she said to herself, almost disheartened. Then a new thought seized her. She remembered her father had once taught music in a family of the name of Deer, who lived over the Mississippi river in Moline. "Mr. Deer will surely help me," she said, "and I will get up a concert there."

Ten cents took Emma to Moline, but Mr. Deer was absent. Mrs. Deer, a crotchety-faced old woman, was very cross. She looked insinuatingly at Emma, and said:

"I don't know what a pretty young woman like you wants of my husband. I guess he hain't got no time to fool away getting up concerts."

Just then Miss Abbott spied the piano, and asked if she might play something. In a moment she was warbling a sweet song. The old woman listened, then dropped her dishes, wiped her hands on her apron, and came and looked over her glasses in astonishment. Just then Mr. Deer entered.

"By Jove, Matilda, that's nice singin'," he exclaimed. "Who's doin' it?"

"My name is Emma—Emma Abbott, sir. Father used to teach——"

"Thunder, yes! I remember Mr. Abbott; but what are you doin' here? What——"

"Well, pa and ma are very poor now, and I've come here to see if you'd help me get up a concert."

"Help you? Why, of course I will. You shall have our church. You're a brave girl, and we'll get you up a big house."

And she did have it. She got her bills printed, went around personally and announced the concert in the schools, and the house was crowded.

The next night Miss Abbott sang again, and at the end of a week she returned to Peoria with $60 in cash. When she showed her money, her astonished mother held up her hands, and, with joy and sadness in strange combination, exclaimed:

"Oh, Emma, I hope you haven't been robbing somebody!"

Little Emma was now past sixteen years old. She saw her father and mother getting poorer every day. She knew she had talents, but she had no one to bring them out. Her father was too feeble to help her. So she started on a concert tour through Illinois—all alone, accompanied by her faithful guitar. Arriving in a town she would announce her concert in the schools, sometimes with poor success, sometimes successfully; but she was always hopeful. She always sent home all the money she did not need to use. At Joliet a Chicago opera troupe came up behind her, saw her bills and heard such praises from the people that they engaged her to sing with them for seventy-five nights through Illinois, Indiana and Michigan, where the troupe broke up and left her out of money.

The next town was Grand Haven. Out of money and 200 miles from home, she determined to give one more concert alone and raise money enough to take her home. Poor, friendless and discouraged, it was to be her last effort. The audience came late, and among them was a kind-hearted railroad man, who listened with enthusiasm.

"My child, you have the voice of an angel!" he said. "You must go to New York."

"But I have no money."

"Well, I will give you a pass to Detroit. From there you can sing through Canada to the Falls, and some way get to New York. Trust in Providence, and go and see Parepa. She is in New York. She'll help you."

With thanks for the advice, and sanguine with hope, little Emma landed the next day in Detroit, and then crossed over to Canada. Contrary to her sanguine expectations, she found Canada a poor place for her. She stopped at several towns, but hard luck stared at her everywhere. Many times she walked, hungry, from place to place, and once, to raise money, she cut off her hair and sold it. Music was her love, and she forgot every discomfort in the midst of of her beautiful songs.

Once she froze her feet and sang while they ached with the intense pain which follows. The applause of the audience overcame hunger, sorrow and even the pains of frozen feet. Her one intense desire was to get to New York and see Parepa. On she was wafted toward the big city. At Lyons, in Wayne county, her money gave out, and she stopped to sing in a school house. All day long she went without food. She actually sang when faint and hungry. With the proceeds she bought a good supper, and continued on her way to New York.

After two weeks of singing and hoping and struggling, Miss Abbott finally arrived in New York, alone and in the night, putting up at the Washington house. The next night she paid her last money for a ticket to the opera; but, to her great disappointment, Parepa did not sing. She finally heard Parepa at Steinway hall, but never succeeded in meeting her face to face.

Failing to interest any one in her voice in New York, and solicitous for the welfare of her father and mother, Miss Abbott resolved to return to the West. What could she do? She was out of money, with no friend, except her sweet, bird-like voice. Many a time this voice had been her salvation before. It had opened stony hearts. So, borrowing $15 from a lady in the hotel, our little wanderer started for the West. Her money took her to Monroe, Mich., where she hazarded everything in advertising three concerts. The nights were stormy, and she lost all her money. She could not pay her hotel bill, and the unfeeling landlord held on to her guitar. With tears in her eyes she left it, and went on to the next town, where she sang in an ice cream saloon, making money enough to go back and redeem her guitar. This was one of the most dismal episodes in Miss Abbott's life. So discouraged was she that when a theatrical troupe came along she was glad to join it for seventy nights, to sing in Iowa, Kansas, and even out among the Nebraska Indians, sending the proceeds to her mother.

Ambitious of success she now tried, with poor luck, three concerts alone in Milwaukee and Chicago. The people had never heard of her wonderful voice, and they would not come out to hear one young lady sing.

Her ill success in Chicago and Milwaukee induced her to try the provincial towns again, so little Emma started for Plymouth, Ind., where she advertised to sing in the parlors of the United States hotel. The audience was small, and she had to pawn her guitar for $2.50 to pay her hotel bill. She also pawned her concert dress, the only nice dress she had, to get money enough to go to Fort Wayne, Ind., a few miles beyond, where she advertised for another concert. The concert was in the parlor of the Evelin House, and having no guitar, she engaged the clerk in the music store to play her accompaniments. The few who came were delighted, and her receipts were $18. With this she went back to Plymouth, redeemed her guitar and dress, and sent $5 to her mother.

With bad luck all around her, and the future almost hopeless, Miss Abbott now almost gave up in despair. Then the thought that her poor mother and sisters depended upon her impelled her to make one more effort.

"I will go to Toledo," she said, "and make one more effort and trust in Providence for the rest."

Arriving at Toledo, she advertised to sing in the parlor of the Oliver house. Fate was against her. The small audience, though enthusiastic, did not pay expenses, but the chivalrous landlord refused to take her guitar.

"No, sir!" said he, forgetting that he was addressing a young lady, "George Brown ain't going to take no young lady's guitar—and mor'n that, you can stay and try it again!"

Things now looked dismal enough. Her splendid courage began to give out. Behind her she saw nothing but a three years' struggle with poverty. The future looked as black as midnight. The kindness of George Brown brought tears to her eyes, but after it came the dreadful thought of—suicide. The idea of failure in the scheme of her life was dreadful. That day little Emma went with a bursting heart and looked off the great Toledo pier, and the thought of jumping off struggled in her bosom. Sadly she turned away. Howe was gone, but she thought of her mother, and love for her still buoyed her up.

Returning to the Oliver house, she caught a glimpse of Clara Louise Kellogg, then in the zenith of her fame, but in a moment she was gone. She disappeared, with a piece of music, in the Oliver house. Following after, little Emma encountered Miss Kellogg's maid.

"Oh, I do want to see Miss Kellogg so much!" she exclaimed to Petrilla. "Oh, can't I see her?"

"She's just gone in to dinner with her mother, but she will be out in a moment," answered Miss Kellogg's maid.

In a few minutes Miss Kellogg came out with her mother.

"I'm Miss Abbott," said little Emma, half frightened, "and I do wish to see you so much!"

"Never mind, come in. What can I do for you?" asked the kind-hearted Miss Kellogg.

"I want you to try my voice. I do think I can sing, and if you only say so I shall be sure," said little Emma, looking up pleadingly with her clear blue eyes

"Why, certainly, my child," said Miss Kellogg's mother, who got up and opened the piano, but seeing little Emma's shabby dress and wild, sad look, she held up her hands and exclaimed: "Why, Louise, where has this poor child been wandering?"

In a moment Miss Abbott was singing one of her beautiful ballads, full of native sweetness and pathos. As her magical voice touched those high, clear notes which have since astonished the kings and princes of Europe, Miss Kellogg's mother sat in mute wonder. The ears of the good mother of the great singer seemed to feast on the clear, sweet strains; then she burst out enthusiastically:

"Louise! Louise? Do you hear that voice—how clear—no break there! That's the voice for me!"

That night Mis Kellogg kindly gave Miss Abbott a letter to Errani, a singing teacher in New York, and money enough to pursue her studies for for two years.

With tears in her eyes, little Emma thanked her benefactor—the singing angel sent by the Lord to lead her out of captivity. Then she came to New York.

A home at Dr. Elder's, two years with Errani, and an engagement to sing in Dr. Chapin's Fifth Avenue church at $1,500 a year quickly followed. Sunday after Sunday that great congregation was melted by Miss Abbott's magic voice. Triumph after triumph came, but still beyond she hoped for more. She longed for fame—for recognition.

One day (March 1, 1872) a rich business man, whose heart was bigger than his pocket-book—Mr. John T. Daly, who afterward built the Windsor hotel—sat down in his office and wrote a little note to Miss Abbott. It was short, but it was worthy of Mr. Daly, who was always doing princely things, and it filled her heart with a flood of joy. Mr. Daly told her how he admired her talent and respected her pluck, and that if she wished to go to Milan and study he would furnish her the money.

"I want to go," said Miss Abbott, when the writer talked with her, her eyes all the time beaming with gratitude. "It is the hope of my life, but I do not wish to receive so much from one person. If the whole congregation will interest themselves in me how gladly I will go."

"Very well," said a leading member, Mrs. George Lake, on the morning of March 20, "I will give $1,000 toward it." Then Mrs. George Hoffman gave $500, Mr. C. P. Huntington $500, Mr. John Q. Hoyt $500, Mr. E. L. A. Wetherell $500, Mr. A. J. Johnson $200, some others $100 each, and Mr. Daly made up the rest, all payable to the order of Mr. D. D. T. Marshall.

On Saturday morning, May 20, 1772, a great crowd of friends with bouquets and benedictions thronged the city of Paris to bid God speed to Miss Emma A. Abbott on her journey across the Atlantic to Milan.

On Miss Abbott's arrival in Milan, Lamperti pronounced her voice a marvel. Nara, to whom Stanley recommended her, after hearing her sing from "Mignon," said, "You must quit the music of Ambroise Thomas and take the grand scores of the masters."

San Giovanni finally became Miss Abbott's teacher. Losing her health, she took a trip to the Mediterranean and back to Paris, where one day she was invited to the palace of the Rothschilds by the baroness, who was so enraptured by her sweet voice that she embraced her and became her bosom friend. The venerable Bolandi, the favorite instructor of Malibran, offered to instruct Miss Abbott in Paris, but Delle Sedie, to whom Nilsson recommended her, finally became her teacher. When he heard her sing he exclaimed, "Mademoiselle, you will yet have the world at your feet," and Wartel, the distinguished French teacher, said, "When she is finished she will be without a rival in the world."

Madame La Grange said: "My child, you are very like Jenny Lind. Your voice is pure, limpid, powerful, sweet, charmante—charmante!"

Then all Paris became wild about the wandering child from Peoria. Adalina Patti invited her to her villa, and when she sang an aria Patti folded her in her arms and said: "I love you because you love your art, and I see you will become great."

Then Miss Abbott's fame went beyond Paris—to London and St. Petersburg. When Franchi, the renowned impressario of St. Petersburgh, heard her sing with Patti he offered her a big price to go to Russia, and Patti said: "Come, my child, with me, and I will be in a box to applaud your debut and throw you your first bouquet." But she chose to stay and study with Wartel in Paris. One day Wartel interrupted her singing by exclaiming: "C'est magnifique! You sing like an angel, little one. You will be the glory of America!"

A few days ago I picked up the Sun and read this cable dispatch, Mr. Gye, the renowned Covent Garden impressario, having introduced our sweet Peoria warbler to the most critical court audience of England:

"Miss Emma Abbott made a very successful debut as Daughter of the Regiment at Covent Garden to-night. Though her acting leaves something to be desired, she possesses a voice of great power and purity, and is almost perfect in her rendering of the character. She was twice recalled after the first act."

And when the big-hearted Christians in New York read this paragraph—they who, remembering our Savior, put their arms around this toiling woman and helped her up—when they read of her final triumph they said, "Verily, it is more blessed to give than to receive," and all the world responded, "Of such is the kingdom of heaven!"

And when little Emma shall one day stand in our Academy of Music, like Nilsson and Titiens and Lucca, her silver voice filling the air like a choir of angels, or hushing the audience by a holy repose, then the Church of the Divine Paternity will strew the first bouquets at the feet of her who, loving both the church and the drama, improves all the gifts which God has given her.

Naval Engagement on the Ohio—Two Men Killed.

Our community was shocked, last evening, at the intelligence of the killing of Maj. A. J. Harrington, Deputy United States Marshal, of this city, at Maysville, yesterday afternoon. Maj. Harrington, on Friday last, received instructions from the clerk of the United States court at Louisville, directing him to seize the towboat Kate Dickson, on account of some suit brought against her in that city, process in pursuance of which she was attempting to evade. When these instructions were received the boat was lying at the Cincinnati wharf, and outside the jurisdiction of the Kentucky Federal court. She remained there until about daylight yesterday morning, Maj. Harrington in the meanwhile keeping close watch on her movements, when she departed up the river.

Maj. Harrington, who had chartered the steamer Champion No. 8 for the purpose, immediately started in pursuit, with Michael Fitzpatrick and one or two others of this city, whose names we are unable to ascertain, as a posse to aid, if necessary, the enforcement of the process. It would appear that the towboat was overtaken at Maysville.

The Champion went up alongside the Kate Dickson, while the latter was tying up at a wharf. Maj. Harrington, on the Champion, was brought face to face with Taylor's son, on the Dickson. Young Taylor asked, "Who are you; what do you want, anyway?" Harrington answered, "I am a United States Marshal, from Covington. My name is Harrington. I have come up to take this boat, and arrest Capt. Taylor. Where is the Captain?"

Young Taylor made some reply, b t at that instant Harrington caught sight of Capt. Taylor, who was at his stateroom window looking down at him, and in the act of aiming at him a shot-gun—double-barrel, some reports say. Without a word Taylor fired at Harrington a load of buck-shot, which penetrated his left side, some of them entering his heart. Harrington fell back into the arms of one of his men, and died almost instantly. Taylor immediately appeared at the guards with a revolver. Four shots were fired at him instantly, one of which passed through his heart, it is supposed, for his death was as instantaneous as Harrington's.—Cincinnati Commercial.

Silver Drums.

A pair of silver kettledrums has just been presented to the Fifth Lancers (British) regiment. These drums, the labor of five months, are intended to replace the silver drums of the regiment destroyed in the fire at the Tower of London. They are hammered out of sheet silver, and are 960 ounces in weight, with mountings of the pure metal. Silver drums are not destined merely for show, for it is well known that the tone produced is both sweet and sonorous. Four other cavalry regiments possess silver kettledrums, First and Second Life-guards, the Royal Horse-guards (blue), and the Third Hussars; the first three regiments receive them as a gift from royalty, and one of them, belonging to the Third Hussars, was won in fair fight at the battle of Dettingen, where it was captured by a trumpeter in face of the enemy.

A Historical Quarrel.

One of the most amusing of the Congressional squabbles was between two gentlemen who were never excited by strong drink—Jefferson Davis and Henry S. Foote. They were sitting in a room together at Willard's, in 1848, and got into a discussion over a letter written by Gen. Taylor, then a candidate for the Presidency. One word brought on another, and soon the two "grave and reverend" Senators were striking from the shoulder at each other. The noise of the encounter brought neighboring inmates of the hotel into the room, and the combatants were separated, and, after some entreaty, shook hands and made friends.

"Really," said Mr. Foote, "I should not have thought of such a thing as striking Mr. Davis if he had not passed the first blow."

"Are you not mistaken about that?" urged Mr. Davis, apologetically.

"Indeed, I am not!" retorted the impetuous Mr. Foote.

"It is my impression you struck first," pleaded Mr. Davis.

"Oh, no! It was you!"

"No; it was you!"

"But, Mr. Davis, I'll swear it was you."

"And I, Mr. Foote, would swear it wasn't."

"You did strike first."

"I did not strike first."

"You did!"

"I didn't!"

"You did, I say!"

"I say I didn't!"

"Well!" exclaimed Mr. Foote, "there shan't be any dispute as to who struck first this time"—and as he spoke he dealt Mr. Davis a stinging blow on the cheek. The astonished friends sprang between the two gentlemen and prevented further hostilities. Pledges were exacted from all present to deny that there had been any "unpleasantness;" but I have the above from good Southern authority, as the commencement of a feud not yet settled.—Washington Chronicle.

"Dead or Alive."

They seem remarkably particular about the payment of rewards for the capture of banditti "dead or alive" in California. Rewards of that sort were offered for the capture of Chevez, one of Vasquez' band of highwaymen. He was pursued from one of the southern counties of California into Arizona, where a few days since he was shot by a party of men who had undertaken the job of capturing Chevez dead or alive. To avoid lawyers' quibbles and delays of all sorts in getting the reward, the captors simply cut off Chevez' head and put it into a bottle, and with that ghastly trophy set out for Sacramento to claim the reward. Arrived there, the authorities refused to pay a dollar of the reward offered until the head was identified as that of the bandit. Accordingly the claimants, carrying it with them, went to San Juan, where Chevez had once lived, and there witnesses were found who made affidavit that the decapitated head was that which had rested on his shoulders. The captors, still bearing that horrid evidence of their right to the reward, reinforced by these affidavits, thereon returned to Sacramento to find that the appropriation making the reward had lapsed, so they couldn't get a dollar for killing their man and cutting off his head. Not in the least discouraged, however, they had the head hermetically sealed up to be kept for identification until the next Legislature shall pass a bill appropriating money for payment of the reward. The story of these reward-claimants traveling about with the head of the man they killed in the hope of capturing the reward for taking him, dead or alive, is a startling commentary on the barbarism of the laws that legalize the offer of such rewards, which are simply rewards for murder; and, as in this case, are taken advantage of only by bloodthirsty mercenaries, themselves evidently richly deserving the halter.

A California Fruit Farm.

In Santa Barbara county, California, there is an immense farm of 2,000 acres, owned by Mr. Elwood Cooper. He has in prospect a small fortune from his nut-bearing and fruit trees. He has 12,500 almond-trees three years old, also 3,500 walnut-trees from one to three years old; these will begin to bear in about five years. Of the olive he has 4,000 trees, and will plant out 1,000 cuttings this season. Of the domestic fruits he has a large orchard. He has a warm, sheltered nook in a canon in the foot-hills, just large enough for 1,000 lemon-trees, which will be planted the coming season. Mr. Cooper will go to Sicily this fall and procure the pure and unadulterated Sicily lemons, the best known to commerce. Of forest trees he has 60,000 of the Eucalyptus globulus and 10,000 Eucalyptus rostrata, or red gums. He has a large number of the Yarrah, a variety of the Eucalypti. This tree, unlike the others named, is of a slow growth, but a much more durable quality of timber. When the orchards of nut-bearing trees come into full bearing, 100 men will be required the year round to cultivate, gather, and prepare the fruit for market.

Wonders of Science.

Some marvels of human ingenuity may be seen at the London Scientific Exhibition. Thus, a machine, loaned by Sir W. Armstrong, the great gunmaker, measures thickness up to the one-thousandth part of an inch, and another, on the same principle, to the one-millionth part. The delicate balance of Mr. Oertling carries 8,000 grains, and turns distinctly with the one-thousandth part of a single grain. Among the historical instruments is the chronometer sent by the Royal United Service Institution, which was twice carried out by Capt. Cooke, and again by Capt. Oaligh in 1787. When the crew of the Bounty mutinied, this veteran timekeeper was carried to Pitcairn's Island by the mutineers, and sold by Adams in 1808 to an American captain who touched there. He sold it in Chili, and in 1840 it was bought at Valparaiso by Sir Thomas Herbert, taken to China by him, and finally brought back to England in the Blenheim.

Capt. Grace, ex-Treasurer of Colleton county, S. C., who has been accused of being largely in default, settled his accounts recently, when it was found that there was a balance in his favor of $1,784.93.

WIDDER GREEN'S LAST WORDS.

"I'm goin' to die!" says the Widder Green,
"I'm goin' to quit this airthly scene;
It ain't no place for me to stay
In such a world as 'tis to-day.
Such works and ways is too much for me,
Nobody can't let nobody be;
The girls is flounced from top to toe,
And that is the bull o' what they know.
The men is mad on bonds an' stocks,
Swearin' an' shootin' an' pickin' locks.
I'm really afraid I'll be hung myself
Ef I ain't laid on my final shelf.
There ain't a creetur but knows to-day
I never a lunatic was any way,
But since all crazy folks go free
I'm dreadful afraid they'll hang up me!
There's another matter that's pesky hard—
I can't go into a neighbor's yard
And say, 'How be you?' or borry a pan
But what the paper'll have it in
'We're pleased to say that Widder Green
Took dinner a Tuesday with Mrs. Keene.'
Or: 'Our worthy friend Miss Green has gone
Down to Barkhamsted to see her son.'
Great Jerusalem! can't I stir
Without a-raisin' some feller's fur?
There ain't no privacy, so to say,
No more than if this was the judgment day.
An' as fur meetin'—I want to swear
Whenever I put my head in there!
Why, even Old Hundred's spoiled and done,
Like every thing else under the sun;
It used to be so solemn and slow,
Praise to the Lord from men below—
Now it goes like a gallopin' steer,
High diddle diddle! there and here.
No respect to the Lord above
No more'n ef He was hand and glove
With all the creturs he ever made
An' all the jigs that was ever played.
Preachin', too—but here I'm dumb;
But I'll tell you what! I'd like it some
Ef good old Parson Nathan Strong
Out o' his grave would come along
An' give us a stirrin' taste o' fire—
Judgment an' justice is my desire.
'Tain't all love and sickish sweet
That makes this world or t'other complete.]
But, law! I'm told! I'd better be dead
When the world's a-turnin' over my head;
Sperits talkin' like 'ternal fools,
Bible kicked out o' deestrict schools,
Crazy creetures a-murderin' round—
Honest folks better be under ground.
So fare-ye-well! this airthly scene
Won't no more be pestered by Widder Green."

"Oh," said one of the guests, who had seen him in the church-yard, "he is paying a visit to some of his old patients."

"Aren't you afraid he'll be run over some day?" "He may be. His brother was run over last year about this time, and the folks made up a purse of $100 for me!" A MARVEL OF TATTOOING.

Remarkable Subject from the Hands of the Skillful Chinese Tartars.

[From the New York Sun.]

Capt. George Costentenus, a descendant of a noble Greek family, from the province of Albania, arrived in New York yesterday in the Servia. From head to foot on every inch of his body, including even his scalp and the soles of his feet, he is a mass of the most artistic and elaborately colored tattooing, in letters, signs, and figures of quadrupeds, birds, fishes, and reptiles. Capt. Costentenus is tall, dark complexioned, of superb physique, and about forty-five years of age. He does not read English, but converses fluently in his own tongue, and in the Italian, Arab, Turkish, and Persian languages, and speaks a little French and German, and a few words of English. The climate here affects him so that he keeps muffled in a coarse suit lined with fur, with a soft round cap pulled down over his forehead, and a thick pair of gloves on his hands. His heavy beard only partially conceals the tattooing on his weather-beaten face.

Constentenus' early history is that of many Albanians. He has always been a soldier of fortune. In 1867 he and eleven others penetrated Chinese Tartary and sided with the rebels. The party were captured, and two or three were killed, and the rest were submitted to an ordeal of tattooing, which only wo survived, Capt. Constentenus and a Spaniard, who has since died. The operation lasted three months, and was performed daily. Six men held him down while a seventh wielded the tattooing apparatus. At the conclusion of the operation he regained his health, and was freed by the Tartars, instead of making his escape, as was reported.

This tattooing was done to warn outside barbarians of the danger of penetrating the Tartars' domains.

Nothing like the Captain's person has ever been seen in civilized countries. By the side of his gorgeously embellished cuticle the tattooing of South Sea Islanders fades into insignificance. The material used was indigo and cinnabar, the former producing a black and the latter a red. At a first glance the Captain's body seems to be covered with a Turkish shawl, but a closer examination shows that the pictures in two colors are produced by unnumbered points. On his forehead are animals and inscriptions, and on the face star-like figures. On the hands are numerous red points, and figures resembling sculptures, as well as long tailed, panther-like shapes. The ears are absolutely the only part of the body free from tattooing, even the scalp being embellished. On the neck, chest, abdomen, back, and extremities, the skin is a mass of symmetrically arranged and admirably executed figures of monkeys, tigers, lions, elephants, peacocks, storks, swans, snakes, crocodiles, lizards, mingled with bows, arrows, leaves, flowers, and fruits. Between the figures are words in Berminian in blue and red letters, and simple points or stars and circles. The original skin is invisible. On the palms of the hands are indescribable figures, and little figures are on the inside of the fingers. On the back sides of both feet to the toes are blue points, and from the toes to the nails are red lines. Altogether there are 888 tattooed pictures on the entire body—on the forehead, 2; neck, 8; chest, 56; back, 37; abdomen, 52; upper extremities, 101; lower extremities, 137—yet the Captain is in perfect health.

The instrument used in tattooing, the Captain says, was divided into three parts. The part holding the fluid was slit like a pen four inches long and an inch and a half wide, coming down brass four inches long, and on top was a third piece, four inches long, of iron, with a knob at the end. The three parts were joined by capsules. The instrument was inserted between the thumb and forefinger of the left hand to guide it, and the right hand made the punctures with extreme rapidity.

The Captain has several scars on his person as evidence of his numerous engagements, and these show plainly through the tattooing. He has seen every country in the world except America. He is going to the Centennial Exhibition.

A Printer's Dream.

A printer sat in his office chair, his boots were patched and his coat threadbare, while his face looked weary and worn with care; while sadly thinking of business debt, old Morpheus slowly round him crept, and before he knew it he soundly slept; and, sleeping, he dreamed that he was dead, from trouble and toil his spirit had fled, and that not even a cow bell tolled, for the peaceful rest of his cow-hide sole. As he wandered among the shades, that smoke and scorch in the lower Hades, he shortly observed an iron door, that creakingly swung on hinges ajar, but the entrance was closed by a red-hot bar, and Satan himself stood peeping out, and watching for travelers thereabout, and with growling voice the echoes woke: "Come in, my dear, it shall cost you nothing and never fear; this is the place where I cook the ones, who never pay their subscription sums, for though in life they may escape, they will find when dead it is too late; I will show the place where I melt them thin, with red-hot chains and scraps of tin, and also where I comb their heads with broken glass and melted lead, and if of refreshments they only think, there's boiling water for them to drink; there's the red-hot grindstone to grind down his nose, and red-hot rings to wear on his toes, and if they mention they don't like fire, I'll sew up their mouths with red-hot wire; and then, dear sir, you should see them squirm while I roll them over and cook to a turn." With these last words the printer awoke, and thought it all a practical joke; but still at times so real did it seem, that he cannot believe it was all a dream; and often he thinks with a chuckle and grin, of the fate of those who save their tin, and never pay the printer.

A NUMBER of gentlemen lately from the East were congregated on a street corner in San Francisco the other day, when they saw a two-horse dray loaded down with what they took to be lead bars, stalled on Montgomery street. Great was their surprise when informed that the lead bars were silver bricks from the Bonanza mines, being taken to Flood & O'brien's bank, and that over a hundred thousand dollars in value was intrusted to the custody of one man, and hauled around the streets like any other merchandise.

MARY K. DALLAS writes: "The moment a girl has a secret from her mother, or has received a letter she dare not let her mother read, or has a friend of whom her mother does not know, she is in danger. The fewer secrets that lie in the hearts of women at any age the better. It is almost a test of purity. In girlhood do nothing that, if discovered by your father, would make you blush."

Specialties in Medicine.

[From the Toledo Blade.]

We publish on our eighth page a lengthy article describing the system of the noted specialist, Dr. R. V. Pierce, of Buffalo, N. Y., in which he sets forth with considerable force and clearness his reasons for devoting his whole time and attention to a single department of medicine—the treatment of lingering chronic diseases. The same article also takes up the subjects of diagnosis, methods of consultation and treatment, etc., and will be found to contain many valuable hints to the invalid. Dr. Pierce is the author of a work which has already attained a large circulation—"The People's Common Sense Medical Adviser"—containing some nine hundred numerously-illustrated pages, and devoted to medicine in all its branches, a work well calculated for the guidance and instruction of the people at large, and which may be had for $1.50 (post-paid) by addressing the author. Dr. Pierce has now been before the general public long enough to enable the formation of a careful estimate of the efficiency of his treatment and his medicines, and the verdict, we are glad to know, has been universally favorable to both.

DR. WILHOFT'S ANTI-PERIODIC OR FEVER AND AGUE TONIC!—Wilhoft's Tonic has established itself as the real infallible Chill cure. It is universally admitted to be the only reliable and harmless Chill medicine now in use. Its efficacy is confirmed by thousands of certificates of the very best people from all parts of the country. It cures malarious diseases of every type, from the shaking agues of the lakes and valleys to the raging fevers of the torrid zone. Try it! It has never been known to fail. G. R. FINLAY & Co., Proprietors, New Orleans.

FOR SALE BY ALL DRUGGISTS.

HABITUAL constipation leads to the following results: Inflammation of the kidneys, sick and nervous headache, biliousness, dyspepsia, indigestion, piles, loss of appetite and strength; all of which may be avoided by being regular in your habits, and taking, say one of Parsons' Purgative Pills nightly for four or six weeks.

CHAPPED hands, face, pimples, ringworm, saltrheum, and other cutaneous affections cured, and rough skin made soft and smooth, by using Juniper Tar Soap. Be careful to get only that made by Caswell, Hazard & Co., New York, as there are many imitations made with common tar, all of which are worthless.

JOHNSON'S ANODYNE LINIMENT may be used to advantage where any liniment is desirable. In cases of severe cramps and pains in the stomach, it is undoubtedly the best article that can be used internally.

SHALLENBERGER'S Ague Pills do not sicken the stomach or act on the bowels. One dose stops the chills, and vigorous health follows. Nothing in them to injure an infant.

FOR general debility the good effects of the Vegetine are realized immediately after commencing to take it.

Dr. Schenck's Pulmonic Syrup, Sea Weed Tonic and Mandrake Pills.—These medicines have undoubtedly performed more cures of Consumption than any other remedy known to the American public. They are compounded of vegetable ingredients, and contain nothing which can be injurious to the human constitution. Other remedies advertised as cures for Consumption probably contain opium, which is a somewhat dangerous drug in all cases, and if taken freely by consumptive patients, it must do great injury; for its tendency is to confine the morbid matter in the system, which, of course, must make a cure impossible. Schenck's Pulmonic Syrup is warranted not to contain a particle of opium; it is composed of powerful but harmless herbs, which act on the lungs, liver, stomach and blood, and thus correct all morbid secretions, and expel all the diseased matter from the body. These are the only means by which Consumption can be cured, and as Schenck's Pulmonic Syrup, Sea Weed Tonic and Mandrake Pills are the only medicines which operate in this way, it is obvious they are the only genuine cure for Pulmonary Consumption. Each bottle of this invaluable medicine is accompanied by full directions. Dr. Schenck is professionally at his principal office, corner Sixth and Arch Streets, Philadelphia, every Monday, where all letters for advice must be addressed.

The Wonders of Modern Chemistry.
Sarsaparillian and Its Associates.

Changes as Seen and Felt as They Daily Occur after Using a Few Doses of

DR. RADWAY'S
Sarsaparillian Resolvent,
THE GREAT BLOOD PURIFIER.

1. Good spirits, disap[illegible] melancholy; increase [illegible] and muscles, etc.

2. Strength increases, appetite [illegible] food, no more sour eructations [illegible] gestion, calm and undisturbed [illegible] and vigorous.

3. Disappearance of spots, [illegible] pimples; the skin looks clear and healthy, the urine changed from its turbid and cloudy appearance to a clear sherry or amber color; water passes freely from the bladder through the urethra without pain or scalding, little or no sediment; no pain or weakness.

4. Marked diminution of quantity and frequency of involuntary weakening discharges (if afflicted that way), with certainty of permanent cure. Increased strength exhibited in the secreting glands, and functional harmony restored to [illegible].

5. Yellow tinge on the [illegible] eyes, and the swarthy, sallow appearance of the skin changed to a clear, lively [illegible].

6. Those suffering from weak or ulcerated lungs or tubercles will realize great benefit in expectorating freely the tough phlegm or mucous from the lungs, air cells, bronchi or windpipe, throat or head; diminishing of the frequency of cough; general increase of strength throughout the system; stoppage of night sweats and pains and feeling of weakness around the ankles, legs, shoulders, etc.; cessation of cold and chills, sense of suffocation; hard breathing and paroxysms of cough on lying down or arising in the morning. All these distressing symptoms gradually and surely disappear.

7. As day after day the SARSAPARILLIAN is taken, new signs of returning health will appear; as the blood improves in strength and purity, disease will diminish, and all foreign and impure deposits, nodes, tumors, cancers, hard lumps, etc., be resolved away and the unsound made sound and healthy; ulcers, fever sores, syphilitic sores, chronic skin diseases gradually disappear.

8. In cases where the system has been salivated, and Mercury, Quicksilver, Corrosive Sublimate (the principal constituent in the advertised Sarsaparillas, associated in some cases with Hyd. of Potassa) have accumulated and become deposited in the bones, joints, etc., causing caries of the bones, rickets, spinal curvatures, contortions, white swellings, varicose veins, etc., the SARSAPARILLIAN will resolve away these deposits and exterminate the virus of the disease from the system.

9. If those who are taking these medicines for the cure of Chronic, Scrofulous or Syphilitic diseases, however slow may be the cure "feel better," and find their general health improving, their flesh and weight increasing or even keeping its own, it is a sure sign that the cure is progressing. In these diseases the patient either gets better or worse—the virus of the disease is not inactive; if not arrested and driven from the blood, it will spread and continue to undermine the constitution. As soon as the SARSAPARILLIAN makes the patient "feel better," every hour you will grow better and increase in health, strength and flesh.

The great power of this remedy is in diseases that threaten death—as in Consumption of the Lungs and Tuberculous Phthisis, Scrofula, Syphiloid Diseases, Wasting, Degeneration, and Ulceration of the Kidneys, Diabetes, Stoppage of Water (instantaneous relief afforded where catheters have to be used, thus doing away with the painful operation of using these instruments), dissolving stone in the bladder, and in all cases of Inflammation of the Bladder and Kidneys, in Chronic cases of Leucorrhea and Uterine diseases.

In tumors, nodes, hard lumps and syphilitic ulcers; in dropsy and venereal sore throat, ulcers, and in tubercles of the lungs; in gout, dyspepsia, rheumatism, rickets, in mercurial deposits—it is in these terrible forms of disease, where the human body has become a complete wreck, and where every hour of existence is torture wherein this great remedy challenges the astonishment and admiration of the sick. It is in such cases, when all the pleasures of existence appear cut off from the unfortunate, and by its wonderful, almost supernatural agency, it restores the hopeless to a new life and new existence where this great remedy stands alone in its might and power.

In the ordinary skin diseases that every one is more or less troubled with, a few doses will in most cases, and a few bottles in the more aggravated forms, work a permanent cure.

Those afflicted with chronic diseases should purchase a package containing one dozen bottles. Price $10 per dozen, or $5 per half dozen bottles, or $1 per bottle. Sold by druggists.

"THE VIBRATOR"
1000 SOLD LAST SEASON
WITHOUT ONE FAILURE OR REJECTION
This is the famous Threshing machine that has "swept the field" and created such a revolution in the trade, by its MATCHLESS GRAIN-SAVING AND TIME-SAVING principles.

THE NICHOLS, SHEPARD & CO.
"VIBRATOR"

THE ENORMOUS WASTAGE of grain, so inevitable with other styles of Threshers, can be SAVED by this Improved Machine, sufficient, on every job, to more than pay all expenses of threshing.

FLAX, TIMOTHY, MILLET, HUNGARIAN and like seeds are threshed, separated, cleaned and saved as easily and perfectly as Wheat, Oats, Rye or Barley.

AN EXTRA PRICE is usually paid for grain and seeds cleaned by this machine, for extra cleanliness.

IN THE WET GRAIN of 1875, these were substantially the ONLY MACHINES that could run with profit or economy, doing fast, thorough and perfect work, when others utterly failed.

ALL GRAIN, TIME and MONEY wasting complications, such as "Endless Aprons," "Raddles," "Beaters," "Pickers," etc., are entirely dispensed with; less than one-half the usual Gears, Belts, Boxes, and Journals; easier managed; more durable; light running; no costly repairs; no dust; no "litterings" to clean up; not troubled by adverse winds, rain or storms.

FARMERS and GRAIN RAISERS who are posted in the large saving made by it will not employ inferior and wasteful machines, but will insist on this improved Thresher doing their work.

FOUR SIZES made for 6, 8, 10 and 12 Horse Powers. Also a specialty of SEPARATORS, designed and made EXPRESSLY FOR STEAM POWER.

TWO STYLES OF HORSE POWERS, viz.: our improved "Triple Gear," and our "Spur Speed" (Woodbury Style), both "Mounted" on four wheels.

IF INTERESTED in Threshing or Grain Raising, apply to our nearest Dealer, or write to us for Illustrated Circular (sent free), giving full particulars of Sizes, Styles, Prices, Terms, etc.

Dr. J. A. SHERMAN respectfully notifies the afflicted to beware of traveling impostors who are going about the country selling imitation appliances and poisonous mixture as curative compound, fraudulently pretending to furnish his method, and thus endangering the lives and causing irreparable injury to the unfortunate. He has no agents, nor has he ever instructed any one in his business. Dr. Sherman is now in Chicago, where those interested may consult him in person, and reap the benefit of his experience and remedies. For his address see Chicago papers. Principal office, 1 Ann Street, New York. Books, with likenesses of cases before and after cure, mailed on receipt of 10 cents.

The Centennial Exhibition is to remain open just six months. The number of visitors hoped for and the number necessary to render it a complete success is 10,000,000. One month of the [illegible] just closed and the attendance in that time has been just 1,000,000. Considering the incompleteness of the show, and the great number of people who are deferring their visits till later in the season, we regard the results of the first month as quite satisfactory, and look on them as auguring well for the full ten millions during the entire season.

The elephant in Montgomery Queen's Circus San Francisco discovered a pocket in the back part of a girl's dress as she was leaning against the rope and looking the other way. He reached in with his trunk and brought out and apple which he ate. Another trial yielded a package of gum drops and a third some peanuts. Again he essayed and got hold of a bottel of ammonia the contents of which went the way of the apple the candy and the peanuts. Instantly the resentful elephant obliterated the girl's bustle filling the air with bits of cloth, newspaper and whalebone They covered her with a shawl end took her home.

There is one thing on which a husband and wife never have and never can agree and that is on what constitutes a well-beaten carpet. When the article is clean it's a man's impression that it should be removed, and he be allowed to wash up and quietly retire. But a woman's appetite for carpet-beating is never appeased while a man has a whole muscle in his body. And if he waited until she volutarily gave the signal to stop he might beat away until he dropped down dead. It is directly owing to his superior strenght of mind that the civilized world is not a widow this day. —Danbury News.

HAPPINESS.—The idea has been transmitted from generation to generation, that happiness is one large and beautiful precious stone, a single gem so rare that all search after it is in vain all effort for it hopeless. It is not so. Happiness is a Mosaic Composed of many smaller stones. Each taken apart and viewed singly may be of little value but when all are grouped together and judiciously combined and set the for in a pleasing and graceful whole—a costly jewel. Trample not under foot then the little pleasures which a gracious providence scatters in the daily path and which in eager search after some great and exciting joy we are so apt to overlook. Why should we always keep our eyes fixed on the bright distant horizon while there are so many lovely roses in the garden in which we are permitted to walk? The very ardor of our chase after happiness may be the reason that she so often eludes our grasp. We pantingly strain after her when she has been graciously brought night unto us.

Opinions of the Press on the Nominations.

New York Journal of Commerce.

The nomination of Governor Hayes for the presidency is a virtual avowal that the Republican party prefers not to challenge the judgment of the country on any of its members who has been hitherto known in connection with national affairs.

New York World.

The nomination of Hayes is a collapse and not a compromise. * * * The wrangling and feversmitten republicans have given us our platform, by abandoning every pretense of concern for the daily increasing sufferings of a tax-ridden and misgoverned people.

New York Sun.

But it selected a man unknown to statesmanship, unknown to reform, and unknown in party traditions; it took him as the only hope of averting the triumph of the great corruptionist with whom the party would have been whirled to the run which awaits it in any event.

New York Tribune.

A strong candidate may strengthen some of the weak spots of a platform which is barely able to stand alone; but if a weak candidate is put upon a weak platform both will fall together, and the Republican party with them.

New York Express.

On the whole we are of opinion that this new platform is as much of a humbug as were all the old ones of the same party. Four years ago one of the main planks in their declaration of principles was that of civil service reform everybody knows how they have lived up to it.

New York Daily Bulletin.

There are two noteworthy features in the Cincinnati platform 1, The plank relating to currency makes no mention of the resumption act, but speaks of the pledge of 1869 and declares that it must be kept by a "continuous and steady progress to specie payments;" which we take to be something very different from what would have to be done in resuming under the act of 1875. 2, The platform has not one single word on the question of reduction of taxation and economy in public expenditures; which is a most discouraging fact to every class of the community.

Brooklyn Eagle.

[Seaking of the platform.] The party that thus reaffirms opposition to the parceling out of the public domain to corporations has by single acts of its representatives given away territories greater in extent than the state of New York and if it is now repentant it must be because even the monopolists are gorged with favors alike profit able to those who granted them and to those who received them.

Philadelphia Times.

Expediency has come again with mediocrity as its handmaid to extricate the once proud Republican party of the nation and Rutherford B. Hayes is its candidate for the most important and responsible trust of the civilized world. The party that of all others was the offspring of patriotic conviction that commanded the first intellects of the country as its champions and that has achievements to point to in man's noblest struggles for man which are as richest jewels in the diadem of enlightened liberty has just groped and of crawled through eigh years of stubborn incompetency and now makes the confession that its highest councils must take refuge in littleness again to save it from itself. * * * The Cincinnati convention was like the councils of the lieutenants of the Macedonian chieftain when he surrendered his crown to debauchery and left them to struggle for the succession.

Philadelphia Press.

Had Blaine been nomiuated Pennsyvania would have rung with grateful responses. As it is even the respected name of Governor Hayes failed at first to awaken even the slightest enthusiasm and while our people last night retired to their beds satisfied with him they were thoroughly convinced that they had been deprived for their favorite by the lowest arts of contriving politicians.

Philadelphia North American.

Hayes won because of his comparative obscurity.

Harrisburg Daily Patriot.

There are other requisites for the presidency besides success in contests like those in which the Cincinnati candidtes is conspicuously wanting. In ability and experience he is far below the measure of the present occupant of the presidential chair. But Hayes will serve as well as another as the candidate of a rapidly-dissolving political organization that has outlived its usefulness and its honor.

The Post and Mail says: "While the West was disappointed in the failure to nominate Mr. Blaine, it greatly perfers Mr. Hayes to and of the other candidates and will give him the same earnest, cordial and united support it would have given the favorite.

The Inter-Ocean, speaking of Gov. Hayes, say no man could bring out the full strength of the party more than he will. The local press agree that the nomination of Mr. Wheeler for the second place on the ticket was the best and strongest that could be made. The first announcement of the nominations was not received with the most enthusiasm, but there is a feeling amongst thinking men that the nominations will prove wise and that the support they will receive here will be of the strongest kind.

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

THE EAST.

THE Albany and Schenectady railroad depot, at Hudson, N. Y., together with 100 loaded cars and several canal boats, was burned last week. Loss about $400,000....A New York dispatch says the latest defalcation in the Methodist Book Concern affords some astonishing revelations. Henry Schroder, the alleged defaulting clerk, is in Ludlow street jail, being unable to get bail. It is thought that the deficit will not amount to over $25,000, although there is a possibility of its being double that sum.

THE WEST.

THE terrible story of a Sioux raid upon ranches on the Platte river, in Colorado, is confirmed. The savages appear to have been a marauding party in quest of cattle to supply the warriors assembled to fight Crook. Fifteen herders were killed and their cattle driven off.

CHICAGO elevators, as per official returns, contain 1,299,371 bushels of wheat; 1,428,138 bushels of corn; 316,057 bushels of oats; 53,223 bushels of rye; and 319,688 bushels of barley, making a grand total of 3,415,477 bushels, against 5,730,263 bushels at this period last year....A San Francisco dispatch announces the destruction by fire of the Bay City Sugar Refinery. Total loss, $350,000.

A NEW pest, in the shape of a small black fly, has made its appearance in Southern Minnesota, and is giving the farmers much uneasiness. It has gone to work vigorously on the wheat, attacking the roots and base of the stalk. When first attacked the wheat turns yellow, and soon withers up and dies. The recent rains have, to some extent, interfered with the operations of the insect; but it is feared this relief will not prove permanent.

THE new directory of Chicago for 1876 shows a total of 159,389 names, an increase of 7,192 over 1875, and a gain in population of 25,172, according to the usual rate of computation. This gives a population of 540,000, in round numbers....William Aden, the brute who murdered his wife, his step-daughter, and a Mrs. Benton, at Cleveland, Ohio, was hung in that city last week....Seven prisoners broke out of the penitentiary at Salt Lake, Utah, last week, after capturing the guard, securing all their guns, pistols, and ammunition, along with three horses, and escaped. Harrison Carter, acting as cook in the penitentiary, was fatally shot.

THE SOUTH.

CHRISTIAN KLOTZ, aged seventeen, last week killed Almira Street, also seventeen, daughter of his employer, residing near Clermont Mills, Md. Confessing his crime, he was taken to a neighboring tree and hauled up, but, being cut down, asked for a gun to shoot himself. It was suggested that he might as well hang himself, when he immediately climbed the tree, placed a rope around his neck, bade the company good-bye, and dropped.

WASHINGTON.

SECRETARY BRISTOW retired from the Treasury Department on the 20th inst. Being questioned by a newspaper correspondent touching the reasons governing this step, the late Secretary replied that it did not now concern the public, as he was no longer a public man. He added that if any one was heard inquiring as to his reasons they might be informed that it was because he wanted to. He had nothing more to give. He said the newspapers would not tell the truth about it anyway. Being informed that should he give a statement of facts in relation thereto it would be published just as given, he said: "Not so. It would be perverted." He added again: "I resign because I want to, because my business demands it, and I ought to. I would have resigned long since, but for the past five months I could not do so without a political significance being attached to it that it did not warrant."

A WASHINGTON dispatch states that the Grand Jury have indicted Richard Harrington and Arthur B. Williams for bribery. The first is charged with having, on the 12th of October, 1873, while an Assistant United States Attorney, received $15,000 to have his decision and action influenced in the matter of a motion for a new trial by Hope and Slatter, who were convicted of murder. Williams is charged with giving the money to Harrison as a bribe.

EVIDENCE has been taken before the House Judiciary Committee in the matter of the cable dispatch from Josiah Caldwell, to the effect that the dispatch was sent at the dictation of Mr. Blaine's friends, having been first prepared in this country, telegraphed to London, and again telegraphed back to Mr. Blaine. Col. Tom Scott and one A. P. Robinson, a railroad man, are said to be the parties who prepared and sent the dispatch. They will be called upon by the committee to explain their conduct. It is but just to Mr. Blaine to state, in this connection, that he has received a letter by mail from Caldwell, in which the writer states that he never, directly or indirectly, gave Mr. B. any Fort Smith and Little Rock railroad bonds, and declaring his readiness to forward a sworn statement to this effect, if desired by the committee.

BLUFORD WILSON, Solicitor of the Treasury Department, has tendered his resignation.... The correspondence between Mr. Bristow and the President, on the occasion of the former's resigning the Treasury portfolio, is quite brief, and contains the usual formal expressions in communications of this character. Mr. Bristow thanks the President for the honor of the appointment he had conferred upon him, and announces his desire to retire from official life and give attention to his private affairs. The President accepts the resignation, with expressions of a hope that in his retirement from public office the Secretary will find that rest which he could not have in his present position, and desiring that the personal relations between them shall remain in their present pleasant attitude.

THE action of the Senate in the impeachment case of Gen. Belknap indicates pretty clearly that the adjournment of Congress is yet far in the future, the contingency being that the session, with a short recess, may last all summer. The Senate has decided to go on with the trial on the 6th of July, and that it would be illegal to proceed during the recess of Congress. In other words, it decides that it cannot proceed except in the presence of the House. The proposition to postpone the trial until next fall was voted down by a very large majority; and, as the House cannot adjourn without the consent of the Senate, both branches of Congress will be held at the National Capital until the tedious trial is brought to an end.

TREASURER NEW has written a letter to the President asking to be relieved from official duties on the 1st of July....The President has sent the following nominations to the Senate: James A. Williamson, Iowa, Commissioner of the General Land Office; W. L. Wilson, of Minnesota, Surveyor General of Minnesota.

THE manager of the Western Union Telegraph Company at Philadelphia was before the Judiciary Committee the other day, and produced, under protest, the original dispatch sent to Caldwell, in London, telling him to telegraph to the committee an exculpation of Mr. Blaine. The dispatch was without a signature, and the gentleman who brought it to the office and paid the charges, $37.72, in reply to the request of one of the clerks to leave his address, said it was not necessary, and smilingly left the name of "John Smith." Col. Tom Scott was examined, and denied the authorship of the telegram.

THE House of Representatives has passed bills for two much-needed improvements in Washington—a new pavement for Pennsylvania avenue, and a new government for the district....Hon. Lot M. Morrill, of Maine, has been appointed by the President Secretary of the Treasury, vice Bristow, resigned.

An order has been issued to the Secretary of War relieving Gen. Schofield from the command of the Military Division of the Pacific, and assigning him to the command of the West Point Military Academy, relieving Col. Ruger. Gen. McDowell will take command of the Military Division of the Pacific. The Division of the South will be discontinued. The Department of the South will be under the command of Col. Ruger.

GENERAL.

ST. JOHNS, Canada, was visited last week by a most disastrous conflagration. A territory six hundred feet wide and a mile in length, embracing the entire business portion of the town, was burned. Seven hotels, nine churches, the Custom-House, Court-House, Postoffice, United States Consulate, two banks, docks, vessels in the river, a portion of the bridge over the Richelieu River, the St. Johns woolen mills, a stone chinaware room, and 250 stores and houses are reduced to ashes. The loss is estimated at $1,500,000.

SURGEON-GENERAL Barnes has thoroughly examined Mr. Blaine's case, and finds him suffering from extreme nervous exhaustion and from severe malarial poisoning. These features of his case are complicated somewhat with threatened organic troubles, and Gen. Barnes prescribes absolute rest for several weeks as the indispensable condition of averting very serious consequences, and he orders that rest be taken in some invigorating air on the sea-shore or mountains....Speaker Kerr has gone to the Rockbridge Alum Springs, Va.

POLITICAL.

THE committee appointed by the Cincinnati Convention to notify Gov. Hayes of his nomination for President visited Columbus the day after the adjournment of the convention, and proceeded to the Executive Chamber, where they were received by Gov. Hayes. Edward McPherson, of Pennsylvania, in a brief speech, formally notified Gov. Hayes of his nomination. The latter replied as follows: "SIR—I have only to say, in response to your information, that I accept the nomination. Perhaps, at the present time, it would be improper for me to say more than this, although even now I should be glad to give some expression to the profound sense of gratitude I feel for the confidence reposed in me by yourselves and those for whom you act. At a future time I shall take occasion to present my acceptance in writing, with my views on the platform." The delegates were then personally introduced to their nominee, and spent considerable time with him, informally conversing on various subjects.

THE New Hampshire Legislature has elected E. H. Rollins (Rep.) United States Senator in the place of Mr. Cragin.

THE Republicans of Maine, at the State Convention last week, nominated Gov. Connor for re-election to the gubernatorial chair, and adopted a resolution strongly indorsing Mr. Blaine, and recommending him as the successor of Mr. Morrill in the United States Senate. ....The President has nominated William J. Hoppin, of New York, to be Secretary of Legation at London; James Day, of New Jersey, Second Secretary; George P. Fisher, United States Attorney for Delaware.

FOREIGN.

WHILE the Turkish ministers were in council at Constantinople, a few evenings ago, a dismissed officer suddenly appeared among them, armed with a revolver, and murdered the Ministers of War and Foreign Affairs, and seriously wounded another member of the Cabinet. It seems most likely that this wholesale butchery must have been the result of a reactionary plot, designed to overwhelm the authors of the recent revolution. The murderer was captured, however, and his confederates, if he had any, made no attempt either to rescue him or to take advantage of his exploit....A carpet manufactory was burned at Ayr, England, last week, and twenty-four female operatives perished in the flames.

BAIRD, the overseer of the woolen works at Ayr, England, where the twenty-four women lost their lives, and who was himself burned to death, locked the door of the room in which the women were, thinking that the alarm of fire was false. A girl who jumped from a window states that she first endeavored to escape by the door, but a man pushed her back....A Constantinople dispatch states that Hassan, the assassin of the Turkish officials, was hanged three days after the perpetration of the bloody deed....A London Times dispatch from Calcutta reports an alarming outbreak of cholera in Gulwada, a village on the Bombay and Baroda railway. Of 200 inhabitants, 100 died in three days.

TWO DISASTROUS conflagrations are reported in Russia—one in Moscow, where fifty houses were destroyed, and the other in Caucasus, where three-quarters of the city was consumed. ....Paris dispatches received in London report the Czar as expressing a confident hope that he will spend more tranquil days hereafter than those he has just passed at Ems. The remark is interpreted to mean that all projects for active intervention in Turkish affairs are abandoned for the present....Brent, the Louisville forger, has been released by the British authorities.

THE London papers sharply criticise the policy of the British Government in releasing the Louisville forger, Brent....A Cairo dispatch says that accounts of alleged defeats of the Egyptians by the Abyssinians are officially contradicted. The war terminated on the 9th of March last, and no fighting has occurred since.

THE great plague continues its ravages in Asiatic Turkey. During the month of May there were 1,122 death from this cause in the city of Bagdad. There are also reports of cholera in that region....The mother of the late Sultan of Turkey is accused in some quarters of being at the bottom of the late assassination of the Government officials in that country. She is said to have instigated Hassan, the assassin, to perform the bloody deeds, and to have aided him by spying out the movements of the War Minister, whose life was plotted against and destroyed.

THE news from Turkey again causes fears that war will break out between Servia and Turkey. Southern Hungary is furnishing soldiers for the Servian army....The English press and Parliament are sorely worried about the extradition treaty.

FORTY-FOURTH CONGRESS.

FRIDAY, June 16.—Senate.—Consideration of the articles of impeachment was resumed. Black, of counsel for the accused, read a long paper, declining to plead further on the ground that the respondent had already been substantially acquitted, as the order of the Senate asserting its jurisdiction was not passed by a two-thirds vote. Counsel for the defense asked that the paper be filed, but objection was made by Edmunds, and also by the managers. Pending the discussion, it was discovered that a quorum was not present, and the Senate adjourned.

House.—The House went into committee of the whole on the Army Appropriation bill, with Mr. Blackburn in the chair. Various amendments to the bill were offered and rejected. No quorum being present, the House adjourned.

SATURDAY, June 17.—Senate.—A message was received from the President calling attention to the near approach of the new fiscal year, and the failure of Congress, so far, to make provisions for the ordinary expenses of the Government; also, to the laws forbidding the expenditure of unexpended balances, and requiring that they be covered into the treasury at the end of the next fiscal year. He further stated that if the appropriation bills are not matured before the beginning of the new fiscal year, the Government will be greatly embarrassed for want of funds, and submits a joint resolution to extend the appropriations for the consular, diplomatic and postal services, the support of the army and navy, etc., for the present fiscal year to the next. Ordered printed, and to lie on the table....The protest of leading men of the Osage Indian nation against the establishment of a Territorial Government for the Indian country was ordered printed and referred. ....Consideration of the articles of impeachment against Belknap was resumed. Black, of counsel for the accused, stated that there were reasons why the trial should not go on on the 6th of July, as ordered. He therefore moved that it be postponed until November next, and appealed to the managers not to oppose the motion. He stated that the managers understood his reasons for not going on with the trial, and he, therefore, hoped they would agree to the postponement. Lord, on behalf of the managers, asked leave to consult with the House of Representatives, which was granted; and the Senate, as a Court of Impeachment, adjourned.

House.—The bill to confirm to Chicago the title to the land in that city known as the Fort Dearborn addition, fronting on the lake shore, was passed.... The Speaker laid before the House a message from the President, explaining the necessity of having the various appropriation bills passed before July 1. (An abstract of the message is given in the Senate proceedings above). Randall, Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, remarked that the message was unusual, and in his opinion altogether unnecessary. Still it should have respectful reference and consideration. On his motion it was referred to the Committee on Appropriations....Lord, in behalf of the managers of the Belknap impeachment trial, called attention to the application of defendant's counsel for a postponement of the trial. The matter was debated, but without arriving at a decision the House went into committee of the whole on the Army Appropriation bill, and shortly after adjourned.

MONDAY, June 19.—Senate.—The Senate insisted upon its amendments to the Postoffice Appropriation bill, and agreed to the conference asked for by the House of Representatives. West, Hamlin and Davis were appointed members of the committee on the part of the Senate.... After a protracted secret session, the Senate refused to grant the motion for a postponement of the impeachment trial until November, but at the same time consented to take up a new branch of the subject, being a plea by defendant's counsel that, inasmuch as the vote by which the Senate assumed jurisdiction over the case was less than two-thirds, jurisdiction has not been lawfully assumed, and the Senate has no power to proceed with the trial. Arguments will be heard on this question on the 6th of July. The Senate having been notified that the defense will summon nearly 200 witnesses, appointed a committee to single out from this number such as are material and important in the case....The Senate, sitting as a court of impeachment, then adjourned until July 6.

House.—Randall offered a resolution appointing Cox Speaker pro tem. in the absence of the Speaker, which resolution was adopted....The Army Appropriation bill was passed....Holman, Blount, and Waldron were appointed a conference committee on the Postoffice Appropriation bill.

So ordered. ....The Senate devoted nearly all the afternoon and the evening session to the consideration of the Indian Appropriation bill.

House.—The Committee on the Freedmen's Bank reported resolutions recommending the indictment of Gen. O. O. Howard, Henry D. Cooke and other managers of the institution....The bill to equalize the bounties of soldiers was passed. Under its provisions all enlisted men, soldiers, sailors, and marines, are to be allowed $8.33⅓ per month for the period of service between the 12th of April, 1861, and the 9th of May, 1865, deducting all bounties previously paid under United States or State laws. The bill is not to apply to substitutes, or men who were discharged on their own application for other cause than disability incurred in the service, unless such discharge was obtained with a view to re-enlistment or to accept promotion, or to persons discharged on the ground of minority....The bill relating to land patents was passed. It provides that all patents for lands which have been or may be issued shall in all actions to recover the title or possession of land have the same effect as if issued to the party entitled thereto at the time such party was or may be authorized to make any proof of a right to such patent....A bill in relation to judgment liens was passed....Bills were also passed to prevent the sale and use of adulterated and explosive illuminating oils, and authorizing the construction of a pontoon bridge across the Mississippi river, from some point in Buffalo county, Wis., to some point in Winona county, Minn....Randall, Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, reported the Sundry Civil Appropriation bill (the last general appropriation bill). Ordered printed. The bill appropriates $14,587,804, against $26,644,350 in the corresponding bill last year, a reduction of $12,076,570....Riddle introduced a bill to repeal the ten per cent. tax on notes of State banks.

WEDNESDAY, June 21.—Senate.—Allison, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back the House bill to transfer the office of Commissioner of Indian Affairs from the Interior to the War Department, and recommended that it be postponed until the first Thursday after the first Monday in December next. Ingalls asked that it be laid on the table for the present. So ordered....The Indian Appropriation bill was passed by the Senate, after striking out the clause transferring the Indian Bureau to the War Department. ..Morton offered a resolution instructing the Committee on Privileges and Elections to inquire what laws there are to protect the inviolability of private dispatches, and what legislation is necessary to protect the same from seizure, by unauthorized and irresponsible persons, to report by bill or otherwise....The Senate, in Executive session, confirmed the nomination of Lot M. Morrill as Secretary of the Treasury....The House joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue $10,000,000 in silver coin in exchange for legal-tenders, was passed. An amendment was added providing that the trade-dollar be not hereafter a legal tender.

House.—The House devoted the entire day to the consideration of the Sundry Civil Appropriation bill.

THURSDAY, June 22.—Senate.—The Naval Appropriation bill was passed. The increase made by the Senate over the House bill is $3,685,600, a decrease from the bill of last year of $896,000. An amendment was adopted intended to prohibit the employment of large forces of laborers in the navy yards for political purposes, by forbidding any increase of the working force just before Presidential or Congressional elections except when the Secretary shall publicly make certificate that the needs of the service demand such increase.

House.—The House devoted the entire day, and a long night session, to the Sundry Civil Appropriation bill. An amendment was adopted, repealing the law providing for the registration of voters in large cities in national elections.

EXTRADITION.

The President Officially Announces the Abrogation of the Extradition Treaty with Great Britain.

President Grant last week sent to Congress a message respecting the extradition treaty with Great Britain. After stating at length the provisions of the treaty, and criticising the action taken by the British Government in the Winslow and Brent cases, the President says:

It is with extreme regret that I am now called upon to announce to you that Her Majesty's Government has finally released both of these fugitives, Winslow and Brent, and set them at liberty, thus omitting to comply with the provisions and requirements of the treaty under which extradition of fugitive criminals is made between the two Governments. The position thus taken by the British Government, if adhered to, cannot but be regarded as the abrogation and annulment of the article of the treaty on extradition. Under these circumstances, it will not, in my judgment, comport with the dignity or self-respect of this Government to make demands upon that Government for the surrender of fugitive criminals, nor to entertain any requisition of that character from that Government under the treaty. It will be a cause of deep regret if a treaty which has been thus beneficial in its practical operations, which has worked so well and so efficiently, and which, notwithstanding the exciting and, at the same time, violent and political disturbances of which both countries have been the scene during its existence, has given rise to no complaints on the part of either Government against either its spirit or its provisions, should be abruptly terminated. It has tended to the protection of society, and to the general interests of both countries. Its violation or annulment would be a retrograde step in international intercourse. I have been anxious, and have made efforts to enlarge its scope, and to make a new treaty which would be a still more efficient agent for the punishment and prevention of crime; at the same time I have felt it my duty to decline to entertain a proposition made by Great Britain, pending its refusal to execute the existing treaty, to amend it by practically conceding by treaty the identical conditions which that Government demands under its act of Parliament.

In addition to the impossibility of the United States entering upon negotiations under the menace of an intended violation or a refusal to execute the terms of an existing treaty, I deemed it inadvisable to treat of only the one amendment proposed by Great Britain, while the United States desired an enlargement of the list of crimes for which extradition may be asked, and other improvements which experience has shown might be embodied in a new treaty.

It is for the wisdom of Congress to determine whether the article of the treaty relating to extradition is to be any longer regarded as obligatory on the Government of the United States, or as forming part of the supreme law of the land. Should the attitude of the British Government remain unchanged, I shall not, without the expression of the wish of Congress that I should do so, take any action, either in making or granting requisitions for the surrender of fugitive criminals, under the treaty of 1842. Respectfully submitted.

(Signed) U. S. GRANT.

CENTENNIAL NOTES.

[By Our Own Correspondent.]

The buildings and grounds being in a near state of completion, it is proper that the epistolary melange or pot-pourri style, should conform to the advance of the exhibition from chaos to system. The space within the compass of a letter being rather circumscribed, and abhorring a pent-up Utica in a corresponding sense, I will attempt to embody arrangement, while the rhapsody will not be lost, in the prosaical, believing that the general public accepts the trite saying, that "variety is the spice of life." First, let the reader remember, and retain these letters for reference, that the good genius of the exhibition is order. This begins with classification. There are seven departments, fifty-two groups, and seven hundred and thirty-nine classes. First department only is given in this letter. Mining and metallurgy classing from 100 to 109, composed of minerals, ores, stones, mining products, metallurgical products, mining engineering. One hundred and ten to one hundred and nineteen, metallurgical products; one hundred and twenty-four to one hundred and twenty-nine, mining engineering.

While there are few comments made upon this important department of the exhibition, it is, nevertheless, one of the most powerful auxiliaries in aiding the general management. To realize the value of this aid, imagine a city with a population of 50,000 souls (the number in round figures), of attaches, visitors, exhibitors, in attendance. Taking the average, these, in a majority of cases, are strangers. Yet, with all this daily influx, there has been no disturbance, excepting, incidentally, less than a half dozen. This is extraordinary, and deserves the consideration of the municipal heads of our country. Col. H. de B. Clay, the commander of the force, has a happy faculty beyond all ordinary commanders (which I cheerfully concede him in this connection), or else our people are the most tractable people in the world. I will say Col. Clay enforces strict discipline, and his surveillance of the department of protection is simply in keeping with the general splendid management of the exhibition. No visitor need fear annoyance, much less ill or rough usage at the hands of the rude or violent. Roughs are not in order on the Centennial grounds. Thanks to nerve and discipline, rogues are spotted in ninety-nine times in a hundred, and one's property, person and comfort are really safer than in any city containing the same number of people. These facts should be heralded all over the world as another proof of man's capacity for self-government and his subordination to law and order, under the so-called, by despotism, anarchial freedom.

OLIVE WOOD AND THE HOLY LAND.

A very interesting feature of the speculative department of the exhibition is a kind of a Kiosk, where several gentlemen of whom I have written are polishing up souvenirs in olive wood for the curious, purchasing society who constantly throng the counters of these devotees of the false prophet, who, like Mahomet, if the American Mountain won't come to the Moslems, why Mustapha will come to the American Mountain. The articles are curious, and we hope are made of wood cut from the Mount of Olives, for the sake of relic hunters. As for your correspondent he can't forget the little deception in this line, as once on purchasing walking canes, supposed to have been cut from the field of Waterloo, as mementoes of a visit to that historic field, he was mortified to know they were the growth of the forest of Soigries. However, faith makes it all right, and I fully endorse the olive wood.

THE TURKS.

The Turks may be effete, but they have "speculation in their eyes." Their ideas of industrial expositions take the shape of utility, and each step taken by the followers of Mahomet are toward the Dutchman's "one per cent." With Turkey, as with all warm climates, beauty, elegance and the superfluous go hand in hand, while in colder climates strength, dignity and necessity show work of more somber hue, but more desirable from a standpoint of human economy. The Russian has his duck, sheet-iron and leather, the Turk his shawl, sandal and pipes, and so it is and ever will be. The Turks are a slow race, but, by the "beard of the prophet," not fools by any means.

MISCELLANY.

A solid piece of silver in the Mexican department reminded me, as I saw how immovable it was, of the Californian who discovered a bonanza lug. It was too heavy to carry, if he left it some one would capture it, hence he staid and starved to death by it. This piece of silver was too gigantic for the most expert kleptomaniac. It is of circular shape, and about six feet in diameter. It is the product of 272 tons; its weight is 4,002 lbs. It produced 235¼ ounces to the ton; the cost of production was $1.76 per ton. A piece of armour plate is on exhibition for the iron-clad Puritan, constructing at Chester, Pa., which is ten feet long, three feet, eight inches wide, twelve and three-fourth inches thick. In the Canada log and timber building is the section of a white pine, eight feet five inches in diameter and 664 years old. Russia exhibits a fur carpet in Mosaic made of 3,000 pieces of furs. The fine wools of Russia are the Metis and Tzigai and Negreti. Glasgow Sugar Cane Mill, Scotland, makes an important exhibit of her metal in this specimen; the material of the two mills, with enormous masses of iron, occupy a space fifty feet square. I neglected to mention that the Corliss engine weighs 800 tons. One firm displays in a diamond necklace, studs and earrings, a value of $50,000. There are some who will purchase them. The most beautiful Palissy and majolica ware in the world is on exhibition. Peru exhibits specimens of the 100,000 tons of guano she annually exports also silver that led Pizarro to deeds of valor and brigandism, 200 years ago. Their cocoa contains sixteen nutritive qualities. Many nations exhibit vegetables in cans hermetically sealed. In England, young cabbages are called greens; still smaller are called sprouts. The ordinary greens are termed turnip tops. So if you visit the old country and wish greens ask for "turnip tops." Russia is daily adding to her cases (pastiles). Fruit paste is a specialty, also dried blood, liquid coffee, preserved fruits and meats, rye flour, seal grease, and a large variety of leather. The largest list of exhibits are from Warsaw and St. Petersburg. The Government makes an extensive display; so do the nobility—exhibiting their appreciation of industry; a good lesson for the youth of America. Salt reindeer tongues are from Nova Zembla. Portugal has a list of at least 2,000 lots in cereals, wines, liquors, preserved fruits and meats, olive oils, leguminous articles, and wool and cotton in the raw and manufactured state. J. B.

The Channel Tunnel.

The preliminary work on the Channel tunnel, to connect England and France, has been commenced at Langatte, France. Shafts have been sunk to the depth of forty metres. When these reach to the depth of 100 metres below the sea, a gallery one kilometre long will be made in the chalk. If this is successful and nothing indicates the impracticability of the project, the tunnel will be definitely commenced.

A San Francisco Earthquake.

The middle of the broad street was filled with a crowd of breathless, pallid, death-stricken men, who had lost all sense but the common instinct of animals. There were hysterical men, who laughed loudly without a cause, and talked incessantly of what they knew not. There were dumb, paralyzed men, who stood helplessly and hopelessly beneath cornices and chimneys that toppled over and crushed them. There were automatic men, who, flying, carried with them the work on which they were engaged—one whose hands were full of bills and papers, another who held his ledger under his arm. There were men who had forgotten the ordinary instincts of decency—some half-dressed, one who had flown from a neighboring bath-room with only the towel in his hand that afterward hid his nakedness. There were men who rushed from the fear of death into his presence; two were picked up, one who had jumped through a sky-light, another who had blindly leaped from a fourth-story window. There were brave men who trembled like children; there was one whose life had been spent in scenes of daring and danger, who cowered paralyzed in the corner of the room from which a few inches of plastering had fallen. There were hopeful men who believed that the danger was over, and, having passed, would, by some mysterious law, never recur; there were others who shook their heads and said that the next shock would be fatal. There were crowds around the dust that arose from fallen chimneys and cornices, around runaway horses that dashed as madly as their drivers against lamp-posts, around telegraph and newspaper offices, eager to know the extent of the disaster. Along the remoter avenues and cross streets dwellings were deserted, people sat upon their doorsteps or in chairs upon the sidewalks, fearful of the houses they had built with their own hands, and doubtful even of this blue arch above them that smiled so deceitfully; of those far-reaching fields beyond, which they had cut into lots and bartered and sold, and which now seemed to suddenly rise against them, or slip and wither away from their very feet. It seemed so outrageous that this dull, patient earth, whose homeliness they had adorned and improved, and which, whatever their other fortune or vicissitudes, at least had been their sure inheritance, should have become so faithless. Small wonder that the owner of a little house, which had sunk on the reclaimed water-front, stooped in the speechless and solemn absurdity of his wrath to shake his clenched fist in the face of the great mother.

The real damage to life and property had been so slight, and in such pronounced contrast to the prevailing terror, that half an hour later only a sense of the ludicrous remained with the greater masses of the people. Mr. Dumphy, like all practical, unimaginative men, was among the first to recover his presence of mind with the passing of the immediate danger. People took confidence when this great man, who had so much to lose, after sharply remanding his clerks, and everybody else back to business re-entered his office.—Bret Harte's "Gabriel Conroy," in Scribner for June.

Hydrophobia.

It is with great reluctance that physicians have admitted the existence of such a disease as hydrophobia at all; but we fear that facts are too strong to authorize much skepticism. Too many deaths have occurred exhibiting identical symptoms, following the bites of dogs unequivocally afflicted in the same way. At the same time our knowledge of the real nature of the disease is far from precise or satisfactory. There seems to be no fixed period intervening between the bite of the dog and the disorder of the patient. Of two persons bitten by the same dog at the same time one may die and the other may escape. Sometimes cautery is followed by immunity and sometimes it is not. Sometimes the disease may appear to yield to medical treatment other than mechanical, yet even in such cases there has been no uniformity of practice. All this, undoubtedly, adds to the terror with which hydrophobia is popularly regarded. A resort to cautery is shown by experience to be safest. This, however, must not be delayed. In all those cases in which it is supposed to have been effectual, it was at once employed after the wound. We think it may be laid down as a rule, that if there be such a disease as hydrophobia, cautery is the only remedy promising safety; and, therefore, since it is impossible to determine whether the dog is mad or not, every person bitten by that animal should cause the wound to be cauterized with the least possible delay. So well is this understood that those whose business requires them to handle many dogs always carry the caustic with them ready for any emergency. Veterinary surgeons claim that they have frequently been bitten by dogs unmistakably mad, and have escaped all its consequences through this precaution. The statistics of hydrophobia need occasion no more panic than those killed by lightning. Those who do not keep dogs are almost as likely to be bitten as those who do; and as we shall hardly be rid of the creatures altogether, we must take our chance of this curious disease, and trust in this case, as in so many other matters, to a benevolent Providence.—New York Tribune.

Rats in Burmah.

There appears to be a fine opening for terrier dogs and active cats in British Burmah, which, according to the annual report of the chief commissioner on the administration of that country for 1874–'75, lately issued, is in some parts overrun by rats. These animals make periodical visitations to certain districts, where they are not only a serious nuisance, but owing to their voracity reduce the inhabitants to a state bordering on starvation. The Karen district, east of the Sittang river, was again afflicted with a visitation in the shape of a rat plague, which caused alarming ravages and such a deficiency of the food supply that the unfortunate inhabitants were reduced to a precarious subsistence on green bamboo shoots and jungle roots. Their affection for their rat-infested home was, however, so great that they could not be induced for some time to immigrate to the district of Toungoo, where ample provisions had been made for their sustenance, and lived, or rather died, on their bamboo shoots and jungle roots; for, owing, perhaps, to the indigestible nature of this diet, the mortality among them is reported to have been excessive. The rats have during the current season sought fresh pastures, and the Karen district is now free from these unwelcome visitors.

An Interesting Reunion at the Centennial.

The Exhibition grounds have already become noted because of the frequency with which visitors meet friends and even relatives whom they have lost sight of for many years. This morning, in one of the pleasant corners of Agricultural hall, I noticed three or four hard-handed and bronze-cheeked men, evidently farmers, who stood about a fence-post-hole boring machine. They were all dressed in what somebody has called "store clothes," and, with their wives, were listening most attentively to a dried-up little old man, who explained the merits of the machine, and informed them with the air of an oracle, that "a fence to be a fence should be horse high, hog safe, and bull strong," and that "the fences of this 'ere country, sir, have cost more than all the houses, churches, and shipping." After carefully examining the machine, and duly praising its merits, one of the men, a tall, thin, long-spoken Western farmer, began to tell about some fence-posts that he had on his farm which had stood for twenty years, and were still sound. At this a jolly-faced little old fellow, dressed in a blue coat, buttoned up to his chin, nodding to his neighbor in a friendly way, and smiling pleasantly, said: "Well, now, that's not bad, but, would you believe it, I have on my place a well-post that has stood for nigh eighty years, and is just as sound as new oak?" "Well, now, that is 'markable," said the Western man. "Yes," continued he of the blue coat, "but the funniest thing about that post is, that the top of it is alive and has branches springing from it in all directions." While he was telling this apparently simple little story, I noticed that the wife of the Western man regarded him with an earnestness which was altogether out of proportion to the interest of the narrative. As he concluded, she asked him, "Where be you from, sir?" "From Newton, New Jersey, ma'am," was the reply. "And is your name Sam B——?" questioned the lady. "Mercy me, of course it is, and who are you?" exclaimed the little man. "Mary Ann T——, that used to be," replied she, and then the little New Jersey farmer put his arm around the neck of that little Western woman and kissed her as if he meant it. Then the pair explained to the good-humored but somewhat astonished husband that Sam was a cousin, and had been an old playfellow of Mary Ann, "and," said she, "I knew it must be you the minute you told about that old pump-post with the branches." Then the whole party went off together, telling each other of the strange things that had happened to them during the many years they had been separated.—Philadelphia Letter to New York Times.

An Honest Debtor.

Fifty years ago Mary Sturtevant was a tailoress, and made a coat for David R. Campbell, who had just given five towns of the State of Vermont $5,000 each for the poor. His bill amounted to 3s 9d, and when he went to pay up she was not in, and, as they both soon left town, he failed to hand her the money. She was afterward married, had a son, and became a widow, and he went through a long business experience, becoming wealthy. One day, in 1869, she received a letter from him, in which he stated that he had just learned where she was, and inclosed the money, with interest. The money was given to the Consumptive home.—Boston Advertiser.

Couldn't Stand Our Climate.

An Esquimaux family lives near Fort Trumbull, New London, Conn. The captain of the Polaris brought them down from their Arctic home a few years ago. Of eleven who originally composed the family six have died and three have returned, leaving only Ebebing and Tukilitoo, whose English names are Joseph and Hannah. They suffer much from cold, having changed their fur clothing for American wear, which, they say, is full of holes that let the wind through.

AN amendment to the State Constitution has been introduced into the Connecticut House declaring that clergymen shall not be eligible to election to the Legislature while engaged in ministerial work.

REPUBLICAN NATIONAL CONVENTION.

The sixth National Convention of the Republican party met at Cincinnati on Wednesday, the 14th of June. The hall where the meeting was held—the Exposition building—has a seating capacity of about 7,000, but scarcely a third of those who had gone to Cincinnati calculating to look in on the convention, were able to secure tickets of admission.

At ten minutes past 12 p. m., E. D. Morgan, of New York, called the Convention to order, and business was begun at once. On motion of Mr. Morgan, ex-Congressman Theodore M. Pomeroy, of New York, was made temporary Chairman.

On motion of Mr. Adams, of Wisconsin, I. M. Bean and H. H. Bingham were appointed temporary secretaries.

On motion of Mr. Howard, of Michigan, Gen. E. W. Hinckes was unanimously elected Sergeant-at-Arms of the convention.

The committees on credentials, permanent organization, rules and order of business, and resolutions, consisting of one from each State Territory, were then appointed.

A. J. Dittenhoefer, of New York, on behalf of the National German Republican convention, recently in session in Cincinnati, presented a series of resolutions, three of which he desired to call particular attention, the first advocating, in view of the recent decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, declaring State legislation on the subject of the protection of immigration unconstitutional, that the national Government legislate on the subject; secondly, demanding a revision of the treaties between the foreign Governments, affecting naturalization; and, thirdly, demanding non-sectarian schools, and the taxation of church property, as recommended by the President of the United States in his message.

The resolutions were referred to the Committee on Resolutions.

Mr. Mason, of New York, offered the following preamble and resolution:

WHEREAS, We still remember with gratitude the services of the loyal women of our country during the late war, their devotion in the hospitals of the North, and their fidelity to the Union in many of the disputed districts of the South; and,

WHEREAS, The Republican party has always advocated the extension of human freedom; therefore,

Resolved, That we favor the bestowal of equal, civil, and political rights on all loyal citizens of the United States, without regard to sex.

They were received with great laughter and applause.

George William Curtis, of New York—I hold in my hand an address of the Republican Reform party of the city of New York, which I have been requested to lay before this convention, and to ask that it be read. I therefore move that the address which I have the honor to submit be now read to the convention.

The Chair—Is there any objection to the reading of the address?

Objection was made by a delegate from South Carolina.

The Chair—Objection is made.

General cries of "Read it."

The objecting delegate withdrew his objection, and the Chair asked if there was any further objection to its reading.

Objection was made by delegates from Louisiana and Delaware.

The Chair then put the question whether the address should be read, and the motion was carried by a decision of the majority.

Cries of "Take the platform," "Go forward to the platform."

Mr. Curtis then proceeded to read the address and resolutions of June 6, which had already been published in the papers. The last resolution is an indorsement of Bristow.

A delegate from Missouri—I move that the document just read by the gentleman be referred to the Committee on Resolutions without debate.

A delegate from Montana—I desire to amend that motion. I move that the address be adopted as the sense of this convention. [Cries of "No! no!"]

The Chairman—It is referred to the Committee on Resolutions without debate.

A delegate from Maryland—As none of the committees are now ready to report, I move that the convention take a recess until 4 o'clock. [Cries of "No! no!"]

The question was put, but the motion was not agreed to.

Loud calls were then made for Senator John A. Logan.

Mr. Pierce, of Massachusetts—I move that all addresses, memorials, and resolutions be referred to the Committee on Resolutions without reading and without debate.

The motion was agreed to.

After listening to speeches by Senator Logan, Gen. Hawley, Gov. Noyes, Rev. H. H. Garnett, (colored) of New York, Gov. Howard, and Fred Douglass, the convention again got down to business.

The Chair—The first business now in order, and the only business, is to surrender the chair to the permanent Chairman named by the Committee on Organization. The Chair therefore names Messrs. Orton, of New York, Downing, of Iowa, and McCormick, of Arizona, as a committee to conduct the permanent Chairman to the platform.

Mr. McPherson came forward, accompanied by the escort, and was greeted with cheers. The retiring Chairman said: "I take pleasure in introducing as your permanent President the Hon. Edward McPherson, of Pennsylvania." [Cheers.]

Mr. McPherson spoke as follows:

GENTLEMEN OF THE CONVENTION: No one of you knows better than myself how entirely unworthy I am of this high honor. It has come to me not only unsought, but with a feeling of absolute and uncontrollable surprise, but I have been reared in the school of duty, and in the politics of Pennsylvania it is a fundamental doctrine that every Republican shall do his whole duty [applause], and therefore I am here to accept this honor tendered by your committee, and ratified by yourselves, as an honor tendered to the great old Commonwealth which has sent me as one of its delegates to this convention. Since 1856, in no one of the great contests has she ever faltered [applause], and in this Centennial convention she has turned an inflexible, defiant face to the enemy. She says: No truce with treason, malignity, and everything that is not national. [Cheers.] She has determined to roll up for the nominees of this convention a majority such as will entitle her to continue to be what she has long been, and I say it with all respect, foremost in the Republican party. [Applause.] The Chair is ready for business.

Mr. Loring, of Massachusetts, then came forward and read the following report of the Committee on Organization:

President—Edward McPherson, Pennsylvania.

Vice-presidents—Alabama, M. W. Gibbs; California, George S. Evans; Colorado, Henry McAllister; Connecticut, Martin J. Sheldon; Delaware, David W. Moore; Georgia, R. L. Mott; Illinois, John Tringer; Indiana, James S. Fraser; Iowa, W. T. Shaw; Kansas, William Martindale; Kentucky, E. R. Weir; Louisiana, George Y. Kelso; Maine, J. B. Brown; Maryland, James A. Gary; Massachusetts, P. A. Chadbourne; Michigan, Henry P. Baldwin; Minnesota, L. Bogen; Mississippi, M. Shannessee; Missouri, G. A. Finkelenburg; Nebraska, H. S. Kaley; Nevada, T. Wren; New Hampshire, E. A. Straw; New Jersey, Wm. A. Newell; New York, Marshall O. Brooks; North Carolina, James H. Harris; Ohio, Benjamin F. Wade; Oregon, J. H. Foster; Pennsylvania, J. Smith Futhey; Rhode Island, Henry Howard; South Carolina, H. H. Gleaves; Tennessee, Horace H. Harrison; Texas, A. B. Norton; Vermont, George Howe; Virginia, R. H. Carter; West Virginia, W. E. Stevenson; Wisconsin, James Binkliff; Arizona, DeForest Porter; Dakota, Alexander Hughes; Idaho, Austin Savage; Montana, Benjamin H. Tatem; New Mexico, Samuel B. Axtell; Utah, James B. McKean; Washington, Elwood Evans; Wyoming, William Hinton. Principal Secretary, I. M. Bean, of Wisconsin, and one assistant for each State.

Adjourned to Thursday, June 15.

SECOND DAY.

President McPherson called the convention to order at eight minutes after 11 o'clock.

George F. Hoar, of Massachusetts, presented the memorial of the National Women's Suffrage association, and, on his motion, the convention agreed to hear Mrs. S. J. Spencer in behalf of the memorial. She proceeded to present, in a concise form, the claims of women citizens to practical recognition, and criticised the failure of the speakers yesterday to plead for them. The conclusion of her brief speech was received with applause.

The Committee on Rules and Order of Business made their report. After some discussion the report was adopted. John T. Emory, Chairman of the Committee on Credentials, reported that full delegations were present, except from North Carolina and Nevada, where each was one short. He recommended that the delegates present be allowed to cast the whole vote. There were no contested delegations except from Alabama, Florida, and District of Columbia. In Alabama the committee recommended the admission of the anti-Spencer delegates, headed by Jeremiah Haralson. In Florida they recommended to admit the Conover delegates; in the District of Columbia they recommended the admission of Bowen and Green.

Mr. Harris (Nevada), from the minority of the committee, presented a minority report in the Alabama case, declaring that the Spencer delegation was the only legitimate and truly representative delegation from that State.

After considerable discussion the majority report was adopted.

The Chair—The next business in order is the report of the Committee on Resolutions.

Mr. Hawley—Mr. President, you must be aware that your Committee on Resolutions, upon assembling, found itself constituted by men of somewhat differing sentiments and widely separated localities, and mostly strangers to each other. We have, in general, agreed upon the statements we are about to present to you, and respectfully submit them for your consideration, and for your amendment, if you choose. They are as follows:

When, in the economy of Providence, this land was to be purged of human slavery, and when the strength of the Government of the people, by the people, for the people, was to be demonstrated, the Republican party came into power. Its deeds have passed into history, and we look back to them with pride incited by their memories, and high aims for the good of our country and mankind; and, looking to the future with unfaltering courage, hope, and purpose, we, the representatives of the party in National Convention assembled, make the following declaration of principles:

1. The United States of America is a nation, not a league. By the combined workings of the National and State Governments under their respective Constitutions, the rights of every citizen are secured at home and protected abroad, and the common welfare promoted.

2. The Republican party has preserved those Governments to their hundredth anniversary of the nation's birth and they are now embodiments of the great truths spoken at its cradle, that "all men are created equal;" that they are "endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights, among which are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness; that, for the attainment of these ends, Governments have been instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed." Until these truths are cheerfully obeyed, or, if need be, vigorously enforced, the work of the Republican party is unfinished.

3. The permanent pacification of the Southern section of the Union, and the complete protection of its citizens in the free enjoyment of all their rights, are duties to which the Republican party stands sacredly pledged. The power to provide for the enforcement of the principles embodied in the recent Constitutional amendments is vested by those amendments in the Congress of the United States; and we declare it to be the solemn obligation of the Legislative and Executive departments of the Government to put into immediate and vigorous exercise all their constitutional powers for removing any just causes of discontent on the part of any class, and for securing to every American citizen complete liberty and exact equality in the exercise of all civil, political, and public rights. To this end we imperatively demand a Congress and a Chief Executive whose courage and fidelity to these duties shall not falter until these results are placed beyond dispute or recall.

4. In the first act of Congress signed by President Grant the National Government assumed to remove any doubts of its duties to discharge all just obligations to public creditors, and solemnly pledged its faith to make provision at the earliest practicable period for the redemption of United States notes in coin. Commercial prosperity, public morals, and the national credit demand that this promise be fulfilled by a continuous and steady progress to specie payments.

5. Under the Constitution the President and heads of departments are to make nominations for office, the Senate is to advise and to consent to appointments, and the House of Representatives is to accuse and prosecute faithless officers. The best interests of the public service demand that these distinctions be respected; that Senators and Representatives, who may be judges and accusers, should not dictate appointments to office. The invariable rule for appointments should have reference to the honesty, fidelity, and capacity of the appointee, giving to the party in power those places where harmony and vigor of administration requires its policy to be represented, but permitting all others to be filled by persons selected with sole reference to the efficiency of the public service, and the right of all citizens to share in the honor of rendering faithful service to their country.

6. We rejoice in the quickened conscience of the people concerning political affairs, and will hold all officers to a rigid responsibility, and engage that the prosecution and punishment of all who betray official trusts shall be speedy, thorough, and unsparing.

7. The public school system of the several States is the bulwark of the American republic, and with a view to its security and permanence, we recommend an amendment to the Constitution of the United States forbidding the application of any public funds or property for the benefit of any schools or institutions under sectarian control.

8. The revenue necessary for current expenditures and the obligations of the public debt must be largely derived from duties on importations, which, so far as possible, should be adjusted to promote the interest of American labor and advance the prosperity of the whole country.

9. We reaffirm our opposition to further grants of the public lands to corporations and monopolies, and demand that the national domain be devoted to free homes for the people.

10. It is the imperative duty of the Government so to modify existing treaties with European Governments that the same protection shall be afforded to the adopted American citizen that is given to the native born, and that all necessary laws should be passed to protect immigrants in the absence of power in the States for that purpose.

11. It is the immediate duty of Congress to fully investigate the effect of the immigration and importation of Mongolians upon the moral and material interests of the country.

12. The Republican party recognizes with approval the substantial advance recently made toward the establishment of equal rights for women by the many important amendments effected by Republican Legislatures in the laws which concern the personal and property relations of wives, mothers and widows, and by the appointment and election of women to the superintendence of education, charities and other public trusts. The honest demands of this class of citizens for additional rights and privileges and immunities should be treated with respectful consideration.

13. The Constitution confers upon Congress sovereign power over the Territories of the United States for their government, and in the exercise of this power it is the right and the duty of Congress to prohibit and extirpate in the Territories that relic of barbarism, polygamy, and we demand such legislation as shall secure this end, and the supremacy of American institutions in all the Territories.

14. The pledges which the nation has given to our soldiers and sailors must be fulfilled; a grateful people will always hold those who perilled their lives for the country's preservation in the kindest remembrance.

15. We sincerely deprecate all sectional feeling and tendencies; we therefore note with deep solicitude that the Democratic party counts as its chief hope of success upon the electoral vote of the united South, secured through the efforts of those who were recently arrayed against the nation; and we invoke the earnest attention of the country to the grave truth that a success thus achieved would reopen sectional strife and imperil the national honor and human rights.

16. We charge the Democratic party as being the same in character and spirit as when it sympathized with treason; with making its control of the House of Representatives the triumph and the opportunity of the nation's recent foes; with asserting and applauding in the National Capitol the sentiments of unrepentant rebellion; with sending Union soldiers to the rear and promoting Confederate soldiers to the front; with deliberately proposing to repudiate the plighted faith of the Government; with being equally false and imbecile; with overshadowing the ends of justice by the partisan mismanagement and obstruction of investigation; with proving itself, through the period of its ascendency in the lower House of Congress utterly incompetent to administer the Government. We warn the country against trusting a party thus alike unworthy, recreant, and incapable.

17. The National Administration merits commendation for its honorable work in the management of domestic and foreign affairs, and President Grant deserves the hearty gratitude of the American people for his patriotism and his immense services in war and in peace.

The resolution in regard to Mongolian immigration gave rise to considerable discussion, but was finally adopted.

The Chair—The question now recurs on the adoption of the financial resolution to which the minority of the committee, the Hon. Edwin James, of Texas, offers a substitute, as follows:

Resolved, That it is the duty of Congress to provide measures for carrying out the provisions of what is termed the Resumption act of Congress, to the end that resumption of specie payments at the time fixed by said act cannot be further delayed.

After some discussion, the question was put on the adoption of the substitute, and it was rejected by a decided majority.

The whole platform, as reported by the committee, was then declared adopted.

The chair announced that the next business in order was the nomination of a candidate for President of the United States.

After two or three motions to adjourn had been put and rejected, a delegate from New York moved that the Secretary call the roll of States in alphabetical order, and at the call of each State it should present its candidate if it had any.

The motion was carried, and the Clerk had got as far in the list as Connecticut, when Hon. Stephen W. Kellogg arose and, in a brief speech, presented the name of Marshall Jewell.

Richard W. Thompson, of Indiana, nominated Oliver P. Morton.

Gen. J. M. Harlan, of Kentucky, nominated Benjamin H. Bristow.

Robert G. Ingersoll, of Illinois, nominated James G. Blaine.

Stewart S. Woodford, of New York, nominated Roscoe Conkling.

Linn Bartholomew, of Pennsylvania, nominated John F. Hartranft.

Ex-Gov. C. W. Noyes, of Ohio, nominated Rutherford B. Hayes.

The Chair announced that it was unnecessary to call the remaining States, as there were no other candidates.

On motion, the convention then adjourned at ten minutes past 5, till 10 o'clock Friday morning.

THIRD DAY.

The convention met promptly at 10 o'clock, and immediately proceeded to ballot for a candidate for President:

Bristow	111	Morton	85
Conkling	81	Wheeler	2
Hartranft	50	Washburne	4

When the roll was called for the seventh ballot, it was evident that the crisis had come, and that it was now a choice between Hayes and Blaine. Then came the disagreeable necessity of withdrawing favorite candidates. Blaine's strength was increasing among the Southern delegates, and the Indiana delegation held a hurried consultation in a committee room, when it was determined to transfer their votes to Hayes. The call progressed, and when Kentucky was reached Gen. Harlan withdrew the name of Mr. Bristow, at the same time returning thanks to the States that had supported him, and announced the solid vote of Kentucky for Hayes. At this stage the New Yorkers retired for consultation. While they were absent Mississippi voted solid for Hayes, Nevada ditto, South Carolina ditto, each followed by prolonged applause. New York returned and cast sixty-one votes for Hayes and nine for Blaine. Ohio, of course, voted for Hayes, and Pennsylvania was divided—thirty for Blaine and twenty-eight for Hayes. This determined the hesitating and weavering delegates of South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, and the two Virginias to make Hayes their candidate. The remainder of the roll was called, and the result announced that Gov. Hayes, of Ohio, had received 384 votes, Blaine 351 votes, Bristow 21 votes, and the great struggle was over.

When the vote was announced, Mr. Frye, of Maine, moved that the nominated be made unanimous, which was carried amid great enthusiasm.

The convention then proceeded to ballot for candidates for the Vice-presidency, and the following gentlemen were put in nomination: Wm. A. Wheeler, of New York; Marshall Jewell, of Connecticut; Stewart L. Woodford, of New York; Joseph R. Hawley, of Connecticut, and F. T. Frelinghuysen, of New Jersey. The call of the roll proceeded rather languidly. Half a dozen men cast the votes of heavy delegations, and the crowd grew thin. When Tennessee had been reached Mr. Wheeler had received over 300 votes, and it was apparent that he was nominated. Mr. Kellogg, of Connecticut, withdrew the name of Mr. Jewell, and moved that Mr. Wheeler's nomination be made unanimous, which was accordingly done. Four years ago all the interest centered in the fight for Vice-president, and the members of the convention remained in their seats to the close. This time the second office of the Government was given away almost without a contest.

The National Committee was selected and announced, as follows:

Jerry Haralson, Selma, Ala.; Powell Clayton, Arkansas; George C. Gorham, California; Marshall Jewell, Connecticut; Samuel M. Harrington, Delaware; William J. Purman, Florida; James G. Devol, Georgia; James P. Root, Illinois; Will Cumback, Indiana; John Y. Stone, Iowa; John H. Martin, Kansas; William C. Goodloe, Kentucky; P. B. L. Pinchback, Louisiana; William P. Frye, Maine; Charles C. Fulton, Maryland; George F. Hoar, Massachusetts; Zachariah Chandler, Michigan; John T. Averill, Minnesota; G. M. Buchanan, Mississippi; Chauncey I. Filley, Missouri; L. W. Osborn, Nebraska; John P. Jones, Nevada; George A. Halsey, New Jersey; A. B. Cornell, New York; Thomas B. Keogh, North Carolina; A. T. Wikoff, Ohio; H. W. Scott, Oregon; Nelson W. Aldridge, Pennsylvania; John J. Patterson, South Carolina; William Rule, Tennessee; M. S. Colburn, Vermont; J. D. Sener, Virginia; John W. Mason, Grafton, West Virginia; Elihu Enos, Wisconsin; Newton Edmunds, Dakota; Sayles J. Bowen, District of Columbia; Thomas Donaldson, Idaho; A. H. Beattie, Montana; Stephen B. Elkins, New Mexico; John R. McBride, Utah; Orange Jacobs, Washington; Joseph M. Cary, Wyoming; William E. Chandler, New Hampshire.

After the usual resolutions of thanks, etc., the convention adjourned.

Cape Diamonds.

Since March, 1867, when the first diamond was found at the Cape, it is estimated that diamonds to the value of twelve million pounds sterling have been brought away from there. As stated by Prof. Tennant, of London, about ten per cent. of the Cape diamonds may be classified as of the first quality, fifteen per cent. of the second, and twenty of the third. The remainder, under the name of bort, is employed for cutting diamonds and for the various economic purposes by the lapidary, the engineer for rock drilling, and so on. Many diamonds containing specks and cavities can be manipulated by skilled workmen acquainted with the cleavage, who are able to remove these blemishes. Some two hundred years since the work of cutting and polishing diamonds was principally done in England; since then this has been mostly carried on in Holland, but the English stonecutters seem now likely to regain their early reputation. One stone from South Africa, described by Prof. Tennant, weighed in its original condition 112 carats; it has been cut into a brilliant weighing sixty-six carats, and this, it is stated, exceeds in size and brilliancy any diamond in the British crown. It is valued at ten thousand pounds sterling.—Harper.

A MAN, his wife, and their four children, tried to drown themselves together in St. Louis, but were rescued by a boatman. They were destitute, and the parents, after a deliberate discussion of the subject, had decided upon suicide. The oldest of the children, a girl of thirteen, had acquiesced in that determination, but the younger ones did not seem to comprehend the importance of the event.

ELECTRICITY has replaced gas in lighting a railroad depot in Paris, and the experiment is satisfactory as to practicability and cheapness.

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC.

The Old Home With Father and Mother.

There's one hallowed place in childhood,
  Where we ever feel free from ill—
Where the sweet, holy hush of the twilight
  Seems a whisper of "Peace, be still,"—
While a fond mother's kind, gentle teachings
  Fall lovingly then on our ears,
And a father's dear smile of affection
  Is a balm for all sorrows and tears.
Once severed from this, there is never another
That seems like the Old Home, with Father and Mother.

Sometimes we grow tired of the old ways,
  And like robins that flit from the nest,
The world seems so smiling and sunny;
  We think its broad highway the best;
So we leave a good-by with the homestead,
  And fly out where gaiety sings,
But we find there's a world full of danger
  For poor little unfledged wings.
But one path seems brighter to us than another—
The path that leads homeward to Father and Mother.

The years as they come up to meet us,
  May furrow our brows with their care,
But they cannot blot out from our memory
  The touch of a mother's kiss there;
And tho' Time may reach out his old fingers,
  And weave in our hair silver thread,
Yet he never can mar our first blessing—
  A father's dear hand on our head.
These sweet thoughts still linger above every other,
When we think of the Old Home, with Father and Mother.

Around the Farm.

CHIP dirt, as it is usually found under old wood-piles, is always worth spreading upon cultivated fields, or if shoveled over and dried, and freed from coarse material, makes a valuable absorbent for the stables.

HOW ARE the cellars—have they been cleared of vegetables and all rubbish, such as boards, barrels and boxes? The health of the household depends much on having pure air underneath the rooms. —Detroit Tribune.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Ohio Farmer states that he kept a plum tree from curculios by sprinkling the ground under the tree with corn meal. This induced the chickens to scratch and search. The meal was strewn every morning from the time the trees blossomed, until the fruit was large enough to be out of danger. The consequence was that fowls picked up the curculios with the meal, and the tree, being saved from the presence of the insects, was wonderfully fruitful.

THE introduction within the last few years of improved drying-machines has given impetus to branches of farming long neglected. Pumpkins well dried and packed bring a good price, and corn-fields will this season have the old-fashioned look as to vines and pumpkins. The ease with which corn is dried for market, with the improved appliances, turns attention to sweet corn as a profitable crop, and much more of this will be planted than in previous years. —Chicago Tribune.

SHOULD wasps or robber bees attack a hive, the only plan is to narrow the entrance, so that only one or two bees can pass at the same time; this enables them the better to defend their gates and generally to hold their own against all invaders. A very simple and easy plan of doing this is to saturate a piece of woolen rag with spirits of turpentine, and put it into the entrance of the nest; leave it there for the night and the next morning every wasp will be dead. A wasp's nest, when removed unbroken, is very extraordinary and beautiful in its construction, and a curiosity quite worthy of preservation.

IT is a good plan to make boxes, say twelve inches square and eight inches high, without bottom or top; these placed over the cucumber or melon hills, and covered with glass, give an impetus to the plant early in the season that nothing short of a hot-bed will effect. If very early, place a little fresh manure around these boxes to keep the contents warm. It is astonishing what effect this simple contrivance will produce; and not only is it valuable for protection from the cold weather, but it is equally valuable as a protection from the melon bugs and other predatory insects that seem to watch for our choicest esculents. —N. Y. Tribune.

NEST-BOXES should be movable, so that, after hatching, and occasionally when used only for laying, they may be conveniently cleaned. One way is to whitewash them; but another, preferred by some, is to kindle a fire inside and char them. This process will effectually destroy vermin and their larvæ, and will thoroughly purify the nest by leaving a coating of charcoal inside. This substance is one of the best antiseptics, and a perfect deodorizer. Boxes made of seven-eighths stuff—pine, hemlock, or spruce—will outlast a number of these purifications by fire, as the process tends to preserve the wood.—Boston Cultivator.

MOTHERLESS YOUNG ANIMALS.—How to mother motherless young animals—foals, calves, or lambs: Rub the palm of the hand full of gin on the nose and mouth of the dam; rub a little of the same bottle along the back of the young animal to be adopted, place them together, and the relationship is complete. The advantage of this simple process will be complete to those who have to do with long-wooled sheep, where, as is frequently the case, a ewe dies, leaves a pair of fine lambs, while probably another ewe loses her lambs, when exchange of maternal affection is instantly brought about by the gin, to the saving and successful rearing of what otherwise would be two troublesome pets at best. When a ewe has three lambs and another ewe one, the disparity can be effectually remedied in the same manner.

About the House.

NICE CHEAP PUDDING.—One quart of milk; four tablespoonfuls of flour; four eggs; six tablespoonfuls of sugar; nutmeg. Steam three-fourths of an hour.

A WRITER in Harper's Bazar says: To get and retain beautiful hair you must attend to daily brushing it, occasionally washing it, and periodically trimming it, and striving at all times to keep the general health up to the average.

BACHELOR'S LOAF.—Four eggs, beat yelks and whites separately; one quart warm milk; add one-fourth of a pound of butter. Stir in one pint of corn meal and add the eggs after they are well beaten. Bake one-half hour in a moderately hot oven.

APPLE PIES.—Take nice tart apples—Spitzenbergs are best, although pippins, greenings, russets, etc., are excellent. Slice them; fill the under crust an inch thick; sprinkle water over them; add a spoonful or two of water; cover with a thin crust, and bake three-fourths of an hour in a moderate oven.

SPONGE CAKE.—Ten ounces of flour, ten eggs, one pound of powdered sugar. Stir the yelks and sugar together, beat the whites to a stiff froth, grate the rind of one large fresh lemon, and add the juice while mixing; a little salt. Mix all as quickly as possible, not stirring too long, and instantly put into a moderately hot oven.

POCKETBOOK ROLLS.—Take one teacup yeast, one pint new milk, one egg well beaten, three tablespoons sugar, one-half cup lard. Flour stiff enough to roll out; then put in a warm place to rise. When light, roll into a sheet, spread butter as for pastry, double it over and cut with a round lid. Bake in moderate oven.

CENTENNIAL BISCUIT.—Make good corn mush, just as if you were going to eat it with milk. When it is lukewarm, take a quart of it, work in flour enough to make a stiff dough, make it into biscuits, put in your bake pan and set in a warm place over night; bake in a very hot oven, and you have the best and sweetest biscuits you ever ate. Eat while hot for breakfast.

CABBAGE SALAD.—One small cabbage or a half of a large one; one cup of vinegar; twelve teaspoons salt; one of pepper; one of mustard; six tablespoons sweet milk; two full tablespoons melted butter; one egg; a little sugar may be added if you like it. Chop the cabbage fine, and scald with vinegar and spices; add the milk and eggs last, and bring all to a boil, though do not let it boil. Serve hot or cold.

WHEN elderberries are dried they are much superior in flavor to fresh or canned ones. To make pies, the dried berries should be soaked over night and cooked in the same water, having plenty of it, sweetened well and thickened. Then let them cool. Prepare the crust and put in the elderberries and a spoonful of vinegar and a teaspoonful of lemon extract to each pie. Bake with two crusts.

MUSCLE.

Capt. Burnaby's Great Strength.

Among many exploits that are chronicled of Fred Burnaby, the exceptionally strong English guardsman, it is related that when he was Times correspondent at the Carlist headquarters, he captivated the heart of Don Carlos by throwing a donkey over the garden wall of a convent. The animal fell among the nuns, who naturally conjectured it to be the evil one, a surmise which was for the moment strengthened by the tremendous braying of the creature and the rapid vibration of his ears, which gave its head the look of a windmill. Returning to England after getting tired of the hardships of the Carlist headquarters, he took up the study of Russian and Arabic, doubtless with some reference to his contemplated eastern journeying. In the interval between his return and his winter journey to the Oxus he made a dash into Central Africa to look after Gordon or Stanley, journeying as far as the Sobat river, where he met the former. It was at this place that he lifted a hippopotamus on a wager, exciting the natives to such a degree that he was immediately proclaimed king of one of the most warlike tribes of the interior, the existing sovereign having his hat promptly mashed over his eyes and his person thrown into the river. Capt. Burnaby had some difficulty in convincing his new subjects that he declined the honor thus unexpectedly thrust upon him, but he finally did so, whereupon they fished out their old monarch, reinflated his hat, and set him on his throne again, dripping like an otter. He returned on a camel across the Berber desert, giving the amazed Arabs occasional exhibitions of his strength. At Korosko, in the presence of a great number of sheiks, he broke in two the musket of the oldest and most powerful of those chieftains which had been handed him to experiment on; but instead of admiring the feat, the sordid Arabs pronounced it black art, and insisted on payment for the ruined weapon. This proposition was finally acceded to, the captain telling down the stipulated number of coins, twisting the last one asunder as if it had been a macaroon. He desired to retain a broken half of this as a souvenir, but the penurious sheik refused, insisting stubbornly on both moieties. The Arabs thought their visitor possessed, and seemed joyful at his departure. His Khivan journey, just finished, winds up the tail of his achievements and brings him back to the metropolis and the cavalry barrack a full-grown social lion of the smaller sort, who will be heard of and seen in all the fashionable salons of the season, but who by the next will very likely have shed his claws and mane and relapsed into an enormous and prematurely worn-out sub-officer of the cavalry service, with little of achievement to fall back upon, except a few daring and foolhardy escapades, undertaken with no sufficient purpose, and carried through with the force of a restless and uneasy vanity which would rather astonish the world than serve it. This greatly gifted young man seems to have overdone everything, and it will be a wonder if he does not learn that he has wasted his rich patrimony of strength and vigor almost before he has arrived at its full inheritance.

A "Company Suit."

A writer on "Old Times in California," in the New York Sun, relates the following: "When I lived at Indian Bar, after it had been ravaged by the copper fever, there was but one good suit of clothes in camp. It was a company suit. One man owned the boots, another the trowsers, another the vest, another the coat. When any one wished to attend a lawsuit, a funeral or a convention at Sonora, the county seat, he would start from his own cabin without being much encumbered with clothes, go to the boot owner, put on the boots, thence to the trowsers proprietor and draw on the trowsers, thence to the vest owner, put on the vest, lastly to the coat man, put on that coat, and then he would walk away the only well-dressed man in Indian Bar City."

THE lawyers of Ireland are indignant at a barrister who advertises in the newspapers. The ancient etiquette of the legal, or of the medical, profession is to starve rather than publish one's business in the same column with announcements of dry goods and groceries.

A Gentleman.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

DEAR COURIER—There is a general fever of excitement throughout the city this morning traceable to several causes, the assembling at St. Louis being the principal one, but by the time your readers have this before them that will have been quieted, and I hope satisfactorily. Another is the appropriation bill, the last of which was passed by the House this morning, the session lasting until half-past two. The bills are now all before the Senate, and the House discharged its responsibility to the people and have cut down the expenses over forty millions, or a dollar each for every man, woman and child in the country. If the Republicans are now in favor of economy and retrenchment they will have an opportunity to show it, for they have a majority in the Senate But they are not, or they would have passed the bills which have been before them for some time. They have steadily opposed any cutting down of the salaries of their pets in office, and are now clamoring for a conference committee. A great cry is raised that the government will be at a stand still if these appropriations are not passed, and yet a Republican Senate blocks their passage. Let the responsibility rest where it belongs.

"LIME KILN" ORTH.

When Orth was notified that he was nominated as the Republican candidate for Governor he replied that it made him as hot as a lime kiln to hear that the ex-confederate house were discharging union soldiers and putting in rebels. He did not state that there were more union soldiers employed in this House than there were in the last Republican House and he could now with much consistency, say that it makes him as hot as a lime kiln, to see an ex-confederate House pass the soldiers equalization bounty bill after a Republican congress had failed several times to do the same thing. But this same Orth is being shown up for certain transactions with which he has been connected with the Venezuelian claims commission. The committee on Foreign affairs have the matter in hand, and will make a report in due time As near as I understand the case, certain citizens of this country made certain claims against the Venezuelian government. That government agreed with the U. S. to appoint a commission of three, one from each, and a third I think from Russia. Stillwell, of Indiana, was minister to that country at the time, and he had his friend appointed on that commission. The commission secured a lawyer, and all parties having claims before the commissions were compelled to present them, through this attorney who charged the modest fee of fifty per cent. after the claims were allowed, Orth who was then a member elect of Congress, was employed to have the claims rectified by Congress. The Venezuelian government protested that the claims were an extortion, but paid the first installment. Orth as a member of the Foreign Committee lobbied them through, and was paid therefore. Its a bad case against Orth, and I doubt not he will get as hot as a lime kiln befor he gets through.

The nomination of Hayes is not panning out as well as first thought. The little enthusiasm at first created was more from the escape the Republicans made from the nomination of Blaine than from any real merit their candidate possesses. The fact is, Hayes is a weak man. Some pride themselves on the fact that Hayes was elected governor three times in Ohio. So he was, but the time, in 1867, he had 42,000 majority to back him and got it by 3,000. The second time he had about 40,000 at his back and got it only by several thousand. And had it not been for the school question the last time he ran, he would never have been governor of Ohio again. Now just go over the border into Indiana and see how our present governor made his races in three campaigns. The first time he came within less than 10,000 of being elected, against a large Republican majority. The next time the Republicans had to count in enough votes at Indianapolis, after the election, to keep him out, and the third time he won by 1,100 Which has made the most popular run of the two. I think the Chicago Times was about right when it said, refering to Hayes' nomination. "A fool for luck" He is a negitive man. Not much is to be said of him, good or bad, for the reason that although he has been in public life nearly all the time since he began to practice at the bar, he has done not one single thing that any man can recall to mark him as distinguished above the millions who surrounded him. His nomination fell upon the anxious multide here awaiting the result at Cincinnati as a wet blanket. The solemnity of countenance, the dispersion of the crowd about the telegraph and newspaper offices, and the conspicious absence of all gathering and enthusiasm in Republican quarters during the evening attested the fact that he is not the man they expected. Bristow was much the stronger man, but he is a reformer and therefore was not popular. The battle has yet to be run for Hayes and the difficulty of his position is, that he can profit by the hostility of the president, as Briston might have done, and that the policy of the administration in the campaign is not likely to be potent for good, as the Cincinnati Commercial says: "Benjamin H. Bristow has proved himself, during the two years in which he has held the position, one of the ablest of the many great men who have been at the head of the Treasury Department. He is certainly and beyond comparison the best man who has held the office under President Grant's administration.

Hayes endorses all that Grant has done and is a friend of the administration. The platform speaks well of the present corrupt manner of running the government and honest Republicans cannot hope for any reform from that party any longer.

The Republican organs and orators all over the country are denouncing in the most vigorous Anglo-Saxon what they call the "incapacity" of the present House of Representatives. The charge is, in the main, a just one. Compared with its immediate predecessors it is in many respects the most foolish and silly House—we mean the Democratic majority in it—that has met in Washington for a long time. It blundered the first day it met last December when it electea Mr. Kerr speaker, and it has been blundering ever since. A Republican House would have never made a man like the gentleman from Indiana speaker. It would have taken a man like Schuyler Colfax or James G. Blaine and placed him in the chair. Mr. Kerr is away behind the time. He does not understand the mysteries of the credit mobilier; he could not manage a nice stationery contract like the late Vice President but one, or engineer a railroad scheme with the deft ingenuity of his immediate predecessor. If a Roots came to him to ask his advice how to navigate a huge job safely through the shallows and quicksands of amendments and previous questions and points of order, while an anxious lobby nervously watched him from the cloakrooms and dark corners of the chamber Mr. Kerr would be utterly bewildered.

This first great blunder on the part of the House has led to a succession of blunders which have run through all the session, and which have earned for the House its present unenviable reputatation. Take, for instance, the appropriation committee. As all our readers know, Mr. Randall was placed at its head. Blaine would have never made such an appointment. From day to day Randall stands with Argus eyes and a flaming sword, before the gates of the Treasury Department driving off the thieves and plunders who have been robbing it for so many years. When Colfax and Blaine were called upon to fill that position they selected a man who had no eyes at all, and who gave a key to every one who came along, and told him to help himself. Mr. Morrison's appointment as chairman of the ways and means committee was another fatal blunder. A Republican speaker would have chosen a man like Bob Schenck. When Schenck had that committee the tariff bill was discussed at Welcker's every night over a little game of draw poker, and the business interest of the country and Mr. Schenck's own interest, too, were entirely safe as long as the ex-minister "raked in the pile." Again, what a mistake was made in that committee on military affairs. When republicans ruled the house wing of the capital there was millions in that room alone. It used to be managed by eminent statesmen like Coburn, of Indiana, who saw merit in everything took a couple of hundred thousand dollars out of the treasury. But Mr. Banning, who rules over it now, has forgotten the bright example his predecessors set him and he is one of the most conspicious "incapables" among the majority in the House. He has demonstrated his incapacity by cutting down the army and saving some millions of dollars annually to the people and he has shown what a wretched failure he is in practical politics and legislation, by insanely taking the management of the Indians away from those saintly Indian contractors and agents, and turning them over to gentlemen who there is some prospect will not starve them to death or rob them out of seventy-five per cent. of their just allowances. The same dreary blundering has been going on in every other branch of the service. Out of that railroad committee which used, in five or six lines of one of its bills, to give away in a single session territories as large as France, which in the recent years under the magnificent Blaine and the munificent Colfax made imperial grants of land which no English or Spanish King ever dreamed of bestowing, a particle of the public domain large enough for a bird to rest on has not come. No wonder that the whole country is disgusted and that the government is on the verge of ruin and dissolution.

Not for the last fifteen years, since the blessings of republicanism descended upon the country, has a House shown such gross and utter incapacity. It has not passed a single job since last December. Seven long weary months and not a single thing done except save forty millions of dollars. No freedman's bank has been founded. Only think of the stupidity. Not a solitary credit mobilier ring has been established. Was there ever such an oversight? The Darien ship canal might have been built and fifteen or twenty lines of steamships to China and Labrador subsidized, but the golden opportunity has been thrown away forever. This incapable House has frittered away its time in talking about economy and saving the people's money and returning to the good old fashioned ways of the rule of the fathers. If it has not been for the Senate and our esteemed President we do not know what would have become of the republic. They at least are not incapables. They know how to spend the money, and what is more they will spend it. The appropriation bills which the House had shorn of their fair preparations they have returned to the incapable and incompetent majority with the indignant message that they would not insult the executive by sending him such half-famished things for the seal and signature of his approval. The rings must all be supported and not a single cent must be stricken from a single item in any one of them. The President himself has felt so deep an interest in the matter, has been so extremely anxious to come to the assistance of this incompetent body, that he has suggested an easy and simple way of repairing all the folly that has been committed. A ten-line bill, which could be passed in as many minutes, would repair the blunders of all these long weeks, and Congressmen could go to their homes in peace, but the incompetent House strangely persists in its foolish course and maintains its ground with the most perverse obstinacy. Instead of endeavoring to keep forty millions of dollars in the treasury it would have voted them out in an instant and earned the eternal gratitude of all the rings and thieves and plunderers who have been fattening upon the people for so many years. That is the difference between republicanism and democracy—between the House of Blaine and the House of Keer.

And now one word to the Democracy of DeKalb. You need have no fears. The Democratic House has done its work exceedingly well. It is spread upon the record, and they will be found on the side of the people. All we want is a good ticket nominated on a good platform at St. Louis, and I firmly and confidently believe we will be successful. There is no doubt of it, if we do our duty in the campaign. There is encouragement for the Democracy to work and win. Let a united effort be made by every one, firm and unflinching in the great principles, and we will hurl from power as great a set of thieves and swindlers as ever swung on hinges.

The Daily News says a day or two, a young lady suffering from a painful corn upon one of her feet, sent for a corn doctor. The lady not wishing to have her foot handled without putting on a little style, purchased a pair of the finest kind of hose, and cutting the toe end off, put it on her foot and awaited the corn doctor. Now this gentleman saw the point and after examining the corn, suddenly remarked that he would have to go down town after some instruments. He returnd soon afterwards with a pair of white kids on, and then the corn extracting commenced. The charge of the corn doctor was sufficient to pay for the kids.

The Huntington Democrat says: "The aged Indian, White Loon, residing on the reserve near Roanoke, is said to be approaching his end. Some days since he was found lying on the floor of his cabin in a fit, with froth oozing out of his mouth, his hands clenched and his body all drawn up. Loon is upwards of a hundred years old. He remembers all the skirmishes his tribe had with the whites at the settlement of this section. Years ago he would show a string of scalps of whites slain in battle or massacred, when somewhat exhilerated by liquor, and dance around the room to the music og their rittle. Loon remembers a battle fought at Lewis' crossing of which no historical mention is made."

Mont Vernon—The Home of Washington.

You take the boat at Washington, and about two hours ride on the Potomac, you are landed at Mt. Vernon. You take a winding path up the hill, and the first object of any interest that meets the eye, is the tomb of Washington. You look through an iron gate and you see two marble coffins, Washington and his wife, and at first sight one would suppose that their remains reposed in those coffins, but not so. Their remains are back in a vault, with thirty others not to be seen by mortal eye. Some wanted to know if they could not get inside. Our guide said no, for it was locked, and the key was thrown in the river, never to be opened again until that great day of resurection The first burying place of Washington was made at his directions in sight of his house. There was a man boasted that he had the skull of Washington, but come to find out it was of some unknown person. Then the Government deemed it not safe to let his remains repose in his vault, so Congress ordered one to be built so strong that no one could get in to disturb the dead, and there his remains was placed. As we neared the house we had to stop and take a drink of water from the old well whether we were dry or not, and then we went in. The first entrance was a large hall. At the left we entered a room called the Blue, because of its color The next was Mrs. Washington's sitting room, from there we entered the parlor, no carpet on the floor, but on the wall was a large painting which attracts considerable attention. It was Cornwallis surrendering his sword to Washington. Old fashion portraits of eminent men, conspicuous was, Martha Washington. From there we passed into the Green room, which was on the south side. A great many relics in a glass case was to be seen, kept out of the sight of visitors. From there we were conducted up-stairs. At the top of the first flight of stairs stood an old fashioned clock not doing its work, but standing as a time relic. Each room is named after some state. The doors are thrown open and bars put across so visitors can't get in to mar the furniture. High posted bead strands stand as relicks of the past; the rest was furnished by the State. The last room on the west side was where Washington breathed his last, and as we entered there was a silence fell upon us all, we hardly breathed, so solumn was the scene. I felt like falling down and offering a prayer to the God of Heaven, to raise up another such a man to govern this wicked and fallen nation. There stood the bed as Washington lay upon it. As we were standing scarcely daring to move, we heard our man say, if there was any one from Missouri he would take us into Mrs. Washington's room. Of course we were all from Missouri. Up into the third story on the west side we entered her room, a little low six by eight. We asked why she chose such an insignificant room. It was the only one in the house that had a west window, and as she lay on her bed, she could look out to the grove where her husband was buried. She had a hole cut in the door to let in a pet cat, and she wouldn't admit anyone only her servant and her particular friends. A lady from Missouri took pattern of everything in the room and had then sent to Paris and had them made an exact counterpart, even the pillow-slips were on invitation. The original carpet is supposed to be rags and now it is brussels instead of a rag carpet and the curtains around the bed was chince, and now are damask. As we came down stairs we went into the west room called the State room. On the south side of the house there is a porch extending nearly the whole length. Seats are placed there and one can sit down and look out upon the beautiful sheet of water and inhale the cool breeze that is wafted to you. The next place of importance was the garden. It stands just as Washington laid it out, only there are new beauties added. Little nigger boys follow you around to see if you take anything. Beautiful conservatory of flowers sending fourth their perfume, and the garden is filled with choice flowers. I managed to pull a shrub without the little niggers seeing me. On the right of the house stands the Stewards house with a little row of shanties used for negroes quartes and on the left the Butlas with another row of shanties. At the corner of the Butles' house stands a long magnolia tree planted there by Washington the year before he died. We gathered some of the leaves and made them into a baca and when we look at it, will call to our memory the home of Washington.

A Auburn man got mad at the editor and stopped his paper. The next week he sold all his old corn four cents below the market price; then his place was sold for taxes because he didn't know that they were due; he lost the nomination for supervisor because he only heard of it three days before it adjourned; he lost ten dollars by betting on Columbia two days after Cornell had won both races; he was fined eight dollars for going nutting on Sunday, and he paid $300 for a lot forged notes that had been advertised, and the public cautioned not to negotiate them, two weeks Then he paid a great big man $3 to kick him all the way to the newspaper office, where he paid four year's subscription in advance, and resolved never to discontine taking his county paper again.

THE VOICE OF SILENCE.

BY WM. WINTER.

[A poem read at the reunion of the Army of the Potomac, Philadelphia, June 6, 1876.]

Bright on the sparkling sward, this day,
  The youthful summer gleams;
The roses in the south wind play;
  The slumberous woodland dreams;
In golden light, 'neath clouds of fleece,
  'Mid bird-songs wild and free,
The blue Potomac flows, in peace,
  Down to the peaceful sea.

No echo from the stormy past
  Alarms the placid vale—
Nor cannon roar, nor trumpet blast,
  Nor shattered soldier's wail.
There's nothing left to mark the strife,
  The triumph, or the pain,
Where nature to her general life
  Takes back our lives again.

Yet, in your vision, evermore,
  Beneath affrighted skies,
With crash of sound, with reek of gore,
  The martial pageants rise.
Audacious banners rend the air,
  Dark steeds of battle neigh,
And frantic through the sulphurous glare
  Raves on the crimson fray!

Not time nor chance nor change can drown
  Your memories proud and high,
Nor pluck your star of greatness down
  From glory's deathless sky!
Forevermore your fame shall bide—
  Your valor tried and true;
And that which makes your country's pride
  May well be pride to you!

Forever through the soldier's thought
  The soldier's life returns—
Or where the trampled fields are fought
  Or where the camp-fire burns.
For him the pomp of morning brings
  A thrill none else can know;
For him night waves her sable wings
  O'er many a nameless woe.

How often, face to face with death,
  In stern suspense he stood,
While bird and insect held their breath
  Within the ambushed wood!
Again he sees the silent hills,
  With danger's menace grim;
And darkly all the shuddering rills
  Run red with blood, for him.

For him the cruel sun at noon
  Glares on a bristling plain;
For him the cold, disdainful moon
  Lights meadows rough with slain.
There's death in every sight he sees,
  In every sound he hears;
And sunset hush and evening breeze
  Are sad with prisoned tears.

Again, worn out with midnight march,
  He sinks beside the track;
Again, beneath the lonely arch,
  His dreams of home come back;
In morning wind the roses shake
  Around his cottage door,
And little feet of children make
  Their music on the floor.

The tones that nevermore on earth
  Can bid his pulses leap,
Ring out again, in careless mirth,
  Across the vales of sleep;
And where, in horrent splendor, roll
  The waves of vict'ry's tide,
The chosen comrades of his soul
  Are glorious at his side!

Forget! the arm may lose its might,
  The tired heart beat low,
The sun from heaven blot out his light,
  The west wind cease to blow;
But, while one spark of life is warm
  Within this mold of clay,
His soul will revel in the storm
  Of that tremendous day.

On mountain slope, in lonely glen,
  By fate's divine command,
The blood of those devoted men
  Has sanctified this land!
The funeral moss—but not in grief—
  Waves o'er their hallowed rest;
And not in grief the laurel leaf
  Drops on the hero's breast!

Tears for the living, when God's gift—
  (The friend of man to be)—
Wastes, like the shattered spars that drift
  Upon the unknown sea!
Tears for the wreck who sinks at last,
  No deed of valor done;
But no tears for the soul that past
  When honor's fight was won!

He takes the hand of heavenly fate
  Who lives and dies for truth!
For him the holy angels wait,
  In realms of endless youth!
The grass upon his grave is green
  With everlasting bloom;
And [illegible] and blessings make the sheen
  Of glory round the tomb!

Mourn not for them, the loved and gone!
  The cause they died to save
Plants an eternal corner-stone
  Upon the martyr's grave;
And, safe from all the ills we pass,
  Their sleep is sweet and low,
'Neath requiems of the murmuring grass
  And dirges of the snow.

That sunset wafts his holiest kiss
  Through evening's gathering shades,
That beauty breaks the heart with bliss
  The hour before it fades,
That music seems to merge with heaven
  Just when its echo dies,
Is nature's sacred promise given
  Of life beyond the skies!

Mourn not! in life and death they teach
  This thought—this truth—sublime;
There's no man free, except he reach
  Beyond the verge of time!
So, beckoning up the starry slope
  They bid our souls to live;
And, flooding all the world with hope,
  Have taught us to forgive.

No soldier spurns a fallen foe!
  No hate of human-kind
Can darken down the generous glow
  That fires the patriot mind!
But love shall make the vanquished strong,
  And Justice lift their ban—
Where right no more can bend to wrong
  Nor man be slave to man.

So from their quiet graves they speak,
  So speaks that quiet scene—
Where now the violet blossoms meek,
  And all the fields are green.
There wood and stream and flower and bird
  A pure content declare;
And where the voice of war was heard
  Is heard the voice of prayer.

Once more in perfect love, O Lord,
  Our aliened hearts unite;
And deep, across the broken sword,
  The hands that used to smite!
And since beside Potomac's wave
  There's nothing left but peace,
We filled at last the open grave,
  And let the sorrow cease.

Sweet, from the pitying northern pines,
  Their loving whisper flows;
And sweetly, where the orange shines,
  The palm tree woos the rose;
Ah, let that tender music run
  O'er all the years to be;
And Thy great blessing make us one—
  And make us one with Thee!

A FLOWER IN THE WILDERNESS.

Do you ever judge, reader, of the character of the inmates from the physiognomy of their houses? I do. And when the stages swept round the corner I looked out eagerly, for as the driver had told me, about ten rods up the road stood the house of Philander White. His wife was my mother's own cousin, and I was just thirteen years old when I went there to make my first visit. There had been some quarrel between the two families two or three-score years anterior to my visit; and though my mother and Mrs. White never participated in this, the feud of their ancestors had doubtless involved some coldness between them.

But to cut a long story short—for the pen and paper gossip may be more dignified but not a whit better than tea table scandal—I had been an invalid all the previous winter.

When soft April days (to which my mother looked forward so eagerly) came, they brought no bloom to my cheek, no vigor to my step. My constitution seemed to have lost all its recuperative power; and the doctor said: "Send her into the country, Miss May. If that don't help her she is lost to you."

Just before this Mrs. White had learned through a mutual friend of my illness, and the very day of the blunt physician's ultimatum brought a letter to my mother.

"For the sake of my old love," it read, "let all that may have come between you and me be lost in the pleasure of better memories. The hills of Meadow Brook are clothed again with greenness, and now in this late May is the time for Jennie to come to us. There is a prophecy of health for her in the soft wind that lifts the edge of my paper as I write. We know she is your all, and we will be very tender of your darling. Will you not trust her for a single summer!"

And before another week was passed my trunk was packed and marked, "Philander White, Meadow Brook." I looked out, as I have said, and there sat the pleasant white house, with its green window blinds, the shrubbery in front, and the cherry trees behind. My heart went out to it, and at once; and it did a moment later to the gentle-voiced woman and the fair, dark-haired girl who rushed out on the front steps and kissed my cheek, said, "Cousin Jennie, you are very welcome."

But it is not all to tell you of that summer, though I look across the gray year to its picture in the Maryland of my memory that I have taken up my pen this morning. Suffice it that the mountain breezes of Meadow Brook did their work well; and when in early autumn my mother came for her child, she could hardly identify the rosy-cheeked girl who rushed in with her curls dangling about her face and held up her rosy lips for a kiss.

I think it must have been nearly two months after my domestication at Aunt Mary's—for so I call my mother's cousin—when Uncle Charles Brace, her husband's brother, visited her. He was a minister, and Cora and I had anticipated the gentleman's advent with anything but pleasant emotions. Our preconceived notions of the clergyman's elongated visage and solemn, puritanical manner, which we regarded as necessary concomitants of the profession, soon vanished before the beautiful kindling of his smile and the winning gentleness of his manner. He was Uncle Phil's youngest brother and not more than twenty-eight at that time; and his religion had deepened and harmonized his fine poetic temperament without checking the outflow of that under-current of humor which sparkled through his character. Uncle Charles was soon our companion in our rides and rambles, and our confidant in our girlish plans.

"You don't really mean so, Uncle Charlie," and Cora's bright face was lifted from the roses and geraniums we were weaving into the bouquet for the mantel. "You don't really think what you just said, that in every heart there is a fountain; some blossom in the human wilderness of every soul."

He put down his paper and came toward us. "I have not a doubt of it, my little girl. The story I was just reading of the hardened old man who cried because a child gave him a bunch of marigolds, corroborates my remark. The light that is in us cannot quite become darkness; the hearts that might bring forth a hundred-fold for harvests of heaven, will never become such deserts but some good seed will take root therein."

"I don't believe it would, though, in Farmer Keep. You don't know him as well as I do, Uncle Charlie. He's one of the richest men in all Meadow Brook; he's worth thousands and thousands. He's a bachelor, you know, and lives in the great red house on the road to Woodbury, you remember. Well, he never goes to church; he never loved a human being in his life. Now don't think Farmer Keep—why, Grandma Deane, how do you do?"

The lady whose entrance put this sudden period to my cousin's peroration, came slowly toward the rocking chair. Cora drew it out for her. She was the oldest lady in the village. The hair under her cap, white as hillside snow, had imprisoned the sunshine of fourscore and ten summers; but she still retained much of the physical stamina which, with her active sentiment, had made her so vigorous a woman for many years.

"What's that you're saying, child, about Farmer Keep?" said the old lady with a pleasant smile, as she pinned her knitting sheath to her waist.

"Why, I was telling Uncle Charlie what a cold, hard man he is. You've always known him, Grandma Deane, and now did he ever do a good thing or ever love anybody in his life?"

"Yes, he loved a girl once, I think I remember."

"Farmer Keep loved a girl once!" repeated Cora, with a half contemptuous and wholly skeptical curl of her red lips.

"She's forgotten," she added in an undertone to Uncle Charlie and me, for Grandma Deane was slightly deaf.

"No, I haven't forgotten, neither," she said, placing her hand on Cora's hair; "I have held Lucy Reid on my lap too often and rocked her cradle—poor, little motherless thing!—too many times to have forgotten.

Cora's look of incredulity was giving way to one of curiosity.

"Grandma Deane, won't you tell us all about it? Jennie and I will sit down on the stool, and I know by that look in Uncle Charlie's eye, he wants to hear it, too. Come, let the flowers go, Jennie;" and my vivacious cousin established herself at the old lady's feet.

Grandma Deane slipped the yarn around her little finger and commenced: "Let me see. It cannot be more than forty-two or three years this summer since Justin Keep came up to Farmer Reid's to let himself out for the harvest boy, through harvesting. The Reid house stood a little this side of Stony Creek. There is nothing left of it now except the chimney, and it looks out gray and cold from the grass all about it; but forty years ago it was a fine old place, with lilacs, and the hop vines running all around the back. Lucy was hardly three weeks old when she lost her mother. Her father never married again and the child grew up there in the old home as fair and sweet as the flowers about her. She was turning into fifteen when Justin came that summer. He was a shy, strange sort of a lad, and the neighbors said Farmer Reid would never get the salt for his porridge out of him. He'd been bound out until he was eighteen to some man down in Maine, and he hadn't a relation in the world he knew of, nor a decent suit of clothes, when he came to Farmer Reid's house. But for all that, Justin proved a smart, likely boy; and the farmer, who somehow was never very beforehanded—I always thought his wife's sudden death hurt him—found that Justin was a real prize.

"At first he was gloomy and silent, doing his work and taking little notice of anybody. But he couldn't stand it long before Lucy. I wouldn't like to have the heart that that girl's smile wouldn't have thawed out. She was just like a bird around the old place, singing from morn till night, and her blue eyes, that were like her mother's, seemed to be sending out one laugh and her lips another. I never wondered her father doted on her as he did, and, of course, Justin wasn't long in the house before she tried to make friends with him.

"Poor fellow! it must have seemed very strange to him at first, for I don't believe anybody had given him a kind word until he came to Meadow Brook. But he made ladders for her flowering vines to run on, and got shells for the borders, and propped up the dahlias, and did a thousand other things which took them out into the garden after supper, and made them the best of friends.

"Lucy had a playful childish way about her that made her seem much younger than she was; then she was small of her age, so that at fifteen she did not seem a bit older than you are, Cora.

"Well, she rode on top of Justin's hay cart and helped him husk corn in the barn, and pretty soon the farmer noticed a change in Justin. He got him a new suit of clothes, and his face lost its down look, and after harvesting Farmer Reid made him an offer to tarry all winter. So Justin stayed, taking Lucy's advice, and went to the district school and, though he had no education before, he went ahead of many an older scholar that winter. Justin stayed with the farmer four years; then he had a good offer somewhere in New York State, and concluded to stop for the winter only.

"Lucy Reid had grown into a young woman by this time; and a handsomer one, children, these dim eyes never looked upon. I don't know how it happened, for Lucy might have had her pick among the boys for miles around, but somehow she took to Justin, and when he left, they were engaged to be married one year from that time."

"Why, Grandma Deane! you ain't going to stop now?" cried Cora in alarm, for the old lady had laid down her knitting.

"No, my child," she said, moving her spectacles and wiping her eyes; "but the rest is a sad story, and I must hurry over it. I don't exactly know how it happened, but that winter Lucy's father got into a terrible lawsuit with Squire Wheeler. There was some flaw in the title, and the people said it was plain the old man should let the homestead go. They said, too, he'll never survive it; and better perhaps, he never had, than kept it as he did; but one day Squire Wheeler, to all the neighborhood's astonishment, rode over to the farm.

"What he did there was never exactly known; but in a little while it was rumored that the suit was withdrawn, and next spring Lucy Reid was to be married to his son, Stillman Wheeler. And so it was. One bright March day she went to the old church yonder and gave herself to him. He was a good-looking man, but never over-smart, the neighbors whispered; and I always thought that it was his father's money, more than anything else, that kept him up."

"But Justin, Grandma Deane—what became of him?"

"There is a dark look about the whole matter. Lucy was made the victim of some terrible falsehood. I never blamed her father, for the losing of the homestead seemed completely to shatter him. I only know that Squire Wheeler and his son were at the bottom of it, and that Lucy Reid went to the altar, believing that Justin had been false to her."

"Dear me, how dreadful! Did he ever come back?"

"Yes, the next May. Lucy had been a wife two months. Justin had not heard of her marriage. She was at home visiting her father. When she first saw him she fell down like one stricken with a fit. But he carried her into the house and there learned all. Both had been deceived."

"It was a terrible scene the old front room witnessed. Justin swore vengeance, and it was not till, with clasped hands and streaming eyes the young wife knelt to the only man she ever loved and pleaded for the life of her husband, that he promised for her sake to spare his life. But from the day of Justin's visit Lucy was a changed woman. All the light and gladness of her being seemed dead in her. She moved about her house pale and quiet, with a look of patient suffering in her once sunny eyes that made my heart ache to behold."

"And her husband—did she ever tell him what she had learned?"

"I think not. His father and Lucy's had died in less than two years after the marriage. The Squire was much less wealthy than was supposed. The next spring Lucy and her husband moved West, and somehow people lost sight of them."

"And Justin?"

"You know the rest, my child. He became a moody, unhappy man, asking no sympathy and giving none. But he was always smart at a bargain and in a few years he laid up enough money to buy Deacon Platt's farm when his son went South. Ever since, he has added acres to his lands and hundreds to the banks; but for all that, he is a man soured toward all his race—a man who was never known to give a little child a smile or a beggar a crust of bread. I have sometimes thought his heart was like a desert, without a tree to shade or a stream to gladden it. And yet it bore a bright blossom once; and believe me, children, for it is the word of an old woman who has seen and known much of the ways of man, it is always so. The heart may be a great wilderness, but in some of its by-ways there has grown a flower."

Cora and I looked at each other and at Uncle Charlie. Just then Aunt Mary came in. She had been out and had not heard of Gradma Deane's visit. But Cora stole up to her uncle, and, winding her arms about his neck, whispered:

"I shall believe it always, Uncle Charlie, now I have heard the story of Farmer Keep, that there is a blossom in the wilderness of every heart."

It was a sultry August day in the summer I passed at Meadow Brook. The wind, low and slumberous as the hush of a mother's voice at nightfall, crept up among the corn and down among the rye and wheatfields, that lay like broad green folds about the dwelling of Farmer Keep. There was no poem of flowers about the front yard; no graceful, harmonizing touches of creeping vine or waving curtains about the old red homestead; and yet it had a quiet, substantial, matter-of-fact physiognomy, that somehow made a home feeling about your heart.

I think it must have been this unconscious feeling which decided the course of the girl who stood at the point where the roads diverge, and gazed wistfully about her that afternoon. She seemed very tired, and her coarse straw bonnet and calico dress were covered with dust. If you had looked in her face you would not have forgotten it. It could not have been more than fifteen summers. It was very pale, and its sweet, sad beauty made you think of nothing but summer flowers drenched with summer rains. Her eyes were of that deep, moist blue that rolls out from under the edge of April clouds, and her lips, ripe and full, had that touch of sorrowfulness about them, which tells you always the heart beneath is full of tears. The girl's hand clasped tightly the little boy's by her side. The resemblance between them would have told you at once they were brother and sister, but his life could not have covered more than a third of hers. The little fellow's eyes were full of tears, and the bright curls that crept out from his hat were damp with moisture. A few minutes later she opened the broad back gate, and went to the kitchen door. Farmer Keep's housekeeper—an old woman with yellow nightcap, and check apron tied over her linsey wool skirt—answered her knock.

"Do you want any help, or do you know of any round here that does?" timidly asked the girl.

The old lady peered at her with dim eyes. "No," said she. "There ain't but four on us—Farmer Keep and the two hired men, and me. It's harvest time just now, though, and I reckon you'd find a place in the village."

"Thank you. Bennie, here, my little brother, is tired, for we walked from the depot. Can you let us come in and rest awhile?"

"Sartin you can."

The sight of the child touched the heart of the woman, and they went into the large kitchen, and sat down in the flag-bottomed chairs, while, with a glowing cheek, the girl cast about in her mind for the best manner in which to present her petition for food. Before she had decided the master of the house suddenly entered the kitchen, for it was nearly dinner time. He was a large, muscular, broad-chested, sun-burned man, with a hard, gloomy expression on his face, where fifty years were now beginning to write their history. He stood still with surprise, gazing on the new occupants of the kitchen; and the boy drew close to his sister, and the girl threw up a timid, frightened glance into the gloomy face.

"You don't know of anybody here that wants a little help, do ye, farmer?" asked the woman. "Here's a little girl that wants a place, and as she's walked from the depot, I told her she might come in and rest a bit before she went up into the village to try her luck!"

"No," shortly answered the farmer—"Dinner ready?" And the rich man turned away without one gentle or kind look for two homeless children whom God had brought to his door.

"Lucy, Lucy, don't stay here. I'm afraid." And the little boy's lip curled and quivered as he turned his face from the farmer's.

"Lucy, Lucy," how those little, trembling tones went down, down, down, into the man's hard heart! How the dead days of his youth burst out of their graves, and rushed through his memory at that low, broken, "Lucy, Lucy!" He turned and looked at the girl; not sourly, as before, but with a kind and eager questioning interest.

"What's your name?"

"Lucy Wheeler, sir."

He staggered back and caught hold of the nearest chair. "And what was your mother's?" "Lucy Reid. She used to live at Meadow Brook. So I came here to get work; she told me to before she died."

At that moment the angels looked down and saw the seed that had lain for two-score years in the heart of Justin Keep, spring up, and the flower blossom in the wilderness. He strode across the kitchen to the bewildered girl. He brushed back her bonnet and turned her face to the light. He could not be mistaken. It was the one framed and hung in the darkened room of his soul. The blue eyes of Lucy looked again in his own. At that moment the little boy pushed in between them, and gazed wistfully in the man's face. Farmer Keep sat down and took the child in his arms. He tried to speak, but, instead, great sobs came and heaved his strong chest. The trio in the kitchen gazed at them in mute astonishment.

"Lucy's children, Lucy's children!" he murmured at last, in a voice whose tenderness was like that of a mother. "God has sent you to me. For her sake this shall be your home. For her sake I will be a father to you."

Five years after, Cora wrote to me: "We are having fine times now, dear Cousin Jennie, and mamma wants to know if you do not need to renew your cheeks among the dews of Meadow Brook. Uncle Charlie is with us, and if you were also, our happiness would be complete.

"Lucy Wheeler—you remember her—has the place in my heart next to yours. Her disposition is as lovely as her face, and that is saying a great deal, for its sweet beauty does one good to behold it. Farmer Keep seems to idolize her and Bennie. He is a charming man now. He goes to church regularly every Sabbath. He spares no pains or expense in Lucy's education, and she will be an accomplished woman. She is here very often, and I have suspicions that Uncle Charlie—but no matter, I will not trust this to you and paper.

"But now, Jennie, what a lesson has all this taught me. How has it deepened my faith in God and humanity. Now when my heart yearns over the wretched, sinning outcast, I remember always that there is a flower in the wilderness.

Useless Endurance.

On Thursday afternoon, Parker, the mustang-rider, gave up for the second, and, it is to be hoped, the last time, his attempt to ride 300 miles in fifteen hours. As on the first occasion, he became blind from the rapid exhaustion of vital force, the loss of which no stimulants could replace. But, suppose a little additional power of endurance and of will had carried him through? It would simply prove that a man of Anglo-Saxon blood may accomplish as much as a South American Gaucho, or a Tartar of Mongolia. As a merely mechanical feat, it would by no means fix the limit of human endurance when upheld by some powerful purpose. When Charles XII. of Sweden, rode from Adrianople to Stralsund, in the early winter—a distance of not less than 1,200 miles—he performed a greater exploit, and it meant something. When Fremont rode from Los Angeles to Monterey and back—800 miles in six days of travel—he had an important object to accomplish. Undoubtedly many men could be found capable of riding 300 miles in fifteen hours, under the spur of some overwhelming necessity. Similar or equal feats have been performed, over and over again, in all ages of the world. Capt. Boyton, last summer, floated across the channel in his buoyant India-rubber costume, and had much to say of his physical exhaustion, so long as he had no rival; but the Englishman, Webb, swam the same distance with no other float than the national pride.

The strength which is developed by systematic training, and exercised under the most favorable circumstances, may excite curiosity; but it is a very imperfect test of human endurance. So far from establishing a standard of physical development, it rather teaches us what to avoid. Dr. Winship may develop a pair of Herculean shoulders upon a small body, but he simply shows us the uselessness of his special lifting capacity. Weston may walk his 120 miles in twenty-four hours, by the aid of scientific feeding and grooming, but no sensible man would desire to do the same thing. One variety of force is always cultivated at the expense of other equally necessary forces, and is more or less a monstrosity. There is little in it to admire, and nothing to imitate.

Such a performance as that at Fleetwood park lacks every picturesque and heroic element. One gallop around the hot and dusty ring is the picture of the whole 300 miles to the spectators, and their chief interest must be in waiting for the moment when the man, instead of the mustang, shall be attacked with the blind staggers. There is no law, we suppose, to prevent Parker from riding himself dead as well as blind; but the uselessness of the show has now reached that point where it becomes cruelty, and it should not be repeated. Cannot Mr. Bergh, for once, consider a man as good as an animal, and hold his protecting shield over the mustang-rider?—New York Tribune.

A Romance of the Signal Service Bureau

I heard a couple of days ago a hitherto-unpublished romance connected with the life of one of the most prominent officials of the Signal Service bureau. He was, my informant states, once engaged to be married to a lovely, charming and wealthy girl. The eve of the wedding had dawned—if an eve can dawn—and they were occupying the same rocking-chair and talking as inanely as only lovers can talk, when the fair one said: "Albert, duckey, there is one thing I wish you to do when we are married." "Name it, lovey," he replied, making her feel that her corsets were a mile too large for her. "That is, petty to have no rain on Mondays, because, you know, darling, that Monday is washing day, and if the things are not washed and dried then the week's work is so fearfully put back. You will, won't you, my owny?" The young man's heart was torn, but he replied: "Maud, dearest, my duty to my bleeding country demands imperatively that I shall whoop her up the precise sort of weather that heaven will probably send impartially during the next twenty-four hours upon the just and the unjust, without regard to age, sex or previous condition of servitude. If an area of barometric disturbance exists in the Middle States on Monday, how can I consistently with my duty declare that the probabilities favor clear weather with light winds from the southeast? No, angel; ask me anything but that. I could not love thee, dear, so darn much, loved I not honor more." "Then you do not love me," she sobbed, bursting into tears. The reader will readily understand how they progressed to a quarrel and parted enemies. She returned his presents, and is now lecturing on woman's rights, and he is a confirmed misogynist and sits up all Sunday night at the Signal Service office, with fiendish glee making out bulletins for Monday announcing falling barometers, atmospheric disturbances, heavy rains, showery weather, and so on.—Washington Cor. New York World.

THERE arrived in Port Byron, N. Y., a few days ago, a man who had just been released from a long imprisonment in the State prison in Auburn, N. Y., and who during his confinement had been exercising his skill in carving. He had five ships all fully rigged, several castles with grounds laid out, and three bottles which contained bones finely carved and put together in a beautiful shape after being placed in the bottle, one at a time.

THERE was a very pleasant donation party the other evening, and the company sang "We give up all for Heaven" with deep feeling, but the next day the minister expressed a desire to resign. He said that three quarts of beans, a pillow case of dried apples, two pounds of head cheese, a pan of twisted doughnuts, and a calico dressing gown were undoubtedly very valuable in their way, but they seemed to him to form an unnatural basis to preach sound theology from.

THERE is but little rye sown in this country for cattle food, and still it is well known that for fall and early spring pasture it cannot be excelled. Especially is rye valuable for sheep in spring that are suckling lambs. It forms rich, succulent food, and should be granted more attention.

OUR MINISTER'S SERMON.

The minister said last night, says he,
  "Don't be afraid of givin';
If your life ain't worth nothing to other folks
  Why, what's the use of livin'?"
And that's what I say to my wife, says I,
  There's Brown, the miserable sinner,
He'd sooner a beggar would starve than give
  A cent toward buyin' a dinner."

I tell you our minister is prime, he is,
  But I couldn't quite determine,
When I heard him a givin' it right and left,
  Just who was hit by his sermon.
Of course there couldn't be no mistake
  When he talked of long-winded prayin',
For Peters and Johnson they sot and scowled
  At every word he was sayin'.

And the minister he went on to say,
  "There's various kinds of cheatin',
And religion's as good for every day
  As it is to bring to meetin';
I don't think much of the man that gives
  The loud amens at my preachin',
And spends his time the followin' week
  In cheatin' and overreachin'."

I guess that dose was bitter enough
  For a man like Jones to swallow;
But I noticed he didn't open his mouth,
  Not once, after that, to holler;
Hurrah, says I, for the minister!—
  Of course I said it quiet—
Give us some more of this open talk—
  It's very refreshin' diet.

The minister hit 'em every time,
  And when he spoke of fashion,
And riggin' out in bows and things,
  As woman's rulin' passion,
And comin' to church to see the styles,
  I couldn't help a-winkin'
And a-nudgin' my wife, and says I, "That's you;"
  And I guess it set her thinkin'.

Says I to myself, that sermon's pat;
  But man is a queer creation;
And I'm much afraid that most of the folks
  Won't take the application.
Now, if he had said a word about
  My personal mode of sinnin',
I'd have gone to work to right myself
  And not set there a-grinnin'.

Just then the minister says, says he
  "And now I've come to the fellers
Who've lost this shower by usin' their friends
  As a sort o' moral umbrellas;
Go home," says he, "and find your faults,
  Instead of huntin' your brothers';
Go home," says he, "and wear the coats
  You tried to fit for others."

My wife she nudged, and Brown he winked,
  And there was lots o' smilin',
And lots o' lookin' at our pew;
  It set my blood a-bilin'.
Says I to myself our minister
  Is gettin' a little bitter;
I'll tell him, when the meetin's out, that I
  Ain't at all that kind of a critter.

LAST Sunday, says the Brooklyn Argus, there was quite a stir in one of our churches when a gorgeously-robed young stranger swept along the main aisle, preceded by an obsequious usher. All eyes were attracted by her blazing diamonds, her costly laces, the splendor and profusion of her toilet, and when she settled down in a pew, with a mighty rustle, hundreds of female voices seemed to have been guided by a common inspiration as they whispered: "The daughter of a Philadelphia hackman!"

THESE alphabet puns and quirks are very numerous, and a few of the old ones are very good. Here is one: "Majesty stripped of its externals is a jest." This is more than a joke; it is a philosophical truth. Why is the letter s like a sewing machine? Because it makes needles needless—more ingenious than true, by the way. Here's another that we recall: Why is the absence of the letter m like the presence of a hand-organ? Because—of course—it makes u-sic of music! There is another: "Y is the Fourth of July?" When pronounced orally, it sounds like an unfinished conundrum, and the enunciator thereof like an idiot; whereas it is, in fact, a great orthographic truth.

THE WHIPPING-POST.

Eleven Thieves Under the Lash in Delaware.

[Wilmington (Del.) Cor. Philadelphia Times.]

On Saturday the ponderous iron gates of the New Castle jail, in this State, were thrown open in the morning, and a motley gathering of men, women, and children, black and white, crowded in to witness the degrading punishment of a lashing upon the bare back that eleven thieves were to recive in accordance with sentences of the court. When the gates were thrown open on Saturday, the first sight that met the eye was that of two white men, Enoch Rash and James Bradey, who had been guilty of breaking into a store, standing in the pillory, where they remained one hour each, and were taken down greatly stiffened from this punishment. Robert Harris, a negro, was next put into the pillory, where he remained for the space of one hour. His offense was assault and battery with intent to kill. During this time the crowd had greatly thinned out, but when the announcement was made that the whipping would begin they gathered within the yard again. Enoch Rash was the name first called out by the sheriff, and he came forth, a tall, muscular white man, led by a deputy. He was bared to the waist, and, apparently still suffering from the effects of his confinement in the pillory, stood bravely up to the post while his hands were fastened in the iron clamps. The sheriff, armed with a cat-o'-nine-tails, asked if all was ready, and commenced to rain on the blows, thirty in number, which were counted by a deputy as they fell. The quivering flesh reddened at first, and finally the blood found its way to the surface, while the prisoner writhed in his agony, and his face was the very picture of suffering and despair. He was taken back to his cell stiff and sore. James Bradey, who was the accomplice of Rash in the crime, was also hit thirty lashes by the sheriff, but bore it with a great deal more fortitude than the other, and, notwithstanding the blows fell thick and fast, not a muscle of his face changed, and he in no way gave evidence of the intense pain he must have suffered. James Darah had stolen a pocket-book containing $8, and for this he stood up to the whipping-post in a very defiant manner to receive twenty lashes, which were put on with heavy strokes. Charles Harrison, a negro, for larceny, received ten lashes without a murmur. Thomas Hyde was whipped with twenty lashes for stealing a lot of old clothing. Isaac Hoyden, a fine specimen of manly form, had taken a beefsteak and a small lot of scrappel from a farmer's wagon, and for this received twenty lashes with intense suffering. The prisoner twisted and almost fell upon his haunches in his endeavors to escape the blows. His back was terribly scarred, and he went back to his cell in great agony. Thomas Davis, for robbery, was given twenty lashes that burst the flesh, and Samuel Bush was given the same number for participation in the theft. William L. Cooper, a negro, had stolen a buffalo robe and received twenty lashes, and David Reed, negro, for larceny, also received twenty lashes. In addition to the whipping each of them has to undergo a term of imprisonment, pay restitution money, and wear a convict's jacket for six months after their release. The sight was apparently much enjoyed by the spectators. There was a batch whipped the Saturday previous, many, of whom begged piteously for mercy and begged the sheriff to desist.

Business Revival.

The revival of business may now be regarded as fairly begun. Senator Thurman remarked some time ago that it takes this country four years to recover from a panic. The four years have not yet expired, but there are signs that their expiration will witness a complete return of prosperity to every branch of American industry. The immense sales of dry goods in this city two weeks ago showed a healthy condition of trade; dealers were willing to buy largely at low prices, showing a return of confidence and an increased demand for goods. The rumors of war in the East stimulated the foreign demand for our breadstuffs, and have had a perceptible effect on our exports. The reduction of some thirty cents a hundred on freight charges between Chicago and this city has set an immense quantity of grain in motion and given a new stimulus to trade in the whole Northwest. Farmers are shipping their stores of wheat and corn and buying manufactured goods in return. The Western railways report largely increased earnings for May, and the gain on some of the Western roads amounts to thirty per cent. This is an unerring thermometer, and shows the rising temperature of trade.

It is more than probable that the revival of business and prosperity will be largely if not entirely due to the improved condition of the West. Most of the late railway transactions at the Stock Board were on Western roads, which maintained their position very fairly against a market decline both in number of sales and of prices. The West has suffered severely these two years in consequence of the stoppage of all railway building to speak of, and the impossibility of shipping grain so as to realize anything for it in return. Farmers could not buy goods, nor even pay the mortgages on their land and buildings. Cheap transportation means an immense buying capacity in the West. It means that farms which were worth $5 an acre last year are worth $20 an acre to-day. But for twenty years the West has been building railways through sparsely settled districts, and along the sites of possible cities and towns. These roads did not pay even running expenses in some instances, and their failure entailed severe losses on capitalists and thousands of men of limited means who invested in them. But these roads have already begun to develop the resources of the regions they run through. They have attracted settlers, built up flourishing villages and towns, created cities, made unsuspected mineral deposits available, and are now fast becoming valuable property. But they are also quadrupling the value of the lands they pass through and provide transportation for. Farms that ten years ago were held at a merely nominal price are now worth in some instances from $20 to $30 an acre. Men who owned thousands of acres now find themselves rich by the natural development of business and increase of population. The whole Northwest has been steadily growing in reserved wealth and strength for the last ten years in an entirely unprecedented manner, and now only needs available outlets to the great seaboard cities to become immensely rich and unprecedently prosperous. These facts give increasing significance to the present indications of a revival of business. It is not a wave that may ebb in a few weeks, but the rise of a river that will steadily increase in volume and speed.—New York Graphic.

Of Jewish Descent.

The Jewish Chronicle accounts for the interest Dom Pedro takes in Jewish affairs by the fact that he is of Jewish descent. During the persecutions of the Jews in the Spanish peninsula in the middle ages, many Jews left or pretended to leave the religion of their fathers, and were known as "New Christians." They became numerous, and married extensively with families of noble birth. A certain King of Portugal, says the Chronicle, becoming alarmed at the power wielded by individuals of Jewish descent, issued a decree that every person with Jewish blood in his or her veins should appear at court, distinguished by a white badge, the King hoping by this edict to banish all such persons from his court, as he believed no one would be willing to acknowledge his Jewish blood. On the day named he was surprised to see more than three-fourths of his court wearing the white badge, and he was astounded when the Prime Minister entered, himself wearing, in a conspicuous manner, the same emblem. He asked him furiously what his business was. His answer was: "I have come to carry out your majesty's orders. Here are two white badges (at the same time producing them); one is for her royal majesty, your august spouse—" "And for whom is the other?" thundered the King. The reply was: "For your royal majesty!"

Toys and Toy Making.

"In Paris," says the Boston Journal of Chemistry, "there are about five thousand workmen employed in the exclusive trade of toy manufacture. The chief essential in this art is the procuring the substances—the raw material—to be used, for unless these can be obtained for next to nothing, the finished work would have to be sold too dear to allow of its success. The barrels of sham guns, so dear to the warlike male offspring of the modern Gaul, are wrought up out of old sardine boxes. Dolls' boots are made of the coverings of discarded purses, and their dresses and trimmings of the old worn out stage costumes of actresses, gathered from every theater, great or small. For the little pewter instruments used in dolls' houses, such as plates, knives, spoons, bottles and fire-irons, the toy-makers press into their service the metal belonging to old water pipes and spouts, worn-out roofing and the filings collected in work-shops. But the most striking and horrible revelation remains yet unmade. Whence comes the lead of which these resolute German and English soldiers are made who stand so bravely on their thin ledge of ground to be picked off by peas and marbles? Let not any boys with tender susceptibilities or a tendency to melancholy be made aware of the answer. They are forged out of the metal cut from ancient coffins dug out of the old cemeteries at Nuremburg."

An Irish Bull.

The ruling passion of bull-making strong in death, or its near neighborhood, was strongly illustrated in another story McKee was fond of telling—that of two Irishmen who were strolling along the docks of Liverpool, penniless and without any prospect of securing money or employment. Presently they came to a placard:

Royal Humane Society.
£2 reward for saving a life!
£1.10 for recovering the body!

"Dennis," said Mike, "Dennis, d'ye see that? I'll fall overboard and you'll jump in and reshcue me, and we'll divide the reward, which'll be a pound apiece." "Agreed," said Dennis. "Here goes," and a minute later Mike was floundering in the water. But no sooner had he fallen in than Dennis, to his inexpressible horror, remembered that he didn't know how to swim, and so instead of springing in and rescuing the drowning man he stood leaning over the rail staring at the bubbles which marked where Mike had sunk. Once he came up, but Dennis gave no sign. Twice he came up, but Dennis could neither move or utter a word. For the fatal third time he came to the surface and faintly exclaimed: "Denny, av ye ain't d—d quick it's only fifteen shillin's aich we'll get for recoverin' the body!"

What One Rabbit Did.

A team owned by a farmer named Conley, of Lanesboro, Minn., became frightened at a rabbit jumping from the bushes, and ran away. They left the road and ran into a ravine. The ground was sideling and the wagon was overturned violently, and Mr. Conley was made a prisoner beneath the box, with the wagon, weighing several hundred pounds, piled on top. Mr. Conley was scratched and bruised and almost helpless, and, to add to his misfortune, was away from the public road in a secluded spot. He was perfectly powerless beneath the wagon-box, and was compelled to remain there a part of two days and the whole of one night, and he only escaped then by cutting a hole through the wagon-box with his pocket-knife. One of his horses was killed, and the wagon and harness more or less damaged.

Downward Career of an Actor.

About eight years ago J. K. Emmet, before then a negro minstrel, started out as a "Dutch" comedian and won popularity and fortune in a play called "Fritz." He is said to have made $450,000 in five years, as his ability to draw large audiences enabled him to dictate terms with managers. Drunkenness was one of the results of his success. A letter in the San Francisco Post says that on the stage of the Opera-house in Melbourne, Australia, he was recently so drunk that he fell while trying to dance, and soon afterward fell asleep in the midst of a scene. The stage manager roused him and led him behind the scenes, and the audience departed in disgust.

Pizarro and the Inca of Peru.

The most atrocious event in the life of Pizarro was the treatment of the native ruler, the Inca. As he was [illegible] tending [illegible] willing to lend [illegible] some troops to fight against his brother, with whom he had quarreled, Pizarro invited him to a feast, and when he was thus thrown off his guard he suddenly made him a prisoner, and caused nearly 10,000 of the Peruvian soldiers to be treacherly murdered. The Inca quickly discovered that to attempt to escape was utterly hopeless, and he soon understood why he had been captured. It was to secure the ransom which [illegible] knew full well would be paid for his release. The sum that the [illegible] offered for his liberty was [illegible]. We are told that the room in which he was confined was eighteen feet wide [illegible] twenty feet long, and that in this [illegible] he agreed to heap solid gold as high as he could reach if Pizarro would let him go.

The terms were accepted by the Spaniard, and soon no less than two million ounces of gold were piled up, and paid as the ransom of the Inca! And what happened next, do you think? By command of Pizarro, the poor Inca was executed almost immediately after the gold had been handed over to the Spaniards!

"A Drop of Joy in Every Word."

FLEMINGTON, Hunterdon Co., N. J., June 26, 1874.

DR. R. V. PIERCE, Buffalo, N. Y.: Dear Sir—It is with a happy heart that I pen these lines to acknowledge that you and your Golden Medical Discovery and Purgative Pellets are blessings to the world. These medicines cannot be too highly praised, for they have almost brought me out of the grave. Three months ago I was broken out with large ulcers and sores on my body, limbs and face. I procured your Golden Medical Discovery and Purgative Pellets, and have taken six bottles, and to-day I am in good health, all those ugly ulcers having healed and left my skin in a natural, healthy condition. I thought at one time I could not be cured. Although I can but poorly express my gratitude to you, yet there is a drop of joy in every word I write. God's blessing rest on you and your wonderful medicines is the humble prayer of

Yours truly,
JAMES O. BELLIS.

When a medicine will promptly cure such terrible eating ulcers and free the blood of the virulent poison causing them, who can longer doubt its wonderful virtues? Dr. Pierce, however, does not wish to place his Golden Medical Discovery in the catalogue of quack patent nostrums by recommending it to cure every disease, nor does he so recommend it; but what he does claim is this, that there is but one form of blood disease that it will not cure, and that disease is cancer. He does not recommend his Discovery for that disease, yet he knows it to be the most searching blood cleanser yet discovered, and that it will free the blood and system of all other known blood poisons, be they animal, vegetable or mineral. The Golden Discovery is warranted by him to cure the worst forms of Skin Diseases, as all forms of Blotches, Pimples and Eruptions, also all Glandular Swellings, and the worst form of Scrofulous and Ulcerated Sores of Neck, Legs or other parts, and all Scrofulous Diseases of the Bones, as White Swellings, Fever Sores, Hip Joint and Spinal Diseases, all of which belong to Scrofulous diseases.

THE GREAT FAMILY MEDICINE.—Dr. Wilhoft's Anti-Periodic or Fever and Ague Tonic! No case of incurable Chills has yet presented itself, where this scientific and safe medicine has been employed. No case has been found so obstinate as to resist its prompt and masterly action. No man has been so reduced by malarial influences, but with its use has come up perfectly reconstructed. No pills or purgative required with this medicine. G. R. FINLAY & Co., Proprietors, New Orleans.

FOR SALE BY ALL DRUGGISTS.

IF Johnson's Anodyne Liniment is half as valuable as people say it is, no family should be without it. Certainly no person, be he lawyer, doctor, minister, or of any other profession, should start on a journey without it. No sailor, fisherman, or woodsman should be without it. In fact, it is needed wherever there is an ache, sprain, cut, bruise, cough or cold.

PIMPLES on the face, rough skin, chapped hands, saltrheum and all cutaneous affections cured, the skin made soft and smooth, by the use of Juniper Tar Soap. That made by Caswell, Hazard & Co., New York, is the only kind that can be relied on, as there are many imitations, made from common tar, which are worthless.

FARMERS and "Horse Men" are continually inquiring what we know of the utility of Sheridan's Cavalry Condition Powders, and in reply, we would say, through the columns of this paper, that we have heard from hundreds who have used them with gratifying results; that is also our experience.

THAT sour-tempered, cross, liver-complaint individual we passed yesterday, should take Dr. J. H. McLean's Strengthening Cordial and Blood Purifier. It imparts strength, vitality and pure blood. Dr. J. H. McLean's office, 314 Chestnut street, St. Louis.

IF you have any form of ague, no matter how obstinate, or how much other medicine you have taken to no purpose, Shallenberger's Pills will cure you. Price one dollar.

WHAT IS VEGETINE.—It is a compound extracted from barks, roots and herbs. It is nature's remedy.

Dr. Schenck's Pulmonic Syrup, Sea Weed Tonic and Mandrake Pills.—These medicines have undoubtedly performed more cures of Consumption than any other remedy known to the American public. They are compounded of vegetable ingredients, and contain nothing which can be injurious to the human constitution. Other remedies advertised as cures for Consumption probably contain opium, which is a somewhat dangerous drug in all cases, and if taken freely by consumptive patients, it must do great injury; for its tendency is to confine the morbid matter in the system, which, of course, must make a cure impossible. Schenck's Pulmonic Syrup is warranted not to contain a particle of opium; it is composed of powerful but harmless herbs, which act on the lungs, liver, stomach and blood, and thus correct all morbid secretions, and expel all the diseased matter from the body. These are the only means by which Consumption can be cured, and as Schenck's Pulmonic Syrup, Sea Weed Tonic and Mandrake Pills are the only medicines which operate in this way, it is obvious they are the only genuine cure for Pulmonary Consumption. Each bottle of this invaluable medicine is accompanied by full directions. Dr. Schenck is professionally at his principal office, corner Sixth and Arch Streets, Philadelphia, every Monday, where all letters for advice must be addressed.

The Medicine that Cures
—IS—
VEGETINE.

Taking into consideration the character of its vouchers, the history of its cures, and the immense increasing demand, VEGETINE may be fairly entitled the leading medicine of the age.

For Scrofula in the blood, VEGETINE is an infallible remedy, and no person need suffer from tumors, ulcers, and all diseases arising from impure blood, if VEGETINE is used according to directions. There is not a case of Scrofula in existence that VEGETINE will not cure, provided, however, the vital functions have not lost their power of action, [illegible] to the contrary notwithstanding.

VEGETINE is [illegible] taste, mild in its influence, and absolute [illegible] action on disease, as the following unquestionable [illegible] will show:

Paid Nearly $400.

January 8, 1875.

H. R. STEVENS, ESQ.:

Dear Sir—When about [illegible] old I was vaccinated. The parties who were vaccinated from the same virus died from the humor. The humor spread over me to such an extent that I was rolled in bran to prevent me from scratching my person. The disease finally settled in my head. I remained in this condition about twenty years, troubled all the time with sores breaking in my head and discharging corruption from my ear. At this time a [illegible] on my neck [illegible] increasing in size until a tumor formed [illegible] I could [illegible] I was taking various remedies for my blood without any substantial benefit.

I then went to a prominent physician in Boston, who, during his treatment of six months, lanced the tumor eight times, which cost me nearly $400. This left me with a rough, aggravated sore, without at all diminishing the size of the tumor, and in a sickly, feeble condition. I consulted another physician in Natick, who, after considerable time, succeeded in healing the sore without reducing the size. At this point I commenced to use VEGETINE, through the earnest persuasion of a friend. After I had taken this medicine about one week, I experienced wonderful sensations. My whole body seemed to be undergoing a radical change, until, finally, the tumor broke and discharged frightful quantities. From this time it decreased in size, until the bunch disappeared, but my neck still bears the ugly scars of the sore and lance. I am now healthy and strong, and able to work every day.

I will also mention that I have been an acute sufferer from inflammatory rheumatism ever since I can remember, until commencing the use of VEGETINE, when almost immediately all rheumatic pains ceased. This statement I volunteer for the purpose of benefiting other suffering humanity, and you will confer a favor by giving it as much publicity as thought proper.

Very gratefully,
O. M. SAVELS,
Ashland, Mass.

MEDICAL SUCCESS in which every poor suffering Man, Woman and Child throughout the Country is deeply interested.

When Dr. Collins began a series of experiments for the purpose of making popular and economical an element in the treatment of disease and ailments which has almost restored the dead to life, he met with that determined opposition and opprobrium that has attended all reformers in the practice of medicine; but the brilliant success of his invention has turned his foes to friends, and numbered his grateful admirers by thousands. The principle of his invention consists in the application of Electricity by means of Voltaic or Galvanic Plates carefully attached together and imbedded in a Porous Strengthening Plaster, so that when applied it shall form a CONSTANT AND CONTINUOUS ELECTRIC BATTERY, held firmly to the skin by the adhesion of the Plaster, which in itself possesses the most valuable medical properties to be derived from the vegetable kingdom. When the Plaster is placed upon the affected part, which can be done as quickly and conveniently as with the ordinary porous plaster—that is, by mere pressure of the hand—the natural warmth and moisture of the skin causes the plates to throw out a current of electricity so gentle that it is scarcely possible to feel it otherwise than by the soothing and grateful warmth produced, yet so penetrating as to stop almost immediately the most excruciating pain, remove soreness, lameness, and draw inflammation from the lungs, liver, kidneys, spleen, bowels, bladder, heart and muscles. It instantly banishes pain and soreness, gives life and vigor to the weakened and paralyzed muscles and limbs, and is so grateful and soothing that once used in the above ailments every other external application, such as salves, ointments, lotions and liniments, will at once be discarded. Even in paralysis, epilepsy or fits, and nervous muscular affections, this Plaster, by rallying the nervous forces, has effected cures when every other known remedy has failed.

A peck of bad apples now costs seventy-five cents, and a person who eats but seventy cents' worth at one sitting can save five cents for soda water.

One of the startling results following the change of editors on the New York World is the anouncement: "Daniel Drew ate three hearty meals yesterday.

Pocket Money for Children.

There is no error more fatal than immagining that pinching a youth in his pocket money will teach him frugality. On the contrary it will occasion his running into extravagance with so much more eagerness when he comes to have money in his own hands as pinching him in his diet will make his appetite only the more rapacious. If you put into the hands of your child more money than is suitable to his age and discretion, you must expect to find that he has thrown it away upon what is not only idle but hurtful. A certain small, regular income, any child above six years of age ought to have. When he comes to be capable of keeping an account he ought to be obliged to do it; he will thereby acquire a habit of frugality, attention and prudence that will be of service to him through his whole life. On the contrary to give a young person money to spend at will, without requiring any account of it, is leading, or rather forcing him upon extravagance and folly.

Mr. Clark, of Pittsburgh Leader, claims to have invented a machine for pacifying cross children. Whether it chokes them or drugs them is not stated.

LETTERS.

By many things we may know a man; by his friends and his photograph-book; by his enemies, and what they say of him; by his suits and pleasures; by the woman he marries, and the woman he might have married, but did not; by his servants, and the household he keeps; his habits; the things he forbids. But by nothing is he better known than by his letters, and how he writes, and whether he is punctillious in answering at once, or uncertain and full of delay; brief in reply or prolix; careful in taking up your points, and satisfactory in the way in which he handles those which it is important to you should be touched on, or haphazard in his replies; clearly focused, or with thoughts a-woolgathereng, given four pages to futitities that are no good to him or you, while compressing all the important parts into one paragraph—if indeed they are not forgotten altogether, or at best huddled up in a postcript written across the page, and difficult to decipher. All these traits come in as parts of the puzzle, by which, when fitted together, can be read the true nature of a man. The tiresome and the trustworthy, the egotistical and the exact, the affectionate, the conscientious, the ostentations—each writes different kind of letter; and all declare themselves with more or less distinctness, according to the amount of training in each, and the more or less influence Education has had on Nature.

SHORT SENTENCES.

Short phrases have ever been the most powerful and beautiful mediums of conveying thought. They are simplicity itself—and simplicity is beauty. Easily understood, no study is required to grasp their meaning. A prophetic politician makes a declaration respecting government, and the people soon catch the spirit and confirm the declaration. Result from such phrases may not be immediate; but the words resounding on until their work is accomplished. Short phrases are comprehensive, and sometimes contain whole volumes. Cæsar's "Veni, vidi, vici," gave the history of a whole campaign. And the last words of the dying Tom Paine—"I take a leap in the dark!"—were a confession of judgment stronger than the infidelity of a lifetime. When the remains of Napoleon Bonaparte were brought to Paris by Prince De Joinville, the entire speech-making was this: "Sire! I present to you the ashes of Napoleon." And Louis Phillippe answered: "I receive them in the name of France." Such was the brief response of a people to the presence of a dead emperor. Sometimes in a single sentence the life and character of some great man stands strangely revealed and individualized. No biography could depict the character of Enoch more clearly than the simple words: "Enoch walked with God, and was not—for God took him." The first chapter of Genesis is a symbol of the power which a few words can embody.

The Man With a Plaster on his Nose.

One day last week a Newark chap walked down Broad street with a plaster on his nose, the following criticisms were passed upon him by his fellow citizens within a short distance between Central Avenue and Market street.

"Nice-looking rooster that is!"

"Been on a fearful bum, and barked his nose against a lamp-post!"

"You always know a man by the nose he keeps!"

"Been sassin his wife, and got a smash on the snoot with a stew-pan!"

"Tried to come it over some fellow, and got whaled. And served him right!"

"Got a red nose, and trying to hide it!"

"Must have blowed fearful on that horn, to burst it in that way!"

"That fellow's carrying a plaster advertisement dodge. But it won't work!"

"B'lieve that man ain't got no sore nose at all! He altered his appearance for somethin' or other, and the perlice ought to spot him?"

"Nice old rum-blossom, that is! If I had it, I would stay in the house and not be seen by anybody!"

And yet the subject of all these uncharitable remarks got his nose skinned trying to get into a crowded revival-meeting!

How it Feels to be Scalped.

"I had been sent on ahead up the hill just were the big stone hut stands by the road, with a boy named Kountz, from Omaha, and sat down to wait for the wagons, which were slowly coming up out of the valley. When the wagon reached us I started along through the rocks and pine bushes to seek a good samp. A few hundred yards further on I looked down a ravine to the right, and saw five mounted Indians ride across the valley. I started to go back to the train, when at least a dozen Indians ran at me out of the bushes, and you bet I ran and hollowed for help. In a minute more two or three of them shot at me I felt a sharp stinging pain in my leg, and another in my left shoulder and I fell. They were upon me in a minute and one of them put his knee in my back while another bit me a clip with a club or a but of a gun I don't know which as I had no time to think. All I knew was I was being scalped my hair was held tight. I felt a hot red hot stinging sort of a pain all around the top of my head—being torn out by the roots—it was too much I couldn't stand it I died—at least I thought I did. But my scalp was saved just as it was being torn off. The boys at the wagons had seen me running saw the Indians and came on—thirteen of them—and got up just in time to prevent the red devils finishing their work. The Indians, as well as my friends thought I was dead. —But I came to again and my scalp was laid back again. It was only half torn off as you will see and is growing again nicely.

An English doctor says that a strong, passionate love will bring on heart disease, and it stands us all in hand to love mildly and with a good deal of lethargy.

Once in a while you can find a woman who doesn't intend to go to the Centennial, but hundreds who can't go like to hug the idea and make some one else feel bad.

Mistaken in the Man.

Rev. Dr. P., the other day, found a pack of playing cards in the possession of his oldest boy, and after giving the lad a thrashing for owning such engines of Satan, the doctor placed the cards in his own pocket, intending to destroy them at the first opportunity. But he forgot about them, and subsequently, while in the cars on his way to the city, he pulled out his handkerchief and the cards came out with it and fell on the floor. The doctor gathered them up with a very red face, and while he was arranging them in his hand, he saw a rough looking man in the seat opposite wink at him. He turned his head away but upon looking around a moment later the man winked at him again. Then he winked several times and finally he came over and sitting down by the side of the doctor, said:

"I say, pardner, what's your little game?"

"I don't understand you sir," replied the doctor.

"Oh, you needen't mind me," said the man. "I'm doing a little at that thing myself. Now how do you work it?

"What do you mean? How do I work what?

"Oh, you know well enough. What do you skin 'em on?

"Skin them! Skin who? Really sir, your remarks are incomprehensible to me.

"Now, see here, I understand the whole thing. You're hunting up somebody to play seven-up with, and you intend to beat 'em out of their money. Now don't you?

"You don't know who you are talking to.

"Now I'll tell you what I'll do There's no man on earth that kin turn jacks faster'n I kin; and let's you and me start up a game on some of these fellers and I'll run three or four jacks up my sleeve with a couple of aces may be and when we get to town we'll divide the profits, and go down and get roaring drunk at the tavern. Is it a bargain?

"You are a scoundrel sir!" exclaimed the doctor. "Let me change my seat, if you please.

"Won't do it? Won't club in with me and try a few games?

"Certainly not, sir.

"Won't lend me them jacks to put in my sleeve?

"You seem to forget that I am a clergyman, sir.

"A cler—! Oh no. You don't mean to say that—that—you ain't a preacher; now honest are you?

"Yes, sir, I am. I am the Rev. Dr. P.,

"Too bad! too bad! Believe me if I didn't think you was one of those fellows who play cards on the cars to gouge greenhorns out of their money. You look like one, anyway, now don't you? And what are you doing with that pack, old man, hey? Would you mind if I showed you how to run 'em over, so's when you play they can't fool you? I'll do it for nothing."

Then Dr. Potts went into the hind car and got off at the next station. When he got home he gave that boy of his a couple of extra floggings in order to ease his feeling.—[Philadelphia Bulletin.

HOW THE OLD HORSE WON THE BET.

BY OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES.

'Twas on the famous trotting ground,
The betting men were gathered round
From far and near; the "cracks" were there
Whose deeds the sporting prints declare;
The swift g. m., old Hiram's nag,
The fleet s. h., Dan Pfeiffer's brag,
With these a third—and who is he
That stands beside his fast b. g.?
Budd Doble, whose catarrhal name
So fills the nasal trump of fame.
There too stood many a noted steed
Of Messenger and Morgan breed;
Green horses also, not a few—
Unknown as yet what they could do;
And all the hacks that know so well
The scourgings of the Sunday swell.

Blue are the skies of opening day;
The bordering turf is green with May;
The sunshine's golden gleam is thrown
On sorrel, chestnut, bay, and roan;
The horses paw and prance and neigh,
Fillies and colts like kittens play
And dance and toss their rippled manes
Shining and soft as silken skeins;
Wagons and gigs are ranged about,
And fashion flaunts her gay turnout;—
Here stands—each youthful Jehu's dream—
The jointed tandem, ticklish team!
And there in ampler breadth expand
The splendors of the four-in-hand;
On faultless ties and glossy tiles
The lovely bonnets beam their smiles
(The style's the man, so books avow:
The style's the woman, anyhow);
From flounces frothed with creamy lace
Peeps out the pug-dog's smutty face,
Or spaniel rolls his liquid eye,
Or stares the wiry pet of Skye—
O woman, in our hours of ease
So shy with us, so free with these!

"Come on! I'll bet you two to one I'll make him do it!" "Will you? Done!"
What was it who was bound to do?
I did not hear and can't tell you,—
Pray listen till my story's through.

Scarce noticed, back behind the rest,
By cart and wagon rudely prest,
The parson's lean and bony bay
Stood harnessed in his one-horse shay,—
Lent to the sexton for the day,
(A funeral—so the sexton said;
His mother's uncle's wife was dead).

Like Lazarus bid to Dives' feast,
So looked the poor forlorn old beast;
His coat was rough, his tail was bare,
The gray was sprinkled in his hair;
Sportsmen and jockeys knew him not,
And yet they say he once could trot
Among the fleetest of the town,
Till something cracked and broke him down,—
The steed's, the statesman's common lot!
"And are we then so soon forgot?"
Ah me! I doubt if one of you
Has ever heard the name "Old Blue,"
Whose fame through all this region rung
In those old days when I was young!

"Bring forth the horse!" Alas! he showed
Not like the one Mazeppa rode;
Scant-maned, sharp-backed, and shaky-kneed,
The wreck of what was once a steed,
Lips thin, eyes hollow, stiff in joints;
Yet not without his knowing points.
The sexton, laughing in his sleeve
As if 't were all a make-believe,
Led forth the horse, and as he laughed
Unhitched the breeching from a shaft,
Unclasped the rusty belt beneath,
Drew forth the snaffle from his teeth,
Slipped off his headstall, set him free
From strap and rein—a sight to see!

So worn, so lean in every limb,
It can't be they are saddling him!
It is! his back the pig-skin strides
And flaps his lank, rheumatic sides;
With looks of mingled scorn and mirth
They buckle round the saddle girth;
With horsey wink and saucy toss
A youngster throws his leg across,
And so, his rider on his back,
They lead him, limping to the track,
Far up behind the starting-point,
To limber out each stiffened joint.

As through the jeering crowd he past,
One pitying look old Hiram cast;
"Go it, ye cripple, while ye can!"
Cried out unsentimental Dan;
"A Fast-day dinner for the crows!"
Budd Doble's scoffing shout arose.

Slowly, as when the walking-beam
First feels the gath'ring head of steam,
With warning cough and threatening wheeze
The stiff old charger crooks his knees,
At first with cautious step sedate,
As if he dragged a coach of state;
He's not a colt; he knows full well
That time is weight and sure to tell;
No horse so sturdy but he fears
The handicap of twenty years.

As through the throng on either hand
The old horse nears the judges' stand,
Beneath his jockey's feather-weight
He warms a little to his gait,
And now and then a step is tried
That hints of something like a stride.

"Go!—Through his ear the summons stung
As if a battle-trump had rung;
The slumbering instincts long unstirred
Start at the old familiar word;
It thrills like flame through every limb—
What mean his twenty years to him?
The savage blow his rider dealt
Fell on his hollow flanks unfelt;
The spur that pricked his staring hide
Unheeded tore his bleeding side;
Alike to him are spur and rein,
He steps a five-year-old again!

Before the quarter pole was past,
Old Hiram said, "He's going fast."
Long ere the quarter was a half,
The chuckling crowd had ceased to laugh;
Tighter his frightened jockey clung
As in a mighty stride he swung,
The gravel flying in his track,
His neck stretched out, his ears laid back,
His tail extended all the while
Behind him like a rat-tail file!
Off went a shoe, away it spun,
Shot like a bullet from a gun.

The quaking jockey shapes a prayer
From scraps of oaths he used to swear;
He drops his whip, he drops his rein,
He clutches fiercely for a mane;
He'll lose his hold—he sways and reels—
He'll slide beneath those trampling heels!
The knees of many a horseman quake,
The flowers on many a bonnet shake,
And shouts arise from left and right,
"Stick on! Stick on!" "Hould tight! Hould tight!"
"Cling round his neck and don't let go—
That pace can't hold—there! steady! whoa!"
But like the sable steed that bore
The spectral lover of Lenore,
His nostrils snorting foam and fire,
No stretch his bony limbs can tire;
And now the stand he rushes by,
And "Stop him!—stop him!" is the cry.
Stand back! he's only just begun—
He's having out three heats in one!
"Don't rush in front! he'll smash your brains;
But follow up and grab the reins!"
Old Hiram spoke. Dan Pfeiffer heard,
And sprang impatient at the word;
Budd Doble started on his bay,
Old Hiram followed on his gray,
And off they spring and round they go,
The fast ones doing "all they know."
Look! twice they follow at his heels,
As round the circling course he wheels,
And whirls with him that clinging boy
Like Hector round the walls of Troy;
Still on, and on, the third time round!
They're tailing off! they're losing ground!
Budd Doble's nag begins to fail!
Dan Pfeiffer's sorrel whisks his tail!
And see! in spite of whip and shout,
Old Hiram's mare is giving out!
Now for the finish! at the turn,
The old horse—all the rest astern—
Comes swinging in with easy trot;
By Jove! he's distanced all the lot!

That trot no mortal could explain;
Some said, "Old Dutchman come again!"
Some took his time—at least they tried,
But what it was could none decide;
One said he couldn't understand
What happened to his second hand;
One said 2:10; that couldn't be—
More like two twenty-two or three;
Old Hiram settled it at last;
"The time was two—too dee-vel-ish fast!"

The parson's horse had won the bet;
It cost him something of a sweat;
Back in the one-horse shay he went;
The parson wondered what it meant,
And murmured, with a mild surprise
And pleasant twinkle of the eyes,
"That funeral must have been a trick,
Or corpses drive at double-quick;
I shouldn't wonder, I declare,
If Brother Murray made the prayer!"

And this is all I have to say
About the parson's poor old bay,
The same that drew the one-horse shay.
Moral for which this tale is told:
A horse can trot for all he's old.

DISAPPOINTED SEEKERS FOR THE PRESIDENCY.

The divine injunction, "Seek and ye shall find," does not—at least, in all its force—apply to all those persons who desire to be placed at the head of the American Union. As there could have been but twenty-two elected Presidents of the United States between 1789 and 1877, even had each President been limited to one term, and as seven Presidents were re-elected, it follows that the number of successful aspirants to our National Chief Magistracy has been but small; while the number of unsuccessful aspirants has been very large, something like a legion, when we count not only those of their number who received nominations or electoral votes, but those also who were "named for nominations," or who were pushed forward by admiring but not very judicious friends. Perhaps a running sketch of the history of Presidential aspiration may not be out of place at this time, when Presidential aspirants are so numerous, and when the host of the disappointed is so sure to be heavily reinforced before the close of the first century of the Republic's life, not a month hence—for there are about a score of men now aspiring to be President Grant's successor, who have fair pretensions to the favors of the parties to which they belong; and yet but two of these men can become candidates with anything, like well-founded hopes of success, and but one of them can be chosen to the Presidency. Then there are twenty more, perhaps, who have been talked of, or "thought of" in limited circles, but of whom the great public, the people, have heard little in any case, and nothing in most cases.

The first and second Presidential elections were not contested, so far as the first office was concerned. Washington was made President without open opposition, receiving on both occasions all the electoral votes; but as the system of voting in the colleges then stood, every man who received a vote was a candidate for one of the two offices that were filled by the action of the electors; and there were no less than ten such persons, with the following result: John Adams, 34; John Jay, 9; R. H. Harrison, 6; John Rutledge, 6; John Hancock, 4; George Clinton, 3; Samuel Huntingdon, 2; John Milton, 2; John Armstrong, 1; and Benjamin Lincoln, 1. With two exceptions, all the men who received these votes were famous revolutionary characters; and Mr. Adams, though he had not a majority of the electoral votes, was legally chosen to the Vice-Presidency, according to the manner of filling the second office in 1789.

Our first contested national election occurred in 1796; and a very close one it was, Mr. John Adams being chosen to the Presidency by 71 votes, and Mr. Jefferson receiving 68 votes; and these last votes made Mr. Jefferson Vice President. It was in that contest that disappointed aspirants began to appear. Some of the Federalists desired that John Jay, of New York, should be their party's candidate, and probably he would have been supported by that party, and Mr. Adams have been set aside, had it not been for the circumstance that he was laboring under the odium that followed from his having negotiated the famous treaty with England—"Jay's Treaty," as it was denominated—and hence he was not available. He can be set down as having aspired to the Presidency, though he did not seek it; and had he remained Chief Justice of the United States Supreme Court, and had he taken no part in politics in 1789–'96, in all probability he would have been our second President, as he was one of the very first men of that period in every respect. But there was another aspirant in 1696 who failed. Thomas Pinckney, of South Carolina, a prominent man, was the Federalist candidate for the Vice Presidency; and it was intended by some of the Federalists that he should be made President, they having an invincible distrust of Mr. Adams. As Gen. Pinckney must have known what it was contemplated to do, we must set him down as having been a very much disappointed man when he found that not only had he been defeated for the Presidency, but that he had failed to get the Vice Presidency. A number of the Adams Federalist electors withheld their votes from him, the plan that had been formed for the defeat of Mr. Adams being thus turned against Gen. Pinckney himself, with fatal effect. Mr. Adams had 71 votes, Mr. Jefferson 68, and Gen. Pinckney 59. In consequence, as already stated, Mr. Jefferson became Vice President. Mr. Adams, it will be seen, came within two votes of being placed at the very head of the long list of disappointed Presidency seekers. Two Southern electoral votes alone saved him from having that disagreeable position forced upon him. "A single voice in Virginia," says his grandson and biographer, "and one in North Carolina, prompted by the lingering memory of revolutionary services, had turned the scale. Had these been given to Mr. Jefferson instead, he would have been President. South Carolina, on the other hand, steady to neither party, manifested the same sectional bias which has ever since marked her policy [this was written in 1856] by dividing her votes between Mr. Jefferson and Mr. Pinckney." It was New England that defeated Gen. Pinckney, for she gave eighteen votes against him, which not only placed him third on the list of candidates, but more than neutralized the support he got in South Carolina. He gained a vote in Pennsylvania, but lost three in Maryland. Had eleven of the eighteen New England votes that were given for Ellsworth, Jay and others been given for Pinckney, he would have been chosen to the Vice Presidency, as he would have had seventy votes, or two more than were given for Mr. Jefferson, and one less than the number received by Mr. Adams. Of the sixteen votes of Massachusetts, thirteen were given for Pinckney.

President Adams failed of a re-election in 1800-1801, and so he must be set down as a semi-disappointed aspirant; and Mr. Jefferson himself came very near being placed on the roll of such aspirants. He and Col. Burr, who were on the Democratic ticket, received the same number of votes (73), and so no man was chosen to the Presidency, as the Constitution then stood, and the election devolved upon the House of Representatives. After balloting for a week, the House elected Mr. Jefferson, and Col. Burr became Vice President. Had one of the New York electors withheld his vote from Jefferson, Burr would have been chosen to the Presidency by 73 votes to 72. Burr was the first of the disappointed Democratic aspirants to the Presidency; and his ruin—which has been pronounced "the profoundest and most striking, with more of moral circumstance in it than that of almost any other man"—was owing, not to his vices, political or personal, or both, but to the incident that he permitted himself to be run against Jefferson in the House of Representatives. Yet his conduct, though it may not have been honorable toward his own party, was in strict accord with the requirements of the Constitution and the laws. He had as good a right to be a candidate in the House of Representatives as Mr. Jefferson possessed—exactly the same right—and had he been chosen, he would have been entitled to the same treatment as Mr. Jefferson received. But it is not the less true that the Jeffersonian party contemplated his overthrow by a resort to arms had he been chosen, though they spoke of their violent intention as if it had reference to action that the Federalists might have taken had the House failed to elect any one to the Presidency.

The election of 1804 saw three Presidential aspirants, who were to be dead failures, on the two tickets. President Jefferson was renominated for a second term and re-elected. Of the 176 electoral votes, he received all but fourteen, so low had the Federalists fallen. The fourteen votes were given for Gen. Charles Cotesworth Pinckney, of South Carolina, elder brother of Thomas Pinckney, and a very distinguished actor in the revolutionary contest. He had been on the ticket with President John Adams in 1800, the anti-Adams Federalists hoping to make him President, and making no disguise as to their views; but he ran one vote behind Mr. Adams, which was given for John Jay, by a Rhode Island elector. Thus he became the Federalist candidate in 1804, but he took nothing by his nomination. Rufus King was on the ticket with him, as the candidate for the Vice Presidency, and obtained the same support, or fourteen votes, which were given by Connecticut and Delaware and by two Maryland electors. The Democrats had removed Col. Burr from their ticket, and their new nominee for the second office was George Clinton, of New York, long Governor of that State, and the most influential man in it. He received the same number of votes that were given for Mr. Jefferson.

In 1808 there were a number of aspirants for the Presidency. Mr. Jefferson, who had resolved to retire, wished to be succeeded by his Secretary of State, Mr. Madison; but Jame Monroes thought he had "claims" on the Democratic party, and he and his friends were very restive. George Clinton wished to proceed, as Mr. Adams and Mr. Jefferson had proceeded, from the Vice Presidency to the Presidency; and New York supported his claims. But everything had to yield to the iron will of Jefferson; and Clinton ran again for the second place under Madison. The Federalists put up their ticket of 1804, Pinckney and King, and more than trebled the vote they had secured for it in the earlier year. Pinckney and King received 47 votes; and Mr. Madison had 122 votes, and George Clinton 113. Quite a number of Democratic votes for the Vice Presidency were diverted from Clinton, nine being given for John Langdon, of New Hampshire, three for Mr. Madison, and three for Mr. Monroe. Six of the New York electors would not vote for Mr. Madison for the first place, and gave their Presidential votes for George Clinton. These were the first signs afforded that the triumphant party was suffering from internal dissensions.

Four years later these dissensions had much increased, and a great effort was made to turn out the Virginian dynasty, but with no other result than to place another disappointed Presidential aspirant in the list to which such men belong. Had George Clinton lived, something effective might have been done; but he died early in 1812, a disappointed man. His nephew, De Witt Clinton, was nominated by the bolting Democrats; and the Federalists held a convention in New York and resolved to support him.

After a warm conflict Mr. Madison was re-elected, he receiving 128 votes; but the 89 votes that were given for De Witt Clinton showed how strong the opposition had become, their vote having gone up, per saltum, from 47 to 89, almost doubling in four years. Elbridge Gerry, of Massachusetts, was chosen Vice President, his vote being 121; and Jared Ingersoll, of Pennsylvania, an old Federalist, had 86.

But before another election could take place, everything had changed. The second war with England was declared in June, 1812; and most of the Northern Federalists had so borne themselves concerning it as to create the impression that they were anxious for the success of the enemy. The masses are always patriotic, and they "frowned upon" the Federalists, who never afterward made any figure as a national party; so that when the Presidential contest of 1816 began, the Democratic party alone had much to do with it. In making their arrangements there was another disappointed aspirant placed conspicuously before the country, and another Southern man; and the Federalist candidate made a third, and a fourth had been created a few years earlier. Early in 1813 John Armstrong, of New York, had been made Secretary of War. He had been a good soldier in the Revolution, and his reputation as a writer and author has remained high, notwithstanding his final failure in politics. He wrote the Newburgh Letters, which made him a sort of American Junius. He served in the National Senate, and he was Minister to France in Napoleon I.'s time. Made a Brigadier General in 1812, he went soon after into the Cabinet. He hoped to be Madison's successor in 1817, but the capture of Washington ruined him, though he was not responsible for that disgraceful event. It was believed that the President wanted to get him out of the way, for the purpose of being succeeded by Mr. Monroe, with whom he had "made up," and who had been appointed Secretary of State, and who acted as Secretary of War after Gen. Armstrong's retirement.

The New Yorkers then sought the nomination of Gov. Daniel D. Tompkins for the Presidency, he having been very useful in supporting the war when at the head of their State; but he had to give way to Mr. Monroe. Mr. Crawford, of Georgia, also had to yield to the Virginian. Mr. Monroe had 183 votes, and the same number was given for Gov. Tompkins, who was chosen Vice President. Rufus King, of New York, the Federalist candidate, received only thirty-four votes for the Presidency, and the same number of votes for the Vice Presidency was distributed among four Federalists.

There was no contest in 1820, Monroe and Tompkins being re-elected with no opposition worth mentioning. Consequently there were no disappointed aspirants created at that time; but at the election of 1824 they cropped out strongly. There were six aspirants to the Presidency as Monroe's administration drew to a close; Mr. J. Q. Adams, Gen. Jackson, Mr. Crawford (who had waived his "claims" in 1816), De Witt Clinton, Mr. Clay and Mr. Calhoun. Mr. Crawford was the "caucus candidate;" Mr. Calhoun postponed his purpose, and became a successful candidate for the Vice Presidency; and De Witt Clinton did not persevere. The contest lay between Crawford and the other three aspirants. There was no choice made by the electors, and Mr. Adams was chosen by the House of Representatives.

In 1828 President Adams was beaten by Gen. Jackson, and thus he, like his father, was disappointed one-half, as he failed only of a re-election. The contest was confined to those two great men, no new aspirants appearing in the field; but in 1832 there were four candidates, two of whom were new men in the Presidential business. President Jackson was re-elected, and Mr. Clay, who had been badly beaten in 1824, was beaten in the same manner in 1832. Mr. Wm. Wirt, who had been United States Attorney General from 1817 to 1829, was the anti-Masonic candidate, and received the electoral vote (7) of Vermont; and to John Floyd, of Virginia, were given the 11 votes of South Carolina.

There were five candidates at the election of 1836, and Daniel Webster, perhaps the greatest of all the disappointed aspirants, obtained the 14 votes of Massachusetts; 26 were cast for Hugh L. White, of Tennessee, an old Jackson man; and 73 for Gen. Harrison. Mr. Van Buren was chosen President, the number of his votes being 170. South Carolina gave her 11 votes to Willie P. Mangum, of North Carolina.

The great battle of 1840 was a square, stand-up fight between the Democrats and the united opposition, and the former were beaten, President Van Buren receiving only 60 votes, and Gen. Harrison 234. With, perhaps, the exception of the campaign of 1872, there is nothing like it in our history. There were no new aspirants in it, but Mr. Van Buren was served like the Adamses, he failing of a re-election. The Whigs lost, or rather they failed to reap, the proper fruits of their victory, because they had made an injudicious nomination for the second office, so that President Harrison's early death was ruinous to them in a short time.

But they rallied bravely, and came very near to success in 1844, when Mr. Clay was their candidate. A new aspirant was brought forward on the Democratic side, Gen. Cass, whose appearance was fatal to Mr. Van Buren's hopes; but the General himself was set aside, and Mr. Polk was nominated and elected. The Liberty party then came forward and supported Mr. James G. Birney, and the Whigs attributed their defeat to that movement, as, they asserted, it took from them more votes in New York alone than would have sufficed to bring about the election of Mr. Clay.

In 1848 there was a great change. The Democrats nominated Gen. Cass, and the Whigs Gen. Taylor—which led to bolting on both sides, and the bolting Barnburners of New York (Van Buren men) united with the bolting Free Soilers in support of a ticket bearing the names of Mr. Van Buren and Mr. C. F. Adams. The result was the defeat of Gen. Cass, who never again was nominated. There had been some talk of nominating either Judge Woodbury or Gen. Wm. O. Butler, of Kentucky, and it was said that both those gentlemen aspired to the Presidential nomination. Gen. Butler was the Democratic candidate for the Vice Presidency.

Another change came in 1852. Mr. Douglas had then become an aspirant, but the Democrats nominated Gen. Pierce, and he was chosen. Gen. Scott, who had long been a Presidency-seeker, was the Whig candidate, and he was utterly beaten; and perhaps his defeat was as great as that of Mr. Van Buren in 1840, save that the popular majority was not so largely adverse to him as it had been to Mr. Van Buren—nor did it begin to approach the enormous popular majority that was given against Mr. Greeley at the last election. Mr. Fillmore, who was serving the balance of the term of President Taylor (who had died in office), had sought the Whig nomination, and so had Mr. Webster, who was a kind of a candidate, but who died a few days before the election was held.

The election of 1856, the first in which the Republican partly figured, was fought between Mr. Buchanan and Col. Fremont, while Mr. Fillmore ran as the Know-Nothing candidate. Col. Fremont was a new aspirant, but Mr. Buchanan long had sought a nomination, and Mr. Fillmore was an old seeker. Mr. Seward had sought the Republican nomination, and was offended because he had failed to get it; and so, it was reported, was the case with Judge McLean, who had been after a nomination for years. Mr. Douglas, who had been in the field for some time, desired the Democratic nomination.

The campaign of 1860, which was the overture to the civil war, had an abundance of Presidential candidates—Abraham Lincoln, John C. Breckinridge, John Bell and Stephen A. Douglas. That of 1864 was not so crowded, and Mr. Lincoln was re-elected. Chief Justice Chase desired to have the Republican nomination, but he failed to get it, as Mr. Seward had failed in 1860. General Fremont continued his aspirations, and was nominated for the Presidency by a few men, who called themselves Radicals; but he soon left the field. General McClellan was supported by the Democrats, but he succeeded only in being placed high among the disappointed seekers of the Presidency.

In 1868 the number of the disappointed was large. Chief Justice Chase sought the Democratic nomination, and so did President Johnson—both in vain. Mr. Pendleton also failed to get it. Horatio Seymour got it and was defeated. The Republicans were united in support of Gen. Grant. Mr. Greeley—a good man and deserving a better fate—was the "great disappointed" of 1872, because he fell into the error of accepting an anti-Republican nomination, and because he virtually consented to be the Democratic candidate for the Presidency. He had been a seeker of the Presidency for some years. He must be set down as having attained to the disagreeable eminence of being the worst beaten Presidential candidate mentioned in our history, because of the many and various bitter incidents that marked and characterized his defeat and fall.

To sum up: There are several classes of disappointed Presidential aspirants, which can be set forth in order:

1. The men who were regularly nominated for the Presidency, and beaten, never reaching the office. They are: Charles C. Pinckney, De Witt Clinton, Rufus King, William H. Crawford, Henry Clay, William Wirt, Hugh L. White, Daniel Webster, James G. Birney, Lewis Cass, Winfield Scott, John P. Hale, John C. Fremont, Stephen A. Douglas, John Bell, John C. Breckinridge, George B. McClellan, Horatio Seymour, and Horace Greeley. Mr. Birney and Mr. Hale received no electoral vote.

2. The men who, being regularly nominated, sought to be re-elected to a second term, they being in office, and failed. They are: John Adams, John Quincy Adams, and Martin Van Buren.

3. The men who, being in office, to which they had been regularly chosen, sought nominations for second terms, and failed to get them. They are: James K. Polk, Franklin Pierce, and James Buchanan.

4. The men who had succeeded to the Presidency because of the deaths of Presidents, they having been chosen to the Vice Presidency, and who sought nominations, with the view of being regularly elected. They are: John Tyler, Millard Fillmore, and Andrew Johnson.

5. The men who received electoral votes for the office, but who had not been formally nominated for the Presidency. They are, Thomas Pinckney, George Clinton, John Floyd, and Willie P. Mangum.

We do not make a list of the present aspirants, the names of whom are printed every week in most of the newspapers, or occur daily in common conversation.

7. It only remains to mention that Aaron Burr forms a class apart from other disappointed aspirants, as he was voted for in the House of Representatives for the Presidency, for which office he had not been nominated.—Boston Journal.

Marvelous Progress of Civilization in Japan.

The rapidity with which the Japanese are assimilating the habits and science of the West is one of the greatest marvels of the age. Civilization, until now, has always taken the opposite course to that of the sun, and the change going on in these far eastern islands is not mere external imitation, but an absolute internal transformation. A few years ago an Imperial College of Engineering was established in the principal island, with the view of educating native engineers for the Department of Public Works. Admission is obtained by competitive examination, the course of instruction is very complete, and the college is at present under the management of English professors, the English language having apparently been adopted as the scientific tongue. In connection with this institution there are well-fitted laboratories and workshops of various kinds. The special courses are civil and mechanical engineering, telegraphy, architecture, practical chemistry, and metallurgy. The number of students at the close of last year was 272. Energetic measures are being adopted by the Government for introducing the improved manufacture of iron into the country. With this view, two charcoal blast furnaces and other works are in course of erection, and it is expected that by the close of the present year twelve puddling and seven reheating furnaces, forge train, plate, rail, bar, guide and mills, with steam hammers, four different shears, saws, lathes, cranes, and all other necessary appliances of the most modern construction, will be in operation.

Chasing a Fox One Hundred Miles.

S. A. Pointer has one of the best packs of hounds to be found in the State. Their progenitors were purchased in England for $200. During the week they caught five red foxes in the vicinity of Thompson's Station. One of the foxes, Capt. Pointer says, was chased 100 miles, according to a close calculation made by one of the neighbors, and was so run down at the close of the one hundredth mile that one of the huntsmen dismounted from his horse, caught the fox by the tail, and only had time to stamp at its head once, when the first hound came up and finished Reynard.—Nashville American.

In 1849 Prince Torlonia, the Roman banker, advanced 200,000 francs to a Neapolitan on a diamond so large and limpid and piercing in the polish of its many faces that none but the keenest connoisseur could distinguish it from the famous "Regent." At the Hotel Drouot, in Paris, the self-same "precious stone" was sold early in April of this year for twenty francs fifty centimes, or about $4.

FATHER'S FONDNESS.

BY FREDERICK LOCKER.

You sleep upon your mother's breast,
Your race begun,
A welcome, long a wished-for guest,
Whose age is one.

A baby-boy, you wonder why
You cannot run;
You try to talk—how hard you try!—
You're only one.

Ere long you won't be such a dunce;
You'll eat your bun,
And fly your kite, like folk, who once
Were only one.

You'll rhyme and woo, and fight and joke,
Perhaps you'll pun;
Such feats are never done by folk
Before they're one.

Some day, too, you may have your joy,
And envy none;
Yes, you, yourself, may own a boy
Who isn't one.

He'll dance, and laugh, and crow, he'll do
As you have done;
(You crown a happy home, tho' you
Are only one.)

But when he's grown shall you be here
To share his fun,
And talk of days when he (the dear!)
Was hardly one?

Dear child, 'tis your poor lot to be
My little son;
I'm glad, though I am old, you see—
While you are one.

TWO LITERARY ladies were lately witnesses in a trial. One of them, upon hearing the usual questions asked, "What is your name?" and "How old are you?" turned to her companion and said: "I do not like to tell my age; not that I have any objection to its being known, but don't want it published in all the newspapers." "Well," said the witty Mrs. S——, "I will tell you how to avoid it. You have heard the objection to all hearsay evidence; tell them you don't remember when you were born, and all you know of it is by hearsay." The ruse took, and the question was not pressed.

Shaving by the Acre.

It is recorded that a gentleman residing in one of the large towns of England, whose face exceeded the ordinary dimensions, was waited on by the barber every day for twenty-one years without coming to a settlement. The barber, thinking it about time to settle, presented his bill, in which he charged a penny a day, amounting in all to £31 16s 9d. The gentleman, supposing too much charged, refused to pay the amount, but agreed to a proposal of the barber to pay at the rate of £200 an acre. The premises were accordingly measured, and the result was that the shaving bill was increased to £73 6s.8d.

A TERRIBLE DEED.

A Young Man Poisons his Father and Mother and a Boarder at their House.

[Easton (Pa.)] Cor. New York Times.]

The mystery attending the deaths which have occurred in the Laros family within the last few days, by poison, has at last been cleared up by the confession of the murderer, Allen C. Laros, the son of two of the victims. On Wednesday last the family of Martin Laros, residing on the Delaware, at a place called Mineral Spring, about five miles above Easton, consisting of himself, his wife, six children—Allen, Alvin, Erwin, Alice, Clara, and Flora—and Moses Schug, who boarded with them, were taken more or less ill immediately after supper. One of the younger children, who was not so much affected, was sent to seek assistance, and she at once sought out an elder brother, Clinton J. Laros, who had not supped with the family, and asked him to go with her to the house. He did so, and upon his arrival he saw that the greater number of the family were desperately ill, and immediately sent for medical aid. Dr. A. K. Seem, of Lower Mount Bethel, was called, and, finding that all the symptoms indicated that they had been poisoned, administered emetics and applied other remedies to relieve their sufferings. Toward midnight they all grew worse, however, and Dr. Junkin, of Easton, was sent for. At his suggestion other antidotes were administered, but they did not prove efficacious in all the cases, as Mrs. Laros, the mother of the family, died at 7 o'clock the next (Thursday) morning. Mr. Laros, the father, died at 1 o'clock on the same day, and Moses Schug, the boarder, at 3 o'clock on Friday afternoon. As it had been remarked at the supper table that there was a strange taste about the coffee, the vessel in which it had been prepared was examined, and a heavy white sediment was found at the bottom. An analysis of this substance was made, and it was found to be arsenic, and the quantity was stated to be sufficient to kill 100 persons. No cause could be assigned for the act, and for some days the whole affair was enveloped in mystery. At length it was discovered that a secretary in which Mr. Laros was known to have deposited a sum of money had been broken open and the cash stolen, and that Mr. Schug's trunk had also been robbed of a pocket-book containing $150 in United States currency. When this became known, suspicion was directed toward Allen C. Laros, one of the sons of the family, a young man about twenty-one years of age, who was engaged in teaching school at Schneimertown, near by. His character was known by many persons to be bad, and they had no hesitation in expressing their belief that he was the murderer. This opinion, however, did not seem to be borne out by by the facts, for he had supped with his family on the night which they were poisoned, and he himself complained of having experienced the effects of the poison.

At the Coroner's inquest, Dr. C. A. Voorhees, of Easton, said that, a few days before, a man had called at his store, and purchased fifty cents' worth of arsenic for rat poison. Since that occurrence he had seen Allen C. Laros at his residence, and to the best of his knowledge he was the person to whom he had sold the arsenic in his store. The jury, after a short deliberation, returned the following verdict:

"We find that Martin Laros came to his death from the effects of arsenical poison, administered in coffee, on Wednesday evening, May 31, 1876, and that we believe the same was administered by Allen C. Laros."

A separate verdict was brought in for each of the victims. A warrant was immediately issued for the arrest of Allen C. Laros, and officers of the law went to his room, where he was lying in bed, and informed him that he was their prisoner. Clinton Laros, a brother of the prisoner, asked him if he knew anything about the affair, and he replied that if he knew anything about it he would tell. The officers then began to search the house, and, while they were engaged in this, about ten minutes after the arrest had been made, Laros suddenly called out, "I did it." Mr. Sandt, one of the jurymen, and the officers then went into the room, and the prisoner made the following confession, which was reduced to writing and signed on the spot:

I did it; the money is out between the privy and sheep-stable; this was done on Wednesday evening, the same night that I put the poison in the coffee-pot; I knew he (his father) had money, but did not know how much; I took the money before I put the poison in the coffee-pot; I took Schug's money, too, but don't know how much; I took none of his papers; I did this so that they might all be dead, and I could do with the money whatever I pleased—that nothing more would be said about it; I confess, also, that the money taken from the place a long time ago I took, too; I don't know how much it was, but I think it was $50 or $60; I took swallows of the coffee, too; I was just as sick as I pretended to be; I only drank it so as to throw them off suspicioning me; I took a false oath this afternoon; I know it is very wrong what I have done; I want you to pray for me, and ask all of God's people to pray for me; I have no wife nor children; my name is Allen C. Laros; I took the silver out of my father's drawer and put it in Moses Schug's pocket-book; I found Schug's pocket-book in his chest in the garret; Schug's pocket book was a new one, and father's is an old one; this is my confession, true and faithful, made in the presence of Samuel Sandt, Jr., William Bitters, and George Schooley. ALLEN C. LAROS.

The money was found where the prisoner said he had placed it. Mr. Laros' pocket-book contained in all $91.80, and that of Mr. Schug $250. When taken where the bodies of the victims lay, the sight did not seem to make much impression on the murderer. He attempted to kiss the faces of his parents through the openings in the ice boxes, but not being able to reach them he passed his hand over the faces, and shortly after left the room. He was then taken to Easton by the officers, and lodged in jail. In personal appearance, the murderer is rather prepossessing, and might be called a handsome young man.

Alvin Laros, ten years of age, was worse yesterday, having quite a high fever, and was disposed to rest the greater part of the time. The two still sick are not quite out of danger, as ulceration may set in, and the patients may die within a week or ten days. The others seem to be well and entirely out of danger.

A Nautical Incident.

They were returning from a moonlight excursion to Rockaway. The sea was quite rough, and the little steamer rose and fell, with every pulsation of the great deep, like the bustle of a stormy woman. After studying the sky and ocean for about one hour in silence, he turned to her and said:

"Dear Georgiana, you will be mine! You will give me your hand and heart?"

"Oh, Alfred," she answered, turning deadly pale, "I'd rather give you my stomach."—Brooklyn Argus.

The Washington Monument.

To the People of the United States:

The approach of the one-hundredth anniversary of the nation's birth vividly brings before the mind of all true lovers of the country the memory of him who was "first in war, first in peace, and first in the hearts of his countrymen."

The monument to commemorate a people's gratitude to George Washington has remained in an unfinished condition for more than twenty years, under the shadow of the National Capitol; it is now 174 feet, and when completed will be 485 feet high—a plain and simple obelisk, surrounded at the base with a stone terrace twenty-five feet high and 200 feet in diameter. The cost to finish it is estimated at $500,000.

In the name of gratitude, patriotism, and national pride the Monument Society renews its earnest appeal for aid to discharge a duty our country owes to the brightest name in human history.

What more fitting time for the people throughout the length and breadth of our land to make their grateful offerings to this noble work, to show their reverence for the name of the "Father of his Country," than this Centennial jubilee of universal rejoicing for the possession of our glorious free institutions and amazing progress in all that makes and constitutes an enlightened, powerful, and great nation!

We appeal to the ministers of the gospel and Superintendents of Sabbath-schools to take up a collection on Sunday, the 2d day of July next, or any convenient day before or thereafter; above all, we appeal to the sovereign people, the impregnable bulwark of the nation's safety, for the means of completing the monument.

We respectfully request that all contributions may be sent direct to J. B. Smith, Treasurer of the Washington National Monument Society, at Washington, D. C.

We ask the liberal and patriotic press of the country to keep this appeal before the public up to the Fourth of July ensuing.

By order of the Society.

JOHN B. BLAKE, Secretary,
WASHINGTON CITY, June, 1876.

Yankee Doodle.

After the Ministers Plenipotentiary of Great Britain and the United States had nearly concluded their pacific labors at Ghent, the burghers of that quaint old Dutch city determined to give an entertainment in their honor, and desired to have the national airs of the two treaty-making powers performed as a part of the programme. So the musical directors were requested to call upon the American Ministers and obtain the music of the national air of the United States.

A consultation ensued, at which Bayard and Gallatin favored "Hail Columbia," while Clay, Russell, and Adams were decidedly in favor of "Yankee Doodle."

The musical director asked if any of the gentlemen had the music, and, receiving a negative reply, suggested that perhaps one of them could sing or whistle the air.

"I can't," said Mr. Clay; "I never whistled or sung a tune in my life—perhaps Mr. Bayard can!"

Mr. Russell, Mr. Gallatin, and Mr. Adams in turn confessed their lack of musical ability.

"I have it!" exclaimed Mr. Clay, and ringing the bell he summoned his colored body-servant.

"John," said Mr. Clay, "whistle 'Yankee Doodle' for this gentleman."

John did so, the chief musician noted down the air, and at the entertainment the Ghent Burghers' Band played the national air of the United States with variations.

Says the Green Bay (Wis.) Advocate: "It was many years ago, in 1843. There were not many white men around Green Bay at that time. Five was a crowd, and a dozen a convention. There were several at Kankanio (now called Kaukauna) one day in that year. A blue-bird was observed in the distance to fly and alight. Col. Tuljar, of Green Bay, expressed the opinion that he could shoot it. The idea seemed ridiculous, but the Colonel picked up a Kentucky rifle about six feet long and blazed away, and the bird fell. An investigation proved that the bird was shot in the head, and that the distance was about a mile and a quarter. The Colonel was no shot, but this triumph was a mere accident.

George W. Lawe kept a house at that point, and it was here where the feat had been performed. An Indian stood there, clad solely in a breech clout, and when the result was made known the Indian privately inquired of the Colonel how he aimed. He answered:

"Right between the eyes."

The Indian stepped up, took off his sole article of dress, and laid it on the counter, exclaiming:

"Treat um white man; whisky."

Revolting.

The journals of Sweden publish details of a revolting scene at an execution in that country. Two men named Hjert and Fektor were guillotined for the murder of a railroad engineer, whose carriage they had mistaken for the mail, which they intended to rob. A large crowd of spectators assembled around the scaffold, and after the criminals had been dispatched drank or licked the blood, taking it up with spoons or with their fingers from the wood of the platform. There appears to exist among the people a belief that the blood of a criminal is a remedy or a preventive against many diseases.

A MISER who kept his money in a jug has just died near Polrick, Va., and among the $1,170 found was the first piece of money he ever owned, a dime. During his life it was not known where he kept his treasure, and he always said that none of his kinsfolk should ever have any of it, but he once expressed a wish to be buried near his money, so that he could guard it, and a hunt near the spot he designated as his burial place disclosed the jug. The money was divided equally among eight heirs.

From Humility to Excellence.

A few weeks ago an English gentleman gave an address in Philadelphia, in which he alluded to the effect of the Exhibition of 1851 upon the British people. Up to that date, he said, the people had been vain of themselves, and vain of their achievements. Brought face to face with other nations, and becoming for the first time aware that in many departments of art they had everything to learn from those whom they had previously despised, they were left by that Exhibition utterly humbled. They had nothing to say for themselves, except to confess that they had been self-flattering fools, and nothing to do but to put themselves resolutely to the task of overtaking the world around them. The result of a quarter of a century of work has been wonderful. During these twenty-five years the art of England has been transformed. The South Kensington Museum is a child of that early Exhibition, and is probably the finest museum in the world. There are five hundred schools of art in Great Britain, nearly all of which had their roots in that national humiliation.

This frankly-speaking gentleman did not leave his lesson to be inferred, but told his audience that he thought it likely that when the Centennial Exhibition should be closed, the American nation would find itself precisely in the condition of the British nation in 1851.—Dr. J. G. Holland; Scribner for July.

HAVE you ever heard of a case of Ague that Shallenberger's Pills would not cure?

VEGETINE is perfectly harmless from any bad effect upon the system.

Dr. Schenck's Pulmonic Syrup, Sea Weed Tonic and Mandrake Pills.—These medicines have undoubtedly performed more cures of Consumption than any other remedy known to the American public. They are compounded of vegetable ingredients, and contain nothing which can be injurious to the human constitution. Other remedies advertised as cures for Consumption probably contain opium, which is a somewhat dangerous drug in all cases, and if taken freely by consumptive patients, it must do great injury; for its tendency is to confine the morbid matter in the system, which, of course, must make a cure impossible. Schenck's Pulmonic Syrup is warranted not to contain a particle of opium; it is composed of powerful but harmless herbs, which act on the lungs, liver, stomach and blood, and thus correct all morbid secretions, and expel all the diseased matter from the body. These are the only means by which Consumption can be cured, and as Schenck's Pulmonic Syrup, Sea Weed Tonic and Mandrake Pills are the only medicines which operate in this way, it is obvious they are the only genuine cure for Pulmonary Consumption. Each bottle of this invaluable medicine is accompanied by full directions. Dr. Schenck is professionally at his principal office, corner Sixth and Arch Streets, Philadelphia, every Monday, where all letters for advice must be addressed.

"THE VIBRATOR"

1000 SOLD LAST SEASON
WITHOUT ONE FAILURE OR REJECTION

This is the famous Threshing machine that has "swept the field" and created such a revolution in the trade, by its MATCHLESS GRAIN-SAVING AND TIME-SAVING principles.

THE NICHOLS, SHEPARD & CO.
"VIBRATOR"

THE ENORMOUS WASTAGE of grain, so inevitable with other styles of Threshers, can be SAVED by this Improved Machine, sufficient, on every job, to more than pay all expenses of threshing.

FLAX, TIMOTHY, MILLET, HUNGARIAN and like seeds are threshed, separated, cleaned and saved as easily and perfectly as Wheat, Oats, Rye or Barley.

AN EXTRA PRICE is usually paid for grain and seeds cleaned by this machine, for extra cleanliness.

IN THE WET GRAIN of 1875, these were substantially the ONLY MACHINES that could run with profit or economy, doing fast, thorough and perfect work, when others utterly failed.

ALL GRAIN, TIME and MONEY wasting complications, such as "Endless Aprons," "Raddles," "Beaters," "Pickers," etc., are entirely dispensed with; less than one-half the usual Gears, Belts, Boxes, and Journals; easier managed; more durable; light running; no costly repairs; no dust; no "litterings" to clean up; not troubled by adverse winds, rain or storms.

FARMERS and GRAIN RAISERS who are posted in the large saving made by it will not employ inferior and wasteful machines, but will insist on this improved Thresher doing their work.

FOUR SIZES made for 6, 8, 10 and 12 Horse Powers. Also a specialty of SEPARATORS, designed and made EXPRESSLY FOR STEAM POWER.

TWO STYLES OF HORSE POWERS, viz.: our improved "Triple Gear," and our "Spur Speed" (Woodbury Style), both "Mounted" on four wheels.

IF INTERESTED in Threshing or Grain Raising, apply to our nearest Dealer, or write to us for Illustrated Circular (sent free), giving full particulars of Sizes, Styles, Prices, Terms, etc.

The Wonders of Modern Chemistry.
Sarsaparillian and Its Associates.
Changes as Seen and Felt as They Daily Occur after Using a Few Doses of

DR. RADWAY'S
Sarsaparillian Resolvent,

THE GREAT BLOOD PURIFIER.

1. Good spirits, disappearance of weakness, languor, melancholy; increase and hardness of flesh and muscles, etc.

2. Strength increases, appetite improves, relish for food, no more sour eructations or waterbrash, good digestion, calm and undisturbed sleep, awaken fresh and vigorous.

3. Disappearance of spots, blotches, pimples; the skin looks clear and healthy, the urine changed from its turbid and cloudy appearance to a clear sherry or amber color; water passes freely from the bladder through the urethra without pain or scalding, little or no sediment; no pain or weakness.

4. Marked diminution of quantity and frequency of involuntary weakening discharges (if afflicted that way), with certainty of permanent cure. Increased strength exhibited in the secreting glands, and functional harmony restored to the several organs.

5. Yellow tinge on the white of the eyes, and the swarthy, saffron appearance of the skin changed to a clear, lively and healthy color.

6. Those suffering from weak or ulcerated lungs or tubercles will realize great benefit in expectorating freely the tough phlegm or mucous from the lungs, air cells, bronchi or windpipe, throat or head; diminishing of the frequency of cough; general increase of strength throughout the system; stoppage of night sweats and pains and feeling of weakness around the ankles, legs, shoulders, etc.; cessation of cold and chills, sense of suffocation; hard breathing and paroxysms of cough on lying down or arising in the morning. All these distressing symptoms gradually and surely disappear.

7. As day after day the SARSAPARILLIAN is taken, new signs of returning health will appear; as the blood improves in strength and purity, disease will diminish, and all foreign and impure deposits, nodes, tumors, cancers, hard lumps, etc., be resolved away and the unsound made sound and healthy; ulcers, fever sores, syphilitic sores, chronic skin diseases gradually disappear.

8. In cases where the system has been salivated, and Mercury, Quicksilver, Corrosive Sublimate, (the principal constituent in the advertised Sarsaparillas, associated in some cases with Hyd. of Potassa) have accumulated and become deposited in the bones, joints, etc., causing caries of the bones, rickets, spinal curvatures, contortions, white swellings, varicose veins, etc., the SARSAPARILLIAN will resolve away these deposits and exterminate the virus of the disease from the system.

9. If those who are taking these medicines for the cure of Chronic, Scrofulous or Syphilitic diseases, however slow may be the cure "feel better," and find their general health improving, their flesh and weight increasing or even keeping its own, it is a sure sign that the cure is progressing. In these diseases the patient either gets better or worse—the virus of the disease is not inactive; if not arrested and driven from the blood, it will spread and continue to undermine the constitution. As soon as the SARSAPARILLIAN makes the patient "feel better," every hour you will grow better and increase in health, strength and flesh.

The great power of this remedy is in diseases that threaten death—as in Consumption of the Lungs and Tuberculous Phthisis, Scrofula, Syphiloid Diseases, Wasting, Degeneration, and Ulceration of the Kidneys, Diabetes, Stoppage of Water (instantaneous relief afforded where catheters have to be used, thus doing away with the painful operation of using these instruments), dissolving stone in the bladder, and in all cases of Inflammation of the Bladder and Kidneys, in Chronic cases of Leucorrhea and Uterine diseases.

In tumors, nodes, hard lumps and syphiloid ulcers; dropsy and venereal sore throat, ulcers, and in tubercles of the lungs; in gout, dyspepsia, rheumatism, rickets; in mercurial deposits—it is in these terrible forms of disease, where the human body has become a complete wreck, and where every hour of existence is torture, wherein this great remedy challenges the astonishment and admiration of the sick. It is in such cases, where all the pleasures of existence appear cut off from the unfortunate, and by its wonderful, almost supernatural agency, it restores the hopeless to a new life and new existence where this great remedy stands alone in its might and power.

In the ordinary skin diseases that every one is more or less troubled with, a few doses will in most cases, and a few bottles in the more aggravated forms, work a permanent cure.

Those afflicted with chronic diseases should purchase a package containing one dozen bottles. Price $10 per dozen, or $5 per half dozen bottles, or $1 per bottle. Sold by druggists.

Old John Robinson as a Doctor.

"Howdy, Mary."

"Howdy, George."

"Folks all well at your house, Mary?"

"All well thank you, George, how's all yours?"

"Only tolerable, Mary; mother's been right poorly for the last week with the ager and Jim is still laid up with the rheumatics."

"Well George, mother says that she was cured sound and well of the rheumatism by a simple recipe, which was given nigh on to twenty years ago by an old showman, and if you think Jim will use it, I'll tell you what it was."

"I'm sure he'll try almost anything that would afford him relief for he suffers terribly at times."

"Well, George, the way mother makes it is this: she takes camphor and laudanum, equal parts, a big handful of salt, and puts it all in a pint of whisky; let it stand till the salt and camphor is dissolved, and then rubs the liquor thoroughly on the sore places and in a few days the pain will all leave."

"If that's the case, Mary, Jim shall have a bottle before an hour longer.

"Mother says it is a sure cure George.

"But tell me, Mary, who was the showman who told your mother about this cure?

"Why, Old John Robinson was his name, and his Big Show is going to be in Auburn Tuesday July 18th, Mother says we children may all go."

"Mary, don't you think you would enjoy the show just as well if you rode in my new buggy?

"What all alone George?"

"Of course not. How could you drive them colts of mine?"

"It would suit me first-rate if you drove them, George."

"That settles it, Mary; Old John Robinson is bound to sell me two tickets sure, on Tuesday July the 18th, when his menagerie and circus comes to Auburn."

The St. Louis Democrats think they see the shady horse in the person hf Col. Broadhead, of their village. Cir culars setting forth his peculiar fitness and great availability were freely distributed last night.

Governer Hays acknowledges that he is entirely unfitted both by nature and education to discharge in an acceptable manner the high duties of President. Yet the Republican press insist that he is the best nomination that could have been made.

Strawberries are about "played."

The town was full of people Saturday

This has been a hard year on bridges.

The farmers are busy plowing corn.

Well, what are you going to do about it.

Two or three fights on the Fourth was all.

Something that was—the Butler newspaper.

The roads are in a bad condition for hauling.

Where was the street sprinkler on the Fourth, eh?

Mr. Yandes, left for his new position yesterday.

The fire works were sent forth from the Court House belfry.

Jno. Britton got the Bill Board contract for Robinson's show.

We noticed Mr. Zollars of Fort Wayne on our streets this week.

We expect Mr. Mays home about the 20th of this month to stay.

Hayes' Club the other night—"When shall we three meet again?"

We fears that old Mr. Griswold has been quite ill for several days.

Billy Edgerton has a new sign. Billy is bound to keep his side up.

Pull down our vest and call for what you want, is the latest advise.

We are delayed this week on account of having to set up a show ad.

Joe Beugnot had some fine music at his saloon yesterday afternoon.

Jno Hebel is quite ill. Centennial beer did'nt operate in good shape.

Pete Brandon is the first man what raised the Cucumbers in this town.

The police did their duty well, on Tuesday, and deserve great credit.

The new brick block is finished, as far as the brick laying is concerned.

Prof. Conley, of Fort Wayne, lead the string band at the hall on the 4th.

Out young kids are on the run—not toward the wood-pile we don't mean.

Pea-nuts and Lemonade stands were too thick on the Fourth for the crowd.

Why is the Centennial like home? Because it's the dearest spot on earth.

The bowerdances were well patronized in the afternoon and evening of the 4th.

The weather came off nice on the 3rd. The first day we had no rain for a long time.

W. H. Adsetts, of Ohio, has been visiting friends in the city for several weeks.

Mr. A. F. Pinchin and daughter, of Butler, gave us a brief but pleasant call yesterday.

The Central House gave a free dinner to the band on the 4th. Marcle is always in the ring.

H. H. Stamets showed out a centennial flag, the handiwork of his lady employed.

The sign on the Republican office fell yesterday morning. Is that a sign of a general fall.

We would like to have money come in a little faster, if those who owe us have no objection.

Miss Annie Rainier has returned from Philadelphia, pays many compliments to the world's fair.

The Fruit House is always up with the times. It showed out 25 or 30 centennial lanterns after dark.

The Hook and Ladder company have too much practice. If we have a fire they will be worn out. Ahem.

Things are going to be hot—red hot this campaign. If you want a live paper, subscribe for the COURIER.

Long & Casebeer furnished the organ for the music at the grove on the fourth. If Peterson can't play it, who can.

We met many of the friends of the COURIER on the 4th. They were too numerous for us to give each name.

Of course we had a roasted ox. Each one cooked a piece of their own at home and went to the grove and ate it.

Although our saloons were closed on the Fourth, there were quite a good many fellows full enough for comfort.

Hiram Rasley has started a new harness shop over Lauferty's store. He has a large amount of friends in the county and will do well.

We have received a new paper from Bryan, Ohio, called the Fountain City Argus, edited by Shoof & Williams, which presents a neat and sensible appearance.

Mr. M. C. Marcle has purchased the Imported Norman grey horse, which has been at Ford & Parent's livery barn this summer.

Mr. Follett, the jig and clog dancer gave several entertainments for those that shook the fantastic on the evening of the 4th.

J. C. Reed, Esq., will give a grand dance at Cedar Creek, next Saturday afternoon and evening. A cordial invitation is extended to all.

If you want to hear a bell organ, step into M. F. Long's, Esq., on Fourth street, and let Walt Peterson play "In the Cottage by the Sea."

A centennial pole was raised on the 3rd. It was hickory, and what beats us is about all interested in it were Republican. Hickory is hard wood, boys.

E. Foltz had the misfortune to hurt his hand on the 3rd, and that let us out for one tenor drummer. He had the satisfaction of carrying the flag.

When a woman throws a brick-bat, the great problem seems to be, not how to hit the mark, but how to avoid knocking her brains out with her elbow.

The North Carolina election will be held this year in November instead of August, the time having been changed by recent constitutional amendments.

Beecher preached an open-air service in Brooklyne, Conn., on the second Sunday in July. He ought to go out and air himself frequently, if not oftener.

Geo Picker, Esq., one of the best brick layers in the state has the contract for building a brick school house, at No 16, and a new brick residence for Alex. King.

Mr. W. H. DeSenga has started a harness shop in with Mr. Funk, on the cor of Seventh & Main street. Will is a good workman and deserves a part of the patronage.

The M. E. society will meet at the church on Saturday next. A general invitation is extended. Owing to the celebration on the 4th it was postponed to the above time.

The lamp-posts have been taken down by the marshal. One good thing for the tax-payers of Auburn by electing a Democratic Board. Don't forget these little things at the County Convention.

We received a communication from Corunna, going for the night-watch. If the original name was signed we might publish it, but it is to personal to do otherwise. If you want any backing call on Hayes & Wheeler.

When a man goes in one saloon after another and asks for a drink on tick, and the bar-tender in each place says "I don't know you," he begins to think that he is the great unknown.

Fort Wayne has at last concluded the contract for the building of her water works. The contract price is $380,000, which includes the purchase of the feeder dam and four and a half miles of the feeder canal.

The rain last Sunday made about a hundred men, women and, children get up and dust from the meeting at the Grove. A little exercise dont hurt any one, but some other day should be chosen. We never run a foot—our home was right side of us.

Bro Weamer got on the good side of the committee on fire works and they gave him a "Roman Candle," which he sent forth from his office window with about as much move as a two year old firing a horse pistol. He took a rest shoot it off, so as not to do damage to any buildings.

A good off-set for the complaints of "too much rain" is thus furnished by the Corydon Democrat: "It was Gov. Willard who once said in a speech as it began raining. "The more rain the more corn, the more corn, the more whisky, the more whisky the more Democrats. Let it rain."

It is estimated that there are 5,000 laboring men out of employment at Indianapolis. But as a compensation for this condition of things, fifteen baloons was sent up from there on the 4th. And that accounts for Garrett turning off so many hands. They sent one up, too.

A lady remarked in our presence that Little, of the COURIER "goes on bums." —Garrett News.

Nothing surprises us more than to know that a lady would speak to Bro. Parker at all. Please imagine the Kennallville brewery, and a one "hoss" dray. Cheese it, or soap it, will you please.

A Foot Race was arranged yesterday between W. H. Adsetts of Auburn, and Frank Scott of Jonesville, Mich., to run 100 yds. Scott receiving 12 feet start. Those whose duty it is to examine daily the leading Republican Journals of the country must be forced to the conclusion that the leaders of that party think the Democrats have the best chance to elect the next President. A black cloud has been hovering over the party since the hour of Belknap's fall.

They sat in the parlor and he squeezed her hand. "Oh, would this hand were mine," he sighed. Why? she simpered. "Because if it was mine I could knock a bullock down with a sledge hammer." The last seen of the young man, he was trying to climb on the top of the house by means of the water spout. This happened on Ensley's Avenue. Now, you needn't think it was Melinda.

What is pleasanter these nice mornings than getting up and taking a sunrise walk of four or five miles before breakfast? Nothing, certainly, unless it is lying in bed and thinking about it.

It rains seven days in a week. making it entirely too wet to plow corn, or make hay both of which need to be done. Now we believe a little in the gospel, and think that it ought to rest on the seventh day.

Croquet is getting to be a popular game. They have a new way of playing it. Its like this. You get about fifteen together and in the middle of the game you commence breaking mallets over your antagonists head. It wont do for us to give our solid opinion because we think more of our head than we do of the right side of a bass drum. Excuse us please.

We have received a postal card headed Auburn select school, to commence on August 1st, 1876, conducted by M. S. Gandy & Mrs. Thomas. It would be pleasure for us to do anything for the town of Auburn, but when it comes to a half column "for fun," we're like the fellow that was kicked with a mule. "Please count us ou-et."

The typo is accused of making many errors—sometimes truly and sometimes falsely—and yet the worst typographical error extant is found in some of the bibles of some of our christian gentlemen and ladies. It was never discovered until the "Centennial Fourth" brought it to view. The sweet-toned warblers found what Jesus of Nazareth said unto her of Samaria, was. "Get thee behind me, Satan," instead of saying, as in the common version, "Woman, go and sin no more."

The following from Rev. C. R. Shear, still again wishes to express our gratitude to the good people of Auburn for their generous treatment, and the kindly spirit manifested toward us. We are happy in the consciousness that we possess the esteem and confidence of many friends. The Donation party of last Friday evening will ever remain among the pleasant memories. Please accept thanks.

REV. & MRS. SHEAR.

Growing Old.

It is the solemn thought connected with middle life that life's last buisness is begun in earnest; and it is then, midway between the cradle and the grave, that man begins to marvel that he let the days of youth go by so half enjoyed. It is the pensive autumn feeling—it is the sensation of hale sadness that we experience when the longest day of the year is past, and every day that follows is shorter and the light fainter, and the feebler shadows tell that nature is hastening with gigantic footsteps to her winter grave. So does man look back upon his youth. When the unwelcome truth fastens itself upon the mind that man is no longer going up hill but down, and that the sun is always westering, he looks back on things behind. When we were children we thought as children. But now there lies before us manhood, with its earnest work, and then old age, and then the grave, and then home. There is a second youth for man, better and holier than his first, if he will look on and not look back.

TO OUR BRAVE SOLDIER BOYS.

BY WM MALLORY.

Sleep Soldiers' sleep, thy rest is sweet,
And shall not be disturbed again
By wars dread carnage mortal strife,
Till thou shall rise to endless life.

Sleep Soldiers sleep thy warefares ore
A soldiers grave is now thy bed;
Then rest thy body now in sleep,
While watchful angels round thee keep.

Sleep soldier sleep, thy life was given.
To save our land, from slavish chains;
To give us freedom North and South,
Life without this, what is it worth.

Sleep soldier sleep, beneath the sod
Where we will strew our flowers to-day;
The living come, with soften tread,
To view again, thy dusty bed.

We come to decorate once more,
The hallowed spot where rests our brave
To scatter flowers above the breast
Of loved ones who in silence rest.

We've come we've come, with mufled drums
The stars and stripes are born aloft,
The flag you loved for which you fought
To save that flag so dearly bought.

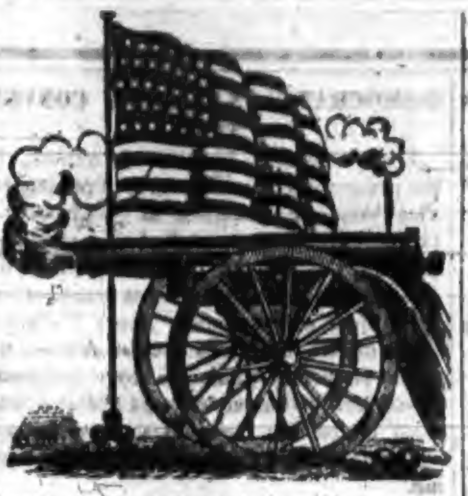
To save that flag, you gave your life
Your lives you gave to freedoms cause;
To save from southern tyrany
To save our land and make us free,

A debt of gratitude we owe
To those our noble soldier boys
Whose graves are strewn all ore the land
Caused by southern rebels hand.

Upon their graves, we strew our flowers
In memory of our loved ones here
Tis all that we can do to-day,
But watch and weep, to hope and pray.

Sleep on sleep on ye hero band
Sleep on a while beneath the sand
Till Gabriel's trump shall wake the dead
The golden streets then you may tread.

The above was written to be read during decoration ceremonies but there not being time they were deferred. I hereby give it through the press.



The Centennial Fourth!

A Large Crowd in the Afternoon!

QUIET AND PEACEABLE!

Nothing a Failure but that OX!

The Speeches and Choir Singing at the Grove were Splendid!

The Decorating of the Soldiers' Graves a put up Job.

Fire Works in the Evening!

The Fourth of July celebration at this place will never be forgotten on account of everything working so smoothly which of course, gave entire satisfaction to all. The crowd was immense in the afternoon, being almost impossible to pass along the side-walks. All were quiet and peaceable except a few who got on a "peanut drunk," and they are certainly excused. We noticed no failure particularly in the programe except the roasted Ox. We dont say they did'nt have a roasted ox. It may be that each one of the old settlers roasted a piece at home and took it out in the grove and ate it. The speeches and choir singing at the grove was more than usual, both being exceedingly well done. The decoration of the soldiers' graves was simply a "Republican dodge," to to get the soldiers' vote. This, if we ain't mistaken, is the first decoration we know of in this county, and from the programme selected we have formed the above opinion. "Success go with them." The fire works in the evening was the same as other places had, Sky-rockets, Roman-candles, baloons, and these fellows that turn around, and—these fellows that turn around.

Tom Scott had his own fire works, turpentine balls They passed over the ground like an evening star—but not so much so when they lit.

The Auburn Band done slpendid, and we heard many compliments for them.

The marshal bands were numerous, and all played "The Girl I left behind me" to perfection. If they had been in our boots they would have no necessity for that tune. All the girls we saw was in front of us, four abreast.

RELIGIOUS SERVICES.

A PLEASANT TIME AT THE GROVE.

Revs. Shear, Johnson and Welsch on the Stand.

Last Sabbath afternoon a large concourse of people met at the grove, and by request, Mr. Shear, gave some very interesting and appropriate remarks. Part of the sermon was for the good of the people generally, and we think Mr. Shear is capable of expressing the english language equal to any Minister in Northern Ind.. We are also glad to know that he and his accomplised lady have joined the M. E. Church. We learn that three others were accepted as members on the same day.

The Presbyterian church took nine new members on last Sabbath, and about forty have been added to the church since Mr. Johnson has taken charge of it The congregation are wide-awake and in no distant day will have one of the finest church structures in Indiana. We also learn that the M. E church have their new building, in rear of the old one, finished and that it is used for societies, festivals, &c. Not only us but a greater part of our citizens are glad to know that our churches are fast gaining ground, and that ere long many of our prominent men and buisness men will be the leading ones of the churches. The day is coming and fast at that, when Auburn can rejoice over the above work. Let a still greater effort be made.

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

THE EAST.

MRS. LARVEY MCCARTY and four children were badly burned by a kerosene-lamp explosion at Ogdensburg, N. J., last week. The mother and one daughter have died, and the other two children are in a precarious condition.

THE Beecher scandal is likely to be reopened. A commission has been agreed upon for prosecuting another investigation of the matter.

THE efforts of Chief Washburn and his assistants of the United States Secret-Service Bureau, which have been directed for several months to breaking up an extensive counterfeiting business in New York city, have met with complete success, and have resulted in the capture of the entire gang of counterfeiters, including some of the most dangerous and experienced in the business. The gang has been in existence for a long time. Nearly $100,000 worth of the queer, together with a large lot of plates, dies, and other paraphernalia of the profession, were seized. The gang had facilities for issuing at least $20,000 per month, or about $250,000 a year. The detectives expect that these arrests will lead to the capture of forty or fifty more counterfeiters in different parts of the country. This is said to be the most extensive seizure of counterfeit money ever made in the United States, with the exception of the Griggs case in Illinois last winter.

THE American Linen Mill, at Fall River, Mass., was damaged by fire, last week, to the amount of $200,000. The disaster will necessitate the shutting down of the company's works for several months, and throws out of employment 1,100 people.

THE WEST.

Discouraging reports reach us regarding the ravages of the chinch bug and the Hessian fly in the wheat fields of Northwestern Illinois, Western Wisconsin, Northern Iowa and Southern Minnesota.

THE distillers who had been convicted of and pleaded guilty to frauds against the Government were sentenced at Chicago last week. A. C. Hesing received two years in the county jail, and $5,000 fine; George T. Burroughs, one year and $3,000; O. B. Dickinson and Jonathan Abel, each three months in jail and $1,000 fine; Simon Powell, six months and $3,000; "Buffalo" Miller, the same; H. J. Pahlman, D. G. Rush, Philo P. Hutchins and David Cochrane, each three months in jail and $1,000 fine; William Cooper, three months and $200....The 400th anniversary of the Battle of Murten, which gave to Switzerland her independence, was celebrated with enthusiasm by the Swiss and German population of Chicago, on Sunday last.

A WAGON-TRAIN from Gen. Crook's camp arrived at Fort Fetterman, last week bringing the wounded in the late engagement. They endured the trip well, and all are likely to recover. Gen. Crook will make short excursions with the cavalry until the return of the train and infantry, when he will endeavor to strike the Sioux hard.

A SAD case of drowning is reported from La Crosse, Wis. John Magee, accompanied by his wife and two children, his father-in-law and brother-in-law, visited the city in a small skiff for the purpose of shopping. They loaded their bark and started to return home. When near Goose Island the boat struck a snag and capsized, throwing the occupants and goods into the Mississippi. The father-in-law, brother-in-law, and one child managed to get hold of the overhanging bushes, being near the shore, and were saved, but Magee, who did all he could to save his wife and child, sank with them, both clinging to him, and all were drowned.

THE SOUTH.

EX-SECRETARY BRISTOW arrived at his home in Louisville one day last week, and in the evening an immense crowd of his friends and neighbors called on him informally and gave him a hearty welcome to his old Kentucky home. The reception was participated in by men of all parties.

WASHINGTON.

THE Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate has served some twenty-five subpœnas on persons in Washington to appear as witnesses for the defense of Gen. Belknap. Among the number are Mr. Riggs, the banker, several army officers, and a number of private citizens, who will be asked by Belknap's counsel to testify in his favor. The subpœnas for persons at a distance from Washington have not been served, and most of them probably will not be served until after the trial begins.

THE President has nominated Henry P. McCormick United States District Attorney for the Western District of Pennsylvania, and C. Waters for United States District Attorney for the Eastern District of Arkansas.

THE President issued the following proclamation on the 26th ult.:

The Centennial anniversary of the day on which the people of the United States declared their right to a separate and equal station among the powers of the earth seems to demand an exceptional observation. The founders of the Government at its birth and in its feebleness invoked the blessings and protection of a Divine Providence, and the thirteen colonies and 3,000,000 of people have expanded to a nation of strength and numbers commanding a position which then was asserted, and for which fervent prayers were then offered. It seems fitting that on the occurrence of the one-hundredth anniversary of our existence as a nation a grateful acknowledgment be made to Almighty God for the protection and bounties which He has vouchsafed to our beloved country. I therefore invite the good people of the United States on the approaching 4th day of July, in addition to the usual observances with which they are accustomed to greet the return of the day, further, in such manner and at such time as in their respective localities religious associations may find it most convenient, to mark its recurrence by some public religious and devout thanksgiving to Almighty God for the blessings which have been bestowed upon us as a nation during the centenary of our existence, and humbly to invoke a continuance of His favor, and of His protection.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington, this 26th day of June, in the year of our Lord 1876, and of the independence of the United States of America the one hundredth.

(Signed) U. S. GRANT.

A WASHINGTON dispatch says: "When Earl Derby makes an explanation of the reasons why the British Government adhered to its demand that the United States must guarantee that Winslow should only be tried for the offense on which his extradition was based, it is said in diplomatic circles the main reason will be shown to be the desire to perpetuate peace and good will between England and the United States."

THE vacancy in the United States Treasurership, caused by the resignation of Mr. New, has been filled by the appointment of Mr. A. N. Wyman, the present Assistant Treasurer.

T. Yaryan, Chief of the Revenue Agents....James Gillan, of Connecticut, has been appointed Assistant United States Treasurer.

GENERAL.

THE mystery about the famous "Favo" telegram to Caldwell, in London, dictating the Blaine exculpatory dispatch that was cabled to the Judiciary Committee, is at last partially cleared up. A young man named Reed, a former clerk of Caldwell, acknowledges the authorship. He does not know, however, how Mr. Blaine learned that the Judiciary Committee had received the dispatch.

EDWARDS PIERREPONT, the new Minister to England, sailed from New York for his post last week.

SEVEN members of the Indiana whisky ring have been pardoned out of the Penitentiary by the President....Bishop George D. Cummins, of the Reformed Episcopal Church, died at his residence at Lutherville, near Baltimore, last week.

FORTY-FOURTH CONGRESS.

FRIDAY, June 23.—Senate.—The Senate discussed throughout the day, and passed, the bill to amend the Enforcement act. The Army Appropriation bill was passed, as amended by the Senate committee. It strikes out the first eight sections of the House bill, reducing and reorganizing the army, and most of the other amendments are supplementary to this. The bill increases the appropriation about $3,000,000 over the House bill, and follows quite closely the revised estimates of Secretary Taft. It is $1,000,000 less than the bill of last year.

House.—The House passed the bill authorizing the construction of a pontoon-bridge across the Mississippi from LaCrosse to Houston county, Minn....Kasson introduced a joint resolution providing that, when the two Houses adjourn on Saturday, the 1st of July, it shall be to meet on Tuesday, July 4, at Independence Hall, Philadelphia, there to consider a joint resolution commemorative of the Centennial anniversary of American independence....Neal introduced a bill to repeal the Resumption act, and called for the previous question. The House refused to second the call by a vote of 77 to 100....An effort was made to pass the President's resolution continuing the current appropriations into the next fiscal year, and until the regular appropriation bills are passed, but the motion was defeated—55 to 112....The bill for the relief of Edward O'M. Condon was passed.

TUESDAY, June 27.—Senate.—The Senate voted to insist upon its amendments to the Legislative, Executive and Judicial Appropriation bill, and a new conference committee was appointed....A long report from the Secretary of the Treasury showing the amount of balances due the Government from public officers, since 1836, was laid on the table and a condensation ordered printed.... Logan reported from the Committee on Military Affairs the House joint resolution to authorize the issue of arms, etc., with amendments which provide that the number of arms issued to any State mentioned shall not exceed 1,000, and to any Territory the number shall not exceed 500. The resolution was passed.

House.—The bill in regard to the sale of spirituous liquor in the Indian Territory was passed; also the bill providing for the sale of the Cherokee strip of land in Kansas....The committee appointed at the request of Mr. Adams, Clerk of the House, to investigate the published charge against him, unanimously reported that in no instance did he, directly or indirectly, receive pecuniary or other consideration for any appointment made by him.

WEDNESDAY, June 28.—Senate.—After passing the House bill for the sale of the Kansas Indian lands, in Kansas, to actual settlers, the Senate resumed the consideration of the House bill for the issue of coin, and the substitute therefor proposed by the Senate Committee on Finance.

House.—The Senate amendments to the Army Appropriation bill were non-concurred in. The Speaker appointed, as a committee of conference, Atkins, Randall and Hurlbut....Payne, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, reported back the amendments to the Silver Coin bill, recommended a concurrence in them, and moved the previous question. The amendments were non-concurred in.

THURSDAY, June 29.—Senate.—Windom reported, with amendments, the Sundry Civil Appropriation bill....Sargent, from the conference committee on the Naval appropriation bill, made a report that the committee had agreed upon the bill, and, in explanation of the report, said the House conferrees had accepted the legislative amendments of the Senate in regard to the employment of force in navy-yards.... House.—A message was received from the Senate informing the House that the Senate had agreed to the report of the conference committee on the Naval Appropriation bill....Holman, from the committee of conference on the Postoffice Appropriation bill, submitted the report of that committee, informing the House that the committee had not been able to agree, and asked for another committee. The report was adopted, and the Speaker appointed Holman, Clark of Missouri, and Hale as the new committee of conference....The Speaker pro tem. laid before the House a memorial of the National Board of Trade, in session at New York, that silver coin shall not be made legal-tender for any sum beyond $5. Referred....The House met in the evening and debated the Geneva Award bill.

DEMOCRATIC NATIONAL CONVENTION.

The Democratic National Convention, for the nomination of candidates for President and Vice President, assembled in the Chamber of Commerce, in the city of St. Louis, at noon on Tuesday, the 27th of June. The convention was called to order by Augustus Schell, of New York, upon whose motion Henry Watterson, editor of the Louisville Courier-Journal, was made temporary Chairman by a unanimous vote. Mr. Watterson delivered a brief address upon taking the chair, at the conclusion of which Bishop Marvin invoked the Divine blessing.

The Chair, after naming Frederick O. Prince, of Massachusetts, as temporary Secretary, and T. O. Walker, of Iowa, and T. R. Doniphan, of Ohio, as Assistant Secretaries, announced the convention ready for business.

Mr. Abbott, of Massachusetts, offered a resolution that the rules of the last National Democratic Convention govern this body until otherwise ordered.

After some discussion the resolution was adopted.

Mr. Smalley, of Vermont, offered a resolution for a call of the States for the announcement of committees on permanent organization and on credentials. Agreed to, and the call proceeded, with the following result:

Alabama, Leroy P. Walker; Arkansas, L. V. Mangum; California, John S. Hagar; Colorado, F. J. Marshall; Connecticut, R. D. Hubbard; Delaware, George Gray; Florida, John Westcott; Georgia, C. P. Howell; Illinois, John A. McClernand; Indiana, D. W. Voorhees; Iowa, H. H. Trimble; Missouri, Thomas L. Davis; Kentucky, Alvin Duvall; Louisiana, P. H. Mann; Maine, D. R. Hastings; Maryland, George Freaner; Massachusetts, Edward Avery; Michigan, William L. Bancroft; Minnesota, Daniel Bucks; Mississippi, A. M. Clayton; Missouri, C. H. Hardin; Nebraska, George L. Mellen; Nevada, A. C. Ellis; New Hampshire, E. C. Bailey; New Jersey, J. W. Gates; New York, William Dorsheimer; North Carolina, Thomas L. Clingman; Ohio, Gen. Thomas Ewing; Oregon, M. V. Brown; Pennsylvania, Montcalm Hay; Rhode Island, William B. Bead; South Carolina, Samuel McGowan; Tennessee, John C. Brown; Texas, Ashbel Smith; Vermont, James H. Williams; Virginia, John A. Meredith; West Virginia, John J. Davis; Wisconsin, Alexander Mitchell.

The Chair announced that delegates from the National Woman's Suffrage Association were present, asking for a hearing, and appointed a committee to escort the ladies to the platform.

Miss Phœbe Couzins, on behalf of the delegation, then addressed the convention with much self-possession, but her voice was too weak to be heard many feet distant. She referred to "this Centennial leap-year;" said it was in order not only for woman to make proposals, but to have them accepted. If the Democratic party wanted to live long, she warned them to hear woman's prayer, to heed the voice of inspiration, which says, "It is not good for man to be alone," and take women into this political association as a matter of eternal justice and sound policy. She concluded by presenting resolutions of the Woman's-Suffrage Association, which, on motion of Mr. McClernand, of Illinois, were referred to the Committee on Resolutions for respectful consideration.

Mr. Miller, of Nebraska, presented a petition from citizens of Omaha, asking that a plank be incorporated in the platform demanding the extension of the Presidential term to six years, and the restriction of the incumbent to one term. Referred to the Committee on Resolutions.

Mr. Hayes, of Illinois, offered a series of resolutions declaring, among other things, opposition to a further increase of the public debt and of the demand notes of the Government, and demanding the repeal of the Resumption law of 1875.

Referred to the Committee on Resolutions.

The convention thereupon took a recess until 5 o'clock.

Upon reassembling, the Committee on Credentials, through their Chairman, made the following report:

Your Committee on Credentials would respectfully report that there are no contested seats, that the States are fully represented, and that the delegates reported by the Chairmen of the respective delegations to this convention are entitled to seats from their respective States. Respectfully submitted,

JAS. LAWRENCE ENGLISH,
Chairman of the Committee.

Mr. Finch, of Iowa, offered a resolution to give the Territories representation in the convention as States.

A delegate from Maryland moved to amend the report so as to give the District of Columbia representation in the convention, with the right to vote.

This was made to include the Territories, and the report was then adopted.

Mr. Hanna, of Missouri, from the Committee on Permanent Organization, made the following report:

MR. CHAIRMAN: In behalf of the Committee on Permanent Organization, I have the honor to submit the following report of officers for this convention: For Permanent President, Mr. John A. McClernand, of Illinois; for Vice Presidents and Secretaries, one from each State.

The temporary Secretaries, with Mr. Prince, of Boston, as chief, were continued as the working Secretaries, and Sergeant-at-Arms Able was also reappointed.

D. W. Voorhees, of Indiana, Manton Marble, of New York, and Thomas S. Bocock, of Virginia, having been designated by the Chair for that duty, escorted Gen. McClernand to the platform. After a brief address he assumed the chair as permanent President of the convention.

The Committee on Organization also recommended that the rules and regulations of the National Democratic Convention of 1872 be adopted by this convention for the government of the proceedings. This was agreed to, and the report adopted.

On motion of Mr. Williams, the convention adjourned until 11 o'clock Wednesday.

SECOND DAY.

President McClernand called the convention to order five minutes after 10 o'clock, introducing Father Brady, of St. Louis, who offered prayer.

Mr. Young, of Georgia, offered a resolution that "the convention indorses the reform inaugurated by the House of Representatives in cutting down appropriations, approving their investigations of fraud, and congratulating the country on bringing public criminals to justice."

The Chair decided that the resolution must go to the Committee on the Platform.

Mr. Cox, of New York, offered a resolution that the will of the people for retrenchment, as expressed in the Appropriation bills, is and ought to be sustained. Referred to the Platform Committee.

Mr. Kelly, of New York, at the request of some New York delegates, presented a paper signed by many eminent gentlemen who are opposing the nomination of Gov. Tilden. [Applause and hisses.] Mr. Jacobs, of New York, made a point of order that this was out of order. The Chair so decided.

Mr. McLane moved that the convention then proceed at once to ballot.

Mr. Woodson, of Missouri, offered an amendment, that the convention will not ballot until after action on the report of the Committee on Resolutions.

Mr. Abbott, of Massachusetts, moved to amend the amendment by a substitute ordering the roll of States to be called for nominations, and then proceed to ballot.

Mr. Wallace moved to lay the entire subject on the table.

Mr. McLane accepted Mr. Abbott's amendment, which was again read. Loud cries of "No" greeted its proposition that the declaration of a State's vote by the Chairman of any delegation shall alone be accepted.

Mr. Wallace asked what would be the condition if a motion to table failed.

The Chair replied that the convention would then come to a vote on the amendments.

The Chair here announced that the Committee on Resolutions was ready to report.

The request for a call of the States was withdrawn without taking a vote.

The Chair recognized Mr. Meredith, the Chairman of the Committee on Platform, who said they had agreed on the resolutions, but had referred them to a Committee on Revision, and are to meet again at 1 o'clock.

Mr. Kernan moved a recess until 2 o'clock this afternoon. Carried.

During the recess speeches were delivered by Roger A. Pryor, of New York; Mr. Breckinridge, of Kentucky; ex-Senator Doolittle, of Wisconsin, and B. Gratz Brown, of Missouri.

The convention was called to order at 2:15.

Judge Meredith, of Virginia, the Chairman of the Committee on Resolutions, presented his report. He stated that a great many resolutions were presented, all of which had been carefully examined and discussed before coming to agreement. He then requested Mr. Dorsheimer, of New York, to read it to the convention. It was as follows:

We, the delegates of the Democratic party of the United States, in National Convention assembled, do hereby declare the administration of the Federal Government to be in an urgent need of immediate reform, and we do hereby enjoin upon the nominees of this convention, and of the Democratic party in each State, a zealous effort and co-operation to this end, and do hereby appeal to our fellow-citizens of every former political connection to undertake with us this first and most pressing patriotic duty.

For the Democracy of the whole country, we do here reaffirm our faith in the permanence of the Federal Union, our devotion to the Constitution of the United States, with its amendments, universally accepted as a final settlement of the controversies that engendered civil war, and do here record our steadfast confidence in the perpetuity of republican self-government; in an absolute acquiescence in the will of the majority, the vital principle of the republic; in the supremacy of the civil over the military authority; in the total separation of church and state, for the sake alike of civil and religious freedom; in the equality of all citizens before the just laws of their own enactment; in the liberty of individual conduct by sumptuary laws; in the faithful education of the rising generation, that they may preserve, enjoy and transmit these best conditions of human happiness and hope, we behold the noblest product of a hundred years of changeful history; but while upholding the bond of our Union and the great charter of these our rights, it behooves a free people to practice, also, that eternal vigilance which is the price of liberty.

Reform is necessary to rebuild and establish in the hearts of the whole people of the Union, eleven years ago happily rescued from the danger of a secession of States, but now to be saved from a corrupt centralism, which, after inflicting upon ten States the rapacity of carpet-bag tyrannies, has honey-combed the offices of the Federal Government itself with incapacity, waste and fraud, infected States and municipalities with the contagion of misrule, and locked fast the prosperity of an industrious people in the paralysis of hard times.

Reform is necessary to establish a sound currency, restore the public credit, and maintain the national honor. We denounce the failure for all these eleven years to make good the promise of the legal-tender notes, which are a changing standard of value in the hands of the people, and the non-payment of which is a disregard of the plighted faith of the nation.

We denounce the improvidence which in eleven years of peace has taken from the people in Federal taxes thirteen times the whole amount of the legal-tender notes, and squandered four times this sum in useless expense, without accumulating any reserve for their redemption.

We denounce the financial imbecility and immorality of that party which during eleven years of peace has made no advance toward resumption, and no preparation for resumption, but, instead, has obstructed resumption by wasting our resources and exhausting all our surplus income, and, while annually professing to intend a speedy return to specie payments, has annually enacted fresh hindrances thereto. As such a hindrance we denounce the resumption clause of the act of 1875, and we here demand its repeal.

We demand a judicious system of preparation by public economies, by official retrenchment, and by finance which shall enable the nation soon to assure the whole world of its perfect ability and its perfect readiness to meet any of its promises at the call of the creditor entitled to payment. We believe such a system, well-devised, and above all intrusted to competent hands for execution, creating at no time an artificial currency, and at no time alarming the public mind into a withdrawal of that vaster machinery of credit by which 95 per cent. of all business transactions are performed—a system open to the public, and inspiring general confidence—would, from the day of its adoption, bring healing on its wings to all our harassed industries, set in motion the wheels of commerce, manufactures and the mechanical arts, restore employment to labor, and renew in all its national sources the prosperity of the people.

Reform is necessary in the sum and mode of Federal taxation, to the end that capital may be set free from distrust, and labor lightly burdened. We denounce the present tariff levies upon nearly 4,000 articles as a masterpiece of injustice, inequality and false practice. It yields a dwindling, not a yearly-rising revenue. It has impoverished many industries to subsidize a few. It prohibits imports that might purchase the products of American labor. It has degraded American commerce, from the first, to an inferior rank upon the high seas. It has cut down the sales of American manufactures at home and abroad, and depleted the returns of American agriculture, an industry followed by half our people. It costs the people five times more than it produces to the treasury, obstructs the process of production and wastes the fruits of labor. It promotes fraud, fosters smuggling, enriches dishonest officials and bankrupts honest merchants. We demand that all Custom House taxation shall be only for revenue.

Reform is necessary in the scale of public expense, Federal, State and municipal. Our Federal taxation has swollen from $60,000,000 in gold in 1860, to $450,000,000 in currency in 1870; our aggregate taxation from $154,000,000 in gold in 1860, to $730,000,000 in currency in 1870, or, in one decade, from less than $5 per head to more than $18 per head. Since the peace, the people have paid to their tax-gatherers more than thrice the sum of the national debt, and more than twice that sum for the federal Government alone. We demand a rigorous frugality in every department and from every officer of the Government.

Reform is necessary to put a stop to the profligate waste of the public lands, and their diversion from actual settlers by the party in power, which has squandered 200,000,000 of acres upon railroads alone, and out of more than thrice that aggregate has disposed of less than a sixth directly to tillers of the soil.

Reform is necessary to correct the omissions of a Republican Congress and the errors of our treaties and our diplomacy, which have stripped our fellow-citizens of foreign birth and kindred race, recrossing the Atlantic, of the shield of American citizenship, and have exposed our brethren of the Pacific coast to the incursions of a race not sprung from the same great parent stock, and, in fact, now lately denied citizenship through naturalization as being neither accustomed to the traditions of a progressive civilization, nor exercised in liberty under equal laws. We denounce the policy which thus discards the liberty-loving German and tolerates the revival of the coolie trade in Mongolian women, imported for immoral purposes, and Mongolian men, held to perform servile labor-contracts, and demand such a modification of the treaty with the Chinese Empire, or such legislation by Congress within constitutional limitation, as shall prevent the further importation or immigration of the Mongolian race.

Reform is necessary, and can be effected only by making it the controlling issue of the elections and lifting it above the two false issues with which the officeholding class and the party in power seek to shackle it: the false issue with which they would enkindle sectarian strife in respect to the public schools, of which the establishment and support belong exclusively to the several States, and which the Democratic party has cherished from its foundation and is resolved to maintain without partiality or preference for any class, sect or creed, and without contributing from the treasury; the false issue by which they seek to light anew the dying embers of sectional hate between kindred peoples, once unnaturally estranged, but now reunited in one indivisible republic and a common destiny.

Reform is necessary in the civil service. Experience proves that the efficient, economical conduct of the Governmental business is not possible if its civil service be subject to change at every election; if it be a prize fought for at the ballot-box; if it be a brief reward of party zeal instead of a post of honor assigned for proved competency, and held for fidelity in the public employ; that the dispensing of patronage should neither be a tax upon the time of all our public men nor the instrument of their ambition. Here, again, professions falsified in the performance attest that the party in power can work out no practical or salutary reform.

Reform is necessary even more in the higher grades of the public service. The President, Vice President, Judges, Senators, Representatives, Cabinet officers—these and all others in authority are the people's servants; their offices are not a private perquisite; they are a public trust. When the annals of this Republic show the disgrace and censure of a Vice President, a late Speaker of the House of Representatives marketing his rulings as a presiding officer, three Senators profiting secretly by their votes as lawmakers, five Chairmen of the leading committees of the late House of Representatives exposed in jobbery, a late Secretary of the Treasury forcing balances in the public accounts, a late Attorney General misappropriating the public funds, a Secretary of the Navy enriching his friends by percentages levied off the profits of contractors with his department, an Ambassador to England censured in a dishonorable speculation, the President's Private Secretary barely escaping conviction upon his trial for guilty complicity in frauds upon the revenue, a Secretary of War impeached for high crimes and confessed misdemeanors, the demonstration is complete that the first step in reform must be the people's choice of honest men from another party lest the disease of one political organization infect the body politic, and lest, by making no change of men or party, we can get no change of measures and no reform. All these abuses, wrongs and crimes, the product of sixteen years' ascendency of the Republican party, create a necessity for reform confessed by the Republicans themselves; but their reformers are voted down in convention, and displaced from the Cabinet; the party's mass of honest voters is powerless to resist the 80,000 officers, it leaders and guides. Reform can only be had by a peaceful civic revolution. We demand a change of system, a change of administration, a change of parties, that we may have a change of measures and of men.

At the conclusion, Mr. Dorsheimer said that the committee had adopted and indorsed, though not as a part of the platform, a resolution which he read, indorsing the action of the House of Representatives in cutting down appropriations and exhorting to firmness; also a resolution as to the just claims of the soldiers, sailors, widows and orphans.

Mr. Ewing, of Ohio, took the platform. He said that at the request of several members of the committee he presented the minority report, recommending striking out the following clause in the majority, to-wit: "As such a hindrance, we denounce the resumption clause of the act of 1875, and we demand its repeal." He proposed to substitute therefor the following words: "The law for the resumption of specie payment on the 1st of January, 1879, having been enacted by the Republican party, without deliberation in Congress, and without discussion before the people, and being both ineffectual to secure its object, and highly injurious to the business of the country, should be forthwith repealed."

Mr. Ewing moved, and Mr. Eaton, of Kansas, seconded, that the amendment thus suggested be made.

Mr. Ewing proceeded to state his objections to the clause proposed to be stricken out.

Mr. Dorsheimer, of New York, spoke in favor of the majority report. Herald: "I propose here to make a straight issue between soft and hard money. By that we stand or we fall. If you want soft money give your votes to the resolution offered by the most distinguished advocate of soft money in the United States; but if you want to leave to the hard-money men some chance to carry their States, then stand by the report of the committee, which was a compromise so great that a protest has been sent here signed by every one of the Eastern Democratic States, and to which I have put my own signature. This is a middle ground which does leave some hope; but if you declare, in the language of the gentleman from Ohio (Gen. Ewing), for a repeal forthwith, then abandon all hope. I make this issue fair. As I said, we will stand to that, and now, Mr. President, I demand a vote by the States."

Mr. Voorhees, of Indiana, supported the minority report. "My friends," said he, "Something was said by the gentleman from New York about the effect on his State and other States. I stand here surrounded by ten States who have a right to be heard on this subject. West Virginia, Ohio, my own gallant Democratic State of Indiana; Missouri, on whose bosom we are holding the Convention; Tennessee, that contains the Hermitage and the ashes of Jackson and Polk; Iowa and Kansas; are they not to be considered? Do they amount to nothing? I will say, with all respect to the gentleman from New York, who has just sat down, that we have followed the lead of New York for twelve long years, and each time to disaster, and I for one assert the West—the mighty West, with its teeming population—I assert the power of the Mississippi valley, with its mighty interests and its great resources."

Mr. Watterson, of Kentucky, made a conciliatory speech, and succeeded, to some extent, in pouring oil upon the troubled waters. He closed by moving the previous question—the amendment of Mr. Ewing. Amid much excitement and confusion the roll was called, and showed 219 yeas to 550 nays.

The call of the roll was next proceeded with on the adoption of the platform. The announcement of the vote—yeas 651, nays 83—was loudly applauded.

On motion of Mr. McLean, of Maryland, the convention proceeded to nominate a candidate for President.

Mr. Whitely presented the name of Thomas Francis Bayard, of Delaware.

James D. Williams nominated Thomas A. Hendricks, of Indiana.

Mr. Abbott nominated Joel Parker, of New Jersey.

Senator Kernan nominated Samuel J. Tilden, of New York.

Mr. Ewing nominated William Allen, of Ohio.

Mr. Clymer nominated Winfield S. Hancock, of Pennsylvania.

The Secretary then called the roll of the States for the first ballot, with the following result:

Several delegates—"I move to make the nomination unanimous."

Mr. Wallace, of Pennsylvania—Pursuant to the orders of the Pennsylvania delegation I move to make the nomination of Mr. Tilden unanimous, and as the second State in the Union, although we should have preferred one born on our soil, still she will not slack one nerve nor weaken one effort for the success of the nominee of this Convention, and when the ides of November come we feel assured that victory will crown our banners with success.

Mr. Abbott, from New Jersey, desired that the nomination of Tilden be made unanimous, and said: "And I will tell this Convention this: that as we have stood by Joel Parker before this nomination was made, so with the same energy and the same fire we will stand by Samuel J. Tilden [loud cheers], and although New Jersey has had no voice in the nominee, she will have nine votes in the Electoral College for Samuel J. Tilden."

A delegate from Tennessee—"In behalf of the delegation from Tennessee—whose votes have been cast against the voice of this Convention, —Tennessee will give her electoral vote for Mr. Tilden."

A delegate from Virginia—"I am the man from Virginia who cast the one vote against Tilden. I move to make the nomination unanimous. I will take off my coat and work for him." [Loud cheers.]

The question was put and Tilden declared the unanimous choice of the convention and the Democratic party of the United States.

The convention thereupon adjourned until Thursday morning at 10 o'clock.

THIRD DAY.

The convention met at 10 o'clock, and was called to order by the President.

The first order of business being the nomination of a candidate for Vice President, an Illinois delegate proposed the name of Thomas A. Hendricks, of Indiana.

No other names being proposed, the roll of States was proceeded with. Mr. Hendricks received 730 votes; blank, 8.

On motion, the nomination was declared unanimous.

The following resolution was offered by Mr. Webber, of Michigan, and adopted:

Resolved, That it be recommended to future National Democratic Conventions, as the sense of the Democracy herein assembled, that the so-called two-thirds rule be abolished as unwise and unnecessary, and that the States be requested to instruct their delegates to the Democratic National Convention to be held in 1880 whether it be desirable to continue the two-thirds rule longer in force in their National Convention, and that the National Committee insert such request in their call for the convention.

After the announcement of the National Committee, the adoption of the usual resolutions of thanks, etc., the convention adjourned sine die.

In Training for a Jockey.

Says a Dubuque paper: "The other day a young man at the race track was anxious to reduce his weight in order to be more suitable for riding a race horse. At the suggestion of his friends the following expedient was resorted to: Five blankets were wrapped about him and he ran four times around the track, making a two-mile heat. Of course he was drenched with perspiration. He was then sponged with alcohol. On weighing, it was found that the beam turned at three pounds less, and thereat the young man was greatly rejoiced. Probably by the time the races come off he will be as light as a feather."

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC.

Grasses.

O life that blooms in the sod,
How sweet and bountiful thou art!
Like Aaron's mystic almond rod,
By miracle the grasses start.

They creep about the naked land,
In silence shod they nimbly run,
They clothe the rock and deck the sand,
And spread their velvets in the sun.

Upon a mighty loom they ply
With shuttle flying far and wide,
And woven in this tapestry
See buttercups and daisies pied.

O, sweet this green and humble home
For all earth's young that skip and play,
This dewy footstool 'neath the dome
Where low at eve the cattle pray.

O, sweet this fond maternal care,
For nameless weeds that flower and fade;
And teeming millions flourish there,
The weakest races God has made.

O, sweet to think when day is done,
And tired we seek the common breast,
Like all that gaze upon the sun
Our frames beneath this cloak shall rest.

Around the Farm.

GOOD news for the boys. They have invented a patent machine for currying horses. It is said to save time and do the work far better.

A CORRESPONDENT of the New Century contends that farmers should keep but one breed of poultry. It will not pay to have all the trouble of keeping various kinds separate. Select a choice breed, and then keep them pure.

THE plan of harrowing potatoes after planting and before they are far advanced is growing in favor. This allows the crop to have a good start of the weeds, and the potatoes are not in the least injured by the harrow.

IT is said that the wild grapevine will twine itself from tree to tree. The coral honeysuckle is desirable for planting near the windows, as it is one of the first vines to unfold leaves and flowers, and the last to retain them. Its pretty flowers are favorites with the bee and humming bird.

M. I. PIERRE calculates that, in a life of sixty years, an apple tree removes from the soil 60 pounds of nitrogen, equal to 11,500 pounds of farm yard manure. To maintain the soil in condition, therefore, he estimates that about 175 pounds of manure ought to be annually given to a tree during the fifty years that it is in bearing.

THE Executive Committee of the Michigan State Agricultural Society are reported to have declared that the trials of speed at their annual fairs could not be attempted without bringing in all the objectionable features of gambling incident to regular horse trots, and have decided to abolish it accordingly. Illinois has followed suit.

THE cause of "foot rot," or "hoof ail" in cattle is generally muddy or damp yards. Cows that are kept in dry yards, and are not obliged to wade through to get their drink, are seldom troubled with fouls. The cure is easily effected by cleaning the sore feet out, thoroughly scraping off all disorganized skin or flesh, and rubbing in well a salve composed of finely powdered blue vitriol and lard; equal parts by weight. The feet should also be kept dry.

THE London Live Stock Journal of May says: When Bright Empress was sold at Mr. Torr's sale for 2,160 guineas, there was much cheering, from the fact that the figure was the highest ever paid for a cow in England. The price has, however, now been capped, 2,500 guineas having been obtained for Grand Duchess of Oxford, 29th, which has just been sold by the Duke of Devonshire to the Hon. George Brown, of Canada.

IT is of importance that we set only fresh eggs, so that there may be no waste of eggs or of effort on the part of the hen in endeavoring to hatch out old or stale ones. The practice too often is to gather the eggs from day to day, and place them in a basket, box or some place of general reception; and when a hen is to be set, the eggs on hand are picked over, with a view to get those of a certain color, shape, or kind, regardless of age. Consequently some which are set are freshly laid, while others are much older and perhaps stale; these undoubtedly would not be set if it was known how old they were. This difficulty would be entirely overcome by marking with lead pencil on each egg, at the time of collection, the date when laid, and if it is known by what hen, note that also; then, in selecting eggs for a sitting, those of too great age are readily excluded.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Prairie Farmer says that any land that will raise good Indian corn will raise broom corn. The ground should be well pulverized with the harrow, then planted with a planter made expressly for the purpose, either by itself or attached to a common two-horse corn-planter. Care should be taken not to get the seed too thick, as in this case the brush will be small, or too thin, as it will then grow too large for marketable brush. About two and a half quarts of seed will be sufficient for an acre. Plant any time between the tenth of May and the 1st of July, in this latitude, 41 deg. When the spires are up about two inches go over it with a harrow, especially if it be too thick. Don't be afraid of hurting the growing plants. Then go over the ground with a roller. It is a good plan to roll as soon as planted. Treat it as you would Indian corn by cultivating till the blades shade the ground.

About the House.

LIEBIG has shown that oatmeal is almost as nutritious as the very best English beef, and that it is richer than wheaten bread in the elements that go to form bone and muscle.

IT is said that common mullein, steeped strong and sweetened, is highly beneficial for consumptives. It should be gathered in the early summer, dried, and taken continuously for some months.

TO REMOVE red ants, buy five cents' worth of calomel and put it on a plate with sirup, where the ants trouble you; they will disappear; or cayenne pepper is said to be a good cure for ants, as well as mice and other vermin.

BREAKFAST MUFFINS.—Two eggs well beaten with one cup of sugar and a lump of butter the size of an egg; to this, add one pint of sweet milk, with two teaspoonfuls of yeast powder worked thoroughly through one quart of flour; bake in muffin rings on top of the range or in gem pans in a quick oven.

BOSTON BROWN BREAD.—Three and three-fourths cups of Indian corn meal, two and one-half cups rye meal, not flour, two-thirds cup molasses, one quart milk, either sweet or sour; two even teaspoonfuls soda dissolved in milk; steam in tin pudding-boiler five hours; take off the cover and set in the oven with the beans to remain till morning.

WHEN all other means have failed to exterminate bedbugs, sulphurous acid gas has succeeded. Take everything out of the infested room, plug up all the windows tightly, close all chimneys, and empty about one ounce of powdered sulphur on a pan of hot coals, placed in the middle of the floor. Shut the doors and cover all cracks; let the sulphur burn as long as it will. Where the room is large, it is a good plan to fasten a bit of tin tube to the bottom of the pan, and to this connect enough small rubber pipe to lead out of the nearest door. By blowing into the end of the pipe with the bellows, the sulphur will be caused to burn more quickly by the draft created, and to give a denser smoke. After the sulphur has burned, paint all the cracks in the floor and around the mob board with a strong solution of corrosive sublimate, and treat the furniture to the same before replacing it. We have seen a room frightfully infested, completely freed by this plan.—Scientific American.

Clothes for the Heathen.

About a year ago the ladies of a certain Dorcas Society made up a large quantity of shirts, trowsers, and socks, and boxed them up and sent them to a missionary station on the west coast of Africa. A man named Ridley went out with the boxes, and stayed in Africa several months. When he returned the Dorcas Society, of course, was anxious to hear how its donation was received, and Ridley one evening met the members and told them about it in a little speech. He said:

"Well, you know, we got the clothes out there all right, and after a while we distributed them among some of the natives in the neighborhood. We thought may be it would attract them to the mission, but it didn't, and after some time had elapsed and not a native came to church with those clothes on, I went out on an exploring expedition to find out about it. It seems that on the first day after the goods were distributed one of the chiefs attempted to mount a shirt. He didn't exactly understand it, and he pushed his legs through the arms and gathered the tail up around his waist. He couldn't make it stay up, however, and they say he went around inquiring in his native tongue what kind of an idiot it was that constructed a garment that wouldn't hang on, and swearing some of the most awful heathen oaths. At last he let it drag, and that night he got his legs tangled in it somehow, and fell over a precipice and was killed.

"Another chief who got one on properly went paddling around in the dark, and the people, imagining that he was a ghost, sacrificed four babies to keep off the evil spirit.

"And then, you know, those trowsers you sent out! Well, they fitted one pair on an idol, and then they stuffed most of the rest with leaves and set them up as a kind of new-fangled idols, and began to worship them. They say that the services were very impressive. Some of the women split a few pairs in half, and after sewing up the legs used them to carry yams in, and I saw one chief with a corduroy leg on his head as a kind of helmet.

"I think, though, the socks were most popular. All the fighting men went for them the first thing. They filled them with sand and used them as war clubs. I learned that they were so pleased with the efficiency of those socks that they made a raid on a neighboring tribe on purpose to try them, and they say they knocked about eighty women and children on the head before they came home. They asked me if I wouldn't speak to you and get you to send out a few barrels more, and to make them a little stronger so's they'll last longer, and I said I would.

"This society's doing a power of good to those heathen, and I've no doubt if you keep right along with the work you will inaugurate a general war all over the continent of Africa, and give everybody an idol of his own. All they want is enough socks and trowsers. I'll take them when I go out again."

Then the Dorcas passed a resolution declaring that it would, perhaps, be better to let the heathen go naked and give the clothes to the poor at home. Maybe that is the better way.—Philadelphia Bulletin.

Two Aristocrats.

"Billy," said one news-boy to another yesterday, as they thronged the sidewalk in a mass awaiting the advent of the Evening Republican, "wot's the matter o' yer complexion? Ain't yer health good, my dear?"

"It's disserpashun, cully," was the prompt reply. "Wot with operrers an' late hours in the spring, an' these swell parties just now, an' high livin', I'm rooninin' my constertooshun. I ain't wot I wus in my younger days, I tell yer!"

"Jest ez I thought, Billy; yer must let up. Didn't I see yer makin' a call ez I directed my coachman to take a little turn through Locas place yesterday, and didn't yer have a bookay?"

"I 'spose 'twas me yer saw, I take 'er a $5 bookay now an' then. 'Smy style yer know."

"Wa'al, it's all right, Billy, it's all right; but don't yer be throwin' yerself away. Yer too much uv a ornament ter sersity, yer be, ter waste yerself."

"Oh, I know my vally. Don't yer be alarmed. Hitch up yer britches an' hev a partager, cully."

And then the two scions of bloated aristocracy sat down on the curbstone together and smoked a couple of cigar stubs with great dignity and considerable labor.—St. Louis Republican.

THE TUG OF WAR.

Gen. Crook Meets Sitting Bull and His Braves in Battle Array—A Desperate Fight, in Which Neither was Signally Victorious—The Killed and Wounded.

[From the Chicago Times.]

CROOK'S EXPEDITION, ROSEBUD CREEK CAMP,
Montana, June 17, via Fort Fetterman,
Wyoming, June 23.

Pursuant to order, this entire command, excepting 100 men, left with Maj. Furey to defend our wagon train, broke camp on Goose Creek, at dawn on June 16, and, accompanied by the Snake and Crow Indians, marched over forty miles that day, and halted for the night in Montana Territory.

Our whole force, including the Indians, was in the neighborhood of 1,300 men. We had been halted about one hour, our horses unsaddled and grazing, when at 8:30 this morning the report of firearms was distinctly heard from behind the northern bluffs in the direction of the canon. Soon afterward the Snake and Crow scouts came running over the hill to inform Crook that Sitting Bull, with his whole available force of Sioux, was advancing in quick time to attack us in camp. Two companies of the Second Cavalry and the same number of infantry were ordered to deploy as skirmishers and support the Indian pickets. Hardly had they reached the crest when volley after volley from the Sioux announced that the fight had commenced in earnest. From our camp we could see the enemy swarming in crowds upon the higher range of bluffs in every direction on a line of at least two miles. They were all mounted, and fired with wonderful rapidity. Maj. Randall, our Chief of Scouts, aided by Lieut. Bourke, rallied our friendly Indians and led them to attack the center of the Sioux. The latter received them with successive volleys, and, after a gallant fight, Randall's redskins were compelled to keep within shelter of the lower range of hills, the number of Sioux opposed to them being overwhelming.

Observing this state of affairs, Col. Royall ordered the first battalion of the Third Cavalry, consisting of A, E, I and M companies under Col. Mills, to advance, mounted, and charge the central bluffs, so as to drive back the enemy in that direction. This order was executed with a brilliancy and celerity seldom equaled, under a sweeping hostile fire, which made a volcano of the plateau between the lower bluffs above our camp and the higher ones occupied by Sitting Bull. The battalion charged at full gallop with fierce ringing cheers, halted for a moment to pour in a withering volley, and then galloped up the ascent to the crest of the ridge. Despite their great numbers and splendid position, the Sioux center broke and ran like a pack of wolves, taking shelter on other bluffs, 1,200 yards behind, for this battle-ground is a succession of ridges for miles on miles. The battalion then dismounted and deployed as skirmishers along the position they had carried. While this was being done on the center and right, the second battalion of the Third Cavalry, consisting of companies B, D, F and L, under Col. Henry, was ordered to attack Sitting Bull's right, which they did, driving it back even with the Sioux center and left. The third battalion of the same regiment, companies C and M, under Col Van Vleit, was ordered to occupy the northern bluffs in our rear, so as to checkmate any attack from that point. The fight now became general, and continued until past noon almost without interruption, the Sioux proving themselves the best fighting Indians that ever fired a shot. Beaten on one ridge they retired behind another, so that we were compelled to keep following them up, exposing our line all the time. Firing from their ponies, their shots were generally a little too high until late in the action—a fortunate thing for us.

At a quarter past 12 o'clock Mills' battalion, excepting one company, detached after the first charge to support the left, was ordered to vacate its position on the right center, and make east ward first, and then north down Rosebud creek, through the canon, at the end of which, seven miles distant, was situated the Sioux village. To enter the canon, the left of the hostile line had to be forced, and Mills ordered Company E, of the Third, under Capt. Alex. Sutorius, to charge up the bluff and carry the position, which was speedily accomplished. The Indians, however excellent as skirmishers, have not yet learned the art of standing a cavalry charge. Mills then moved down the canon rapidly toward the village, according to orders. His place on the bluffs above the camp was supplied with only a few infantry, as the Second Cavalry were detained to sustain his movement. Crook now determined to charge along this whole line, and for that purpose ordered Henry's battalion to fall back and get their horses, left some distance in the rear. Fortunately, Sitting Bull mistook this preparatory movement for a retreat. Henry retired across an exposed hollow, and the Sioux fought desperately right into his command. L company, of the Third, Capt. Vroom, was rear-guard, and some men did not hear the order. They were immediately surrounded, and almost in a second fifteen of our brave fellows lay dead and wounded on the bluff. F, I, B, and D companies of the Third instantly countercharged, and the wounded, except one man, were rescued by Capt. Andrews and Lieut. Reynolds' command. At that moment the brave Henry, a most accomplished officer, who was an Acting Brigadier during the civil war, was shot in the face, the ball entering above the right cheek bone and coming out at the left. He was mounted, as nearly all the officers were, and was a prominent mark. His wound is dangerous, if not fatal. Sitting Bull now discovered the advance of Mills and Noyes on the village. At least 50 warriors and 100 of their ponies lay dead along the ridges. The number of wounded embarrassed the Indian chief. He had most of the killed and all of the injured strapped to horses and carried off. The Sioux then broke and ran in a northwesterly direction, but despite all their efforts the Snakes and Crows took thirteen scalps. Information reached Crook that the Indian village was deserted, and he immediately sent Capt. Nickerson, of the staff, to countermarch. This was done very reluctantly. The command faced southward once more. Sitting Bull fought to cover the retreat of his women and children, which was rapidly accomplished. He also hoped to beat Crook in open fight, but the command slept on the field of battle.

Our ammunition was failing, our rations nearly out. The Indians could not then be surprised, so it was decided to rely on our base of supplies and recuperate. Gen. Crook is now satisfied that the Sioux can and will fight. They are better armed than his own soldiers. Of the latter it must be said that braver men never faced an enemy. They would charge the Sioux to the gates of hell had they been allowed. The action occupied five hours. Following a list of our killed and wounded:

D Company—Sergt. O'Donnell, severely wounded. I Company—Sergt. Meagher, seriously injured; one private slightly wounded.

Third Cavalry, First Battalion, E Company—Private Henry Harold, dangerously wounded. I Company—Killed, privates Wm. Allen and Eugene Flynn; wounded, Sergt. Groesh, severely; Corporal Cardy, severely; privates Smith, Losakoski, O'Brien, Stewart and Reilly, severely. M Company—Wounded, Bugler Snow, dangerously.

Second Battalion—Wounded, Col. Guy V. Henry, commanding battalion, and Captain of D Company, dangerously. B Company—Wounded, private Jacob Stiener, severely. L Company—Killed, Sergt. Nankerchen; privates Mitchell, Connor, Mannett, and Potts; wounded, Sergt. Cook, severely; private Kramer, severely; private Edwards, seriously. F Company—Killed, Sergt. Marshall, private Gilbert Roe; wounded, private Town, severely; private Fischer, severely; private Rutlen, slightly. Fourth Infantry, D Company—Private James A. Devine, private John H. Terry, private Richard Flynn, all severely wounded.

Shoshone Snake Indians—Killed, one warrior; wounded, four warriors, severely.

Crow Indians—Wounded, three warriors, one mortally.

Total, including Indians, ten killed and thirty wounded. Several of the slightly wounded are not mentioned.

We also lost nineteen horses killed, and the same number more or less injured. Between 15,000 and 20,000 rounds of ammunition were fired by this command. The Sioux have expended twice that amount—one cause, doubtless, of their retreat. Thus we celebrated Bunker Hill.

THE FENIANS' ESCAPE.

European Reports of the Escape of the Convicts from Australia.

[Dublin (June 8) Cor. New York Herald.]

The readers of the Herald know already that about four weeks ago a memorial, signed by 138 members of Parliament (the great bulk of whom represented English and Scottish constituencies), was presented to Mr. Disraeli, praying him to advise the Queen to pardon the remnant of Fenian convicts who are still detained under sentence passed in 1867 and 1868. Mr. Disraeli refused to comply with the prayer of this memorial, alleging substantially that these men were not political prisoners at all, but convicts, under charges against the ordinary laws. There were, he said, about eleven of them soldiers who were undergoing punishment for mutiny. Eight of those soldiers had been sent out to Australia, but two had been since liberated; so there only remained six "who are not free in that country. They are in a position very different from that of other persons undergoing sentence of penal servitude." Mr. Disraeli's refusal caused great disappointment to the Irish Nationalists. But we are not concerned with that just now. The most interesting feature of the case was that at the moment when he was so doggedly refusing to release those unfortunate men they were quite beyond his control. They had, in fact, escaped.

Last Monday the rumor reached Dublin, but it was received with absolute incredulity. Confirmation, however, came quickly from three distinct sources. The news has reached the London Times; the Plymouth Western News, a well-informed paper on colonial topics, had it; an Irish priest, stationed in the colony of Western Australia, at Freemantle, the very scene of the occurrence, had written home to his mother an account of it, which is evidently truthful.

The substance of all three narratives is this: On Easter Monday, April 17, during the temporary absence of the chief officers of the convict depot at Freemantle, six Fenian prisoners succeeded in withdrawing to a place about a mile off. Here they changed clothes, and, getting into fast traps, which were in readiness, they drove off to Rockingham, a place on the sea-coast about nineteen miles from Freemantle. A boat was waiting for them, and in it they were able to reach and get on board the Catalpa, an American whaler, that was lying to twelve miles off the land. A revenue cutter came off to the whaler, but was not allowed to search her. And so, it is presumed, that the prisoners whom Mr. Disraeli passionately refused to let go were already far beyond the clutches of British law.

Here among the Nationalist party there is great exultation, not merely from the escape of the prisoners, but also at the fact that fate had beforehand given the haughty Premier such a slap in the face.

Washington's Appearance.

I once heard my father, in a private conversation with Washington Allston, give his candid opinion of Gen. Washington's appearance. He said that his figure was by no means good; that his shoulders were high and narrow, and his hands and feet remarkably large. He had "aldermanic proportions;" and this defect was increased by the fashions of that day. But, with all these drawbacks, his appearance was singularly fine. I have heard my mother say that the first time she saw him, he entered the hall door, as she passed from the entry to the parlor, and that she thought him the most superb-looking person she had ever seen. He was then dressed in black velvet, with white lace ruffles, etc., exactly as Stuart's picture represented him.—Jane Stuart; Scribner for July.

TWO MEN own 600,000 acres of land in San Joaquin and Santa Clara valleys, California, upon which they pay about $40,000 yearly in taxes. Their names are Lux and Miller, and they began their business lives in San Francisco as butchers, without any capital. The land is used as meadows and pastures.

THE FATE OF CHARLEY ROSS.

"The Play's the Thing in Which to Catch the Conscience."

[From the New York Sun.]

A few weeks ago, a Boston detective called at the Fifth Avenue Theater, and explained to Mr. Stephen Fiske that he was in confidential communication with Mrs. Mosher, the widow of the man who had stolen Charley Ross; that she was evidently exercised in mind in regard to the secret of the boy's fate; that she had heard of the stolen child in "Pique," and was anxious to see the play if she could come to the theater unobserved; and he believed that, under the influence of the play, she might be induced to make the confession which she had hitherto refused.

These facts having been represented to Mr. Daly, he placed his own private box at the service of the detective, and the next evening Mrs. Mosher was brought quietly to the theater. She was a plain, elderly woman, neatly attired in black, and was accompanied by a female friend. During the progress of the trial she laughed and cried with the rest of audience, but did not exhibit any special perturbation until the last act. The sorrow of the heroine, Miss Fanny Davenport, then appeared to move her strangely. When Miss Davenport exclaimed: "He's dead!" Mrs. Mosher rocked herself backward and forward and repeated: "He's dead! Yes, he's dead!" The joy in the Renfrew family when the stolen child was restored also affected her deeply.

At the close of the performance Mrs. Mosher and the detective left the theater as quietly as they had entered, the detective whispering to Mr. Fiske as they passed, "I think it has been a success." No further revelations were vouchsafed until Wednesday, when Mr. Christian K. Ross, the father of the abducted boy, visited Superintendent Walling, and held a long conference in reference to some new clews which have been discovered. It is believed communications have passed between Mrs. Mosher and her brother, Westervelt, now under sentence in Moyamensing Prison, and that the fate of Charley Ross is shortly to be cleared up.

Black Hills—The Fever Breaks Out Again.

[Bismarck (D. T.) Cor. Chicago Times.]

The recent reports from the Black Hills of the gold discoveries and the Indian war has acted disastrously upon some of Uncle Sam's gallant defenders. A number stacked their arms, and on the first favorable opportunity left for parts unknown. Prompt action on the part of the commanding officers checked the evil, however, and the deserters, after vigorous pursuit, were recaptured. The demoralization has now reached business interests. Yesterday Capt. Wm. R. Massie, of the steamer Carroll, convinced of the richness of the mines by a letter from John W. Coonce, who reported $600 as a result of ten days' labor, resigned his position, paying $300 per month, and leaves to-day for Deadwood. Hubert Smith, express agent at Bismarck, resigned, and takes charge of the express line now operating between Bismarck and Crook City. The entire force in The Bismarck Tribune office, this morning, gave fifteen days' notice of intention to advance on the auriferous region. On every hand homesteads are deserted, and in many instances growing crops, the owners having gone in search of gold. Probably three-fourths of the homestead and pre-emption claimants, in the county in which Bismarck is situated, have gone on this mission. The wicked post-traders at Lincoln and Stevenson, tired of selling liquor to soldiers at twenty-five cents a glass, are loading large trains with supplies for the Black Hills. Seventy-five teams have loaded at two of the principal stores in Bismarck. Within forty-eight hours two freight and one freight and express lines have been organized, and trains will hereafter leave Bismarck regularly every ten days, with specials, when strong enough for protection. A mail route has also been established by Congress between Bismarck and the Black Hills, and service will probably begin at an early day. At present the mail is forwarded by private but trusty hands, generally without cost.

A Frontier Tragedy.

Thomas Hollowell, of North Platte, Neb., jumped the homestead claim of a neighbor, and Deputy Sheriff Meyers and Constable Crawford were sent to eject him. Meyers was reading the warrant to Hollowell when he drew a revolver and shot Meyers through the head, killing him instantly. He also shot Crawford, shattering the jaw, badly injuring him. A Sheriff's posse immediately went to arrest him, which they did, and he was lodged in jail. Late at night the jail was surrounded by determined men, and Hollowell taken out an hung till dead. Hollowell had been rather prominently known in Nebraska, having built the first penitentiary in the State. He was always considered a quarrelsome, dangerous man. This is the first case of lynching in Nebraska since 1864.

That Moustache.

He was a very young man. A few stray hairs upon his lip attested the fact that he was engaged in a deadly struggle with a moustache. He went into a variety store and said to the proprietor, "Have you Charles Reade's 'Lost Heir'?" "No, I haven't," replied the storekeeper. "But," he continued, looking into the young man's face, "I've got something that will make that moustache of yours start out like boils in spring-time."

Rattlesnakes and Whisky.

As one of the exciting incidents of Gen. Custer's march against the Indians, a correspondent with the expedition mentions a private bitten by a rattlesnake. Aside from customary operations, twenty-six ounces of whisky were administered, twenty-four before any effect was produced; the last two brought drunk and killed the poison. About fifty men gathered around while the man was being treated. Some cast fond looks at the medicine being used, showing eagerness for the fluid. Others thought a bite a good thing, but begged a preventative.

A Bride's Request.

"George, my darling George, promise me one thing," said the young bride of a month, as she threw her arms around her husband's neck, and gazed anxiously into his face. "What is it, precious?" he asked, as he drew her to his bosom. "Promise me, George, dear, that you will not become a Presidential candidate. All the newspapers will tell how big my feet are, and you know folks never think that anybody's feet may be good-shaped if they are large."

THE NEW WORLD'S FAIR.

The Argentine Republic—Free America—The Originator of the Centennial Idea—Exhibitors Advertising—The Tunisians—Miscellany.

[By Our Own Correspondent.]

THE ARGENTINE REPUBLIC.

The interest taken by this progressive South American republic in our exhibition justifies me in giving a synopsis of the condition of the Republic. The Argentine Republic sends all specimens of silver, a large collection of minerals, ores, crystal rock gypsum, cements, artificial marble, lead, mineral waters; also, wool and hides, and the products, salt, beef, and tallow. Few of our people take notice of the condition of our sister republic, hence a brief note of this interesting country may be instructive.

The Argentine Republic—the confederation of the Rio de la Plata, or River of Silver, South America—is a federal union of fourteen provinces and three large territories, covering an almost unbroken plain of 1,200,000 square miles, with a population of about 2,000,000 inhabitants. It extends from 22 deg. south latitude to the straits of Magellan, and from 59 deg. west longitude to the Andes.

Each province has its own Legislature, courts of justice, and political government; but civil, penal, and commercial laws are common to all the provinces, codes of such laws having been issued by the Congress of the confederation.

The President of the republic is elected for a term of six years by the representatives of the provinces, and is not eligible for re-election. The Vice President, elected in the same manner, fills the office of Chairman of the Senate, but has otherwise no political power. The President is commander-in-chief of the troops, and appoints to all civil, military and judicial offices; but he and his ministers are responsible for their acts, and liable to impeachment before the Senate by accusation of the House of Representatives. Legislative power is vested in a Senate, of members elected by the provincial legislatures, two from each province, and a House of Representatives, elected by the people, and apportioned to each province according to population. The Senators hold their office for nine years, and the Representatives for three.

FREE AMERICA.

No one will question the toleration of Americans and the freedom of action extended to all, when examining the beauties of the Spanish department, to see Spanish soldiers on guard, not apparently under any rigorous discipline, yet sauntering about the precincts of their commission and eyeing with Argentine ardor the valuable exhibits. All this with their side arms on and in full uniform. If this is not liberty and the extension of national courtesy to foreigners, I don't understand the term.

THE ORIGINATOR OF THE CENTENNIAL IDEA is the Secretary, Hon. John L. Campbell, who in suggestions, followed up by stirring, epistolary appeals, formed the first original thoughts to the grand project that is now one of the wonders of the world. The honorable Secretary is a man of quick perceptive faculties and sound judgment, and a man every way worthy to receive the praise due him for his sagacity in presenting the world with one of its most startling beauties, and certainly one of its most instructive thoughts.

EXHIBITION ADVERTISING.

Sitting by a gentleman, on a street car en route for the grounds with a package on his lap that seemed to disturb him, I looked an inquiry. "These are more circulars, 30,000, sir. Since the opening, I am doing all I can to advertise my business." Poor fellow, of the 30,000 circulars about 29,000 are gathered by children who take a card or circular from each exhibitor's basket to take home for souvenirs. Matrons take them for their children, the average visitor takes them to show his interest in things generally, newspaper men may take a clean backed one for an incidental memorandum. Ten thousand exhibitors who will average 5,000 circulars each, 50,000,000 circulars, $1,750.00 first installment, $1,500.00 of which is lost, but as job printers must live, I'll not continue the damaging argument against circulars. One-fourth of the money invested in legitimate newspapers would produce one hundred times greater results than the circular system.

THE TUNISIANS.

The authorities closed the Tunisian pavilion for two days owing to the exactions of the gentlemen from the Barbary States, for it seems that of Morocco, Algiers, Tunis, and Tripoli none seem so Turkish-like in their speculative propensities as the Tunisians. The fact is, these gentlemen labor under the impression that this being a free country, they can do as they please. This error in judgment the management have unclouded, and from henceforth you can enter the Tunisian pavilion and go out without the compulsory process of "You no buye coffee you no staye here."

MISCELLANY.

The formal dedication of the site of the monument to the memory of Bishop Allen, the first colored Bishop of America, occurred last week. It is located north of the west end of Machinery Hall. The base has been laid for the monument. The monument itself will be placed in position this week. It was carved in Italy. The colossal statue of Washington will be placed in front of the Judges' Pavilion. It is supposed that there will be 200 eminent authors in attendance at a meeting on the 2d of July to take steps to write the history of each of the great spirits connected with a movement that John Adams said was the most remarkable epoch in the history of America. The committee will celebrate the anniversary of the presentation of the resolutions of Richard Henry Lee, June 7th, 1776. One of the most attractive engines on the floor of the machinery building is a nickel-plated noiseless engine from Connecticut. It can be placed in a hogshead, and is worth $1,000.

Texas has sent a water wheel, car starter sharpening file, glass cutter, road engine. A pair of wheels is shown from Boston, that ran between Boston and New York, making a milage of 400,000 miles, and are yet good for 75,000 miles additional. They have been reduced by trimming ¾ of an inch, have worn out two pairs of axles, and are now on a third. Brazil has twenty-four cases containing 500 bugs and insects each, aggregating 12,000, neatly pinned in their mausoleums to its floors, among her specialties. Some of the Byron strawberries exhibited measure four and a half inches in circumference. The students of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, camped on the grounds of the University, occupying 180 tents. The two cheeses from Buffalo, N. Y., weigh, the one twelve and the other fourteen tons. They are twelve feet high, and bound with iron hoops.

The largest propellor wheel is from Philadelphia. This city also displays valuable machinery in turbine water wheels. The hose carriages of the Quaker City are beautiful. New York sends a section of the Croton aqueduct pipe; it is seventy-two inches in diameter, and should be examined by all municipal heads, who confine themselves to pipes of ten or twenty inches. The thirty-eight varieties of grindstones on exhibition vary in price from $1.25 to $125.00. Massachusetts shows among her saws, the best collection on the ground, a specimen circular 100 inches in diameter. There is an extensive display of blowing engines and blast furnaces in Machinery Hall. The fat boy has arrived; he is fifteen years of age, five feet four inches high, and weighs 475 lbs.

An Invaluable Discovery.

Report has it that a river of genuine ink has been discovered in Algeria. It is formed by the union of two streams, one coming from a region of ferruginous soil, the other draining a peat swamp. The water of the former is strongly impregnated with iron, that of the latter with gallic acid. When the two waters mingle, the acid of the one unites with the iron of the other, forming a true ink. If somebody would only find a river of printers' ink, then publishers might rejoice as well as editors.

THE LIMIT.

A colored man living on Fort street east has a sign on his house reading: "Meals for eight cents." The sign attracted the attention of a hungry man of color the other day, and he stepped in and said he would have a dinner. A slice of bread and a bowl of water were placed on the table, and he was told to draw up.

"What sort of a meal is dat?" he demanded, drawing away instead of drawup.

"Dat's an eight cent meal, my friend."

"I isn't prepared to squar off in front of no such dinner," growled the stranger, getting out of doors.

"It isn't no festival dat's true," replied the proprietor; "but when de price is limited down to eight cents you must 'spec de fool will be limited down to about two courses. Dar's bread, and dar's water, and if you want to make it ten cents I'll put on de pepper box a knife and fork."—Detroit Free Press.

Wanted to Have an Understanding.

A night or two since, says the Detroit Free Press, a chap about thirty-five years old, looking as if he had crawled out of a cave to commence life anew entered one of the hotels, and waiting at the counter until the clerk was at liberty, he asked, "Is this a hotel?"

"Yes sir," was the reply.

"Good living, good beds, and the most courteous attention?"

"Yes, sir."

"Well," said the stranger, after a long look at a railroad time-table, "I suppose you don't trust?"

"No, sir."

"Wouldn't let a man stay here four or five days until something turned up?"

"No, sir."

"That's what I wanted to know. I always like to have an understanding about such things, for if anything makes me mad it is to have a great big hotel clerk jump in on me and kick me down stairs on account of my straightened finances."

"You'd better find some other place," suggested the clerk.

"Oh! I shall," replied the stranger. "The outside of this hotel seemed to smile a welcome at me; but, as I said before, my present policy is to get along without being kicked. I've got mental feelings as well as anybody else, and I'm getting so worn in flesh that a mere common grand bounce from a heavy hotel clerk upsets me a whole day. Farewell, young man; don't bile any extra taters for me."

From specials metropolitan exchanges it appears that Tilden's nomination was nearly everywhere received with demonstrations of pleasure. The few exceptions were in this state, where Hendrick's would have been more acceptable and in Ohio, where Bill Allen is recognized as the only god. This tinge of disappointment is not unnatural. It must have been so no matter who received the endorsement of St. Louis. But as for any serious disaffection there is none in any part of the country. Here is where the greater disappointment is for the radicals. They had hoped on a quarrel at St. Louis which disintegate the party and cause a split which would render victory for Grantism easy. To this end an exultant howl was sent up immediately after the convention by the radical press. Our little brainless whiffet, the Tribune, joins in the cry without sense enough to see its own ridiculous position, With Hayes for president, one on the radical platform, it unturles its ears to an astonished and amused public. With Hayes breathing hard money and the enforcement of the resumption act, for its leader it declares for the repeal of that "ill-advised act" and clamors for soft money. Declaring the resumption act ill-advised and the ruin of the buisness of the country, it tenderes its endorsement, its good will and support to the party which enacted it and refuses to rapeal it. Professing to favor the rapeal of the resumption act and encourage the national prosperity it denounces the only party which favors such repeal and the candidates who stand upon the platform of which the repeal is a financial plank. The Tribune cannot stand on two sides of the fence at once. To attempt such a course will subject it to the ridicule it deserves. It has been wont to advocate neither one thing nor the other and nothing long. Now it has taken the two extremes. It proposes to endorse the opposition and support its own ticket. This may be absurd but it has the merit of novelty.—South Bend Herald.

Old John Robinson as a Doctor.

"Howdy, Mary."

"Howdy, George."

"Folks all well at your house, Mary?"

"All well thank you, George, how's all yours?"

"Only tolerable, Mary; mother's been right poorly for the last week with the ager and Jim is still laid up with the rheumatics."

"Well George, mother says that she was cured sound and well of the rheumatism by a simple recipe, which was given nigh on to twenty years ago by an old showman, and if you think Jim will use it, I'll tell you what it was."

"I'm sure he'll try almost anything that would afford him relief for he suffers terribly at times."

"Well, George, the way mother makes it is this: she takes camphor and laudanum, equal parts, a big handful of salt, and puts it all in a pint of whisky; let it stand till the salt and camphor is dissolved, and then rubs the liquor thoroughly on the sore places and in a few days the pain will all leave."

"If that's the case, Mary, Jim shall have a bottle before an hour longer.

"Mother says it is a sure cure George.

"But tell me, Mary, who was the showman who told your mother about this cure?

"Why, Old John Robinson was his name, and his Big Show is going to be in Auburn Tuesday July 18th, Mother says we children may all go."

"Mary, don't you think you would enjoy the show just as well if you rode in my new buggy?

"What all alone George?"

"Of course not. How could you drive them colts of mine?"

"It would suit me first-rate if you drove them, George."

"That settles it, Mary; Old John Robinson is bound to sell me two tickets sure, on Tuesday July the 18th, when his menagerie and circus comes to Auburn."

"Does this razor take hold well,' asked the smiling barber. "Yes, it takes hold well, but it don't let go worth a cent," repled the unhappy victem.

THE EAST.

A FEARFUL domestic tragedy is reported from Lawrence Station, a village located in the suburbs of New York city. C. A. House, a noted divorce lawyer of New York, arrived home in the evening, and while waiting for his supper had some words with his step-son, a lad of 15 years, named William Anderson. House, who is of violent temper, beat the boy and knocked him down. The boy's mother interfered, when House turned upon her and struck her over the head. He caught her by the hair and kicked her in the abdomen. The boy then interfered, when House placed his hand upon his pistol pocket, in which he always carried a weapon, and swore he would shoot the boy and any one who interfered. Mrs. House ran into the house, got a pistol from her bedroom, ran down stairs, and, seeing her husband about to draw his pistol, fired, the ball taking effect in the right temple, killing her husband instantly. Some persons near seized the pistol from Mrs. House, and prevented her doing injury to herself....Jones' Wood, a picnicking ground in the suburbs of New York, was the scene of a serious Sunday Liquor law riot last Sabbath. The police arrested about twenty men who were engaged as bar-keepers and waiters, selling lager beer. A crowd of people assaulted the police and rescued the prisoners. The selling of beer was resumed. One hundred extra policemen were called from the reserve forces in the station-houses, and the rescued prisoners were rearrested and beer-selling stopped. Many men who engaged in the riot were also arrested.

THE Centennial watch-night demonstration at Philadelphia on the evening of the 3d inst. are described as brilliant and grand beyond all comparison. A procession containing thirty thousand people, bearing torches, devices and transparencies, paraded the streets up to midnight, and when the stroke of 12 o'clock was heard, the advent of the one-hundredth anniversary of the nation's birth was greeted by a vast multitude with cheers and rejoicings. The exercises on the Fourth were carried out according to the programme, and are described as magnificent. The street pageant was one of the grandest ever witnessed. The Declaration of Independence was read from the original manuscript by a grandson of Richard Henry Lee, one of the signers of the document, Bayard Taylor recited from memory the poem which he had prepared for the occasion, and Hon. William M. Evarts delivered an eloquent oration....While Dr. Bucher, proprietor of a drug-store in Philadelphia, was preparing colored fires for a pyrotechnic display on the 4th, there was a terrible explosion which shattered the building, and then set it on fire, completely destroying it. The Doctor was instantly killed, as were also his brother, John H. Bucher, and Bernard Kanseman and William Young. J. C. Bucher, father of the Doctor, was badly burned.....The coal mining and transportation companies having recently suspended operations in the Pennsylvania mining region, for the alleged reason that the supply of coal greatly exceeds the demand, thousands of miners are idle, and the consequence is turbulence and crime. Great lawlessness is reported in Carbon, Schuylkill, Lehigh and other counties. Riots are of daily and nightly occurrence, and a number of murders are reported.

A DISPATCH from Augusta, Me., says: "Mr. Blaine has now been home eight days. So far, there has been no special change in his case. The nervous prostration is still a marked characteristic. He is not able to leave his room, and is almost entirely confined to his bed. His physician thinks it will be many weeks before he will resume active work. An European trip is strongly recommended as soon as his strength is sufficient."

Gen. HORRIBLE INDIAN BUTCHERY.

Gen. Custer and Five Companies of Cavalry Massacred by Sioux—Not a Soul Escapes to Tell the Terrible Story.

SALT LAKE, July 5.—A special correspondent of the Helena (Mont.) Herald writes from Stillwater, Mont., July 2: "Muggins Taylor, scout for Gen. Gibbon, got here last night direct from Little Horn river. Gen. Custer found the Indian camp of about 2,000 lodges on the Little Horn, and immediately attacked the camp. Custer took five companies and charged the thickest portion of the camp. Nothing is known of the operations of this detachment, only as they trace it by the dead. Major Reno commanded the other seven companies, and attacked the lower portion of the camp. The Indians poured in a murderous fire from all directions. Besides, the greater portion fought on horseback. Custer, his two brothers, a nephew, and a brother-in-law were all killed, and not one of his detachment escaped. Two hundred and seven men were buried in one place, and the killed are estimated at 300, with only 31 wounded. The Indians surrounded Reno's command, and held them one day in the hills, cut off from water, until Gibbon's command came in sight, when they broke camp in the night and left.

"The Seventh fought like tigers, and were overcome by mere brute force. The Indian loss cannot be estimated, as they bore off and cached most their killed. The remnant of the Seventh Cavalry and Gibben's command are returning to the mouth of the Little Horn, where the steamboat lies. The Indians got all the arms of the killed soldiers. There were seventeen commissioned officers killed.

"The whole Custer family died at the head of their column. The exact loss is not known, as both Adjutants and the Sergeant Major were killed. The Indian camp was three to four miles long and was twenty miles up the Little Horn from its mouth. The Indians actually pulled men off their horses in some instances. I give this as Taylor told me, as he was over the field after the battle. The above is confirmed by other letters, which say Custer met a fearful disaster."

FURTHER HORRIBLE CONFIRMATION.

SALT LAKE, Utah, July 5.—The Times' extra from Bozeman, Mont., July 3, 7 p. m., has the folllowing: "Mr. Taylor, bearer of dispatches from the Little Horn to Fort Ellis, arrived this evening and reports the following: The battle was fought on the 25th, 30 or 40 miles below the Little Horn. Custer attacked the Indian village of from 2,500 to 4,000 warriors on one side, and Col. Reno was to attack it on the other. Three companies were placed on a hill as a reserve. Gen. Custer and 15 officers, and every man belonging to the five companies was killed. Reno retreated under the protection of the reserve. The whole number killed was 315. Gen. Gibbon joined Reno. The Indians left the battle-ground like a slaughter pen, as it really was, being in a narrow ravine. The dead were much mutilated. The situation now looks serious. Gen. Terry arrived at Gibbon's camp on a steamboat, and crossed the command over, and accompanied it to join Custer, who knew it was coming before the fight occurred. Lieut. Crittenden, son of Gen. Crittenden, was among the killed."

LATER PARTICULARS.

RENO'S PRELIMINARY FIGHT AND THE TERRIBLE SUFFERINGS OF HIS TROOPS—THIRTY-SIX HOURS SURROUNDED BY INDIANS, AND WITHOUT WATER, AWAITING CUSTER, WHO NEVER CAME—A BOLD STROKE FOR LIBERTY SUCCEEDS AND REVEALS TO THEM THEIR BUTCHERED COMRADES.

The correspondent of the Chicago Times telegraphs from Bismarck, under date of July 6, the following additional details of this horrible butchery:

In a recent dispatch, I informed you that Custer expected to strike the Indians and give them battle on the 24th. As stated, he left the mouth of the Rosebud on the 22d, with twelve companies of the Seventh Cavalry, striking the trail where Reno left it, leading in the direction of the Little Horn, a branch of the Big Horn. On the evening of the 24th, scouts reported fresh trails, and on the morning of the 25th discovered an Indian village twenty miles above the mouth of the Little Horn, about three miles long and half a mile wide, fifteen miles away. Custer pushed his command rapidly through. They had made a long march, in all seventy-eight miles, in the twenty-four hours preceding the battle, and when near the village struck an abandoned tepee. While the Indians were moving in hot haste as if in retreat, Reno, with seven companies of the Seventh Cavalry, was ordered to the left to attack the village at its head, while Custer, with five companies went to the right and commenced a vigorous attack. Reno felt of them with three companies of cavalry, and was almost instantly surrounded, and after an hour or more of desperate fighting, during which he lost Lieuts. Hodgson and McIntosh, Dr. DeWolf, and twelve men, with several Indian scouts killed, and many wounded, he cut his way through the Indians, crossed the river, and gained a bluff 300 feet in height, where he intrenched and was soon joined by Col. Benton with four companies. In the meantime the Indians resumed the attack, which had abated in vigor for an hour or so, making repeated desperate charges, which were repulsed with great slaughter to the Indians. They gained higher bluffs, however, than the one occupied by Reno, and as their arms were longer range and better than those of the cavalry, they kept up a galling fire until nightfall. During the night Reno strengthened his position and was prepared for the attack which was received at daylight. The day wore on. Reno had lost in killed and wounded a large portion of his command, forty odd having been killed before the bluff was reached, many of them in hand-to-hand conflict with the Indians, who outnumbered them ten to one, and his men had been without water thirty-six hours. The appeals of the wounded for water were indeed heartrending, while the others were almost exhausted, in many instances their tongues protruding from their mouths, and few could speak aloud. They tried to eat crackers but could not moisten them, while the grass blades, which some ate to give relief, clung to their parched lips. In this state of affairs they determined to gain water at all hazards, and Col. Benton made a rally with his company and routed the main portion of the Indians who were guarding the approach to the river, to which the soldiers volunteered to go with camp-kettles and canteens for water. The Indian sharp-shooters were nearly opposite the mouth of the ravine through which the brave boys approached the river, but the attempt was made and though one man was killed and seven wounded, the water was gained and the command relieved. When the fighting ceased for the night, Reno caused his animals to be likewise relieved, and further prepared for the attack, which he knew would be resumed on the next morning. Officers and men kept in good heart, but all wondered what had become of Custer. There had been forty-eight hours of fighting and no word from their respected commander.

Twenty-four hours more of fighting and suspense ensued, when the Indians abandoned their village in great confusion. Then Reno knew that succor was near. Gen. Terry, with Gibbon's command, and his own infantry had arrived, and, as the comrades in arms met, strong men wept on the necks of each other. After congratulations to the gallant commander for his successful defense, inquiries were made for Custer, but none could tell where he was. Soon an officer came rushing into camp and related that he had found Custer dead, stripped naked, but not mutilated, and near him his two brothers, Col. Tom and Boston Custer; his brother-in-law, Col. Calhoun, and nephew, Col. Yates; Col. Keogh, Capt. Smith, Lieut. Crittenden, a son of Gen. Crittenden; Lieut. Sturgis, a son of Gen. Sturgis; Col. Cooke, Lieut. Porter, Lieut. Harrington, Dr. Lord, Mark Kellogg, the Bismarck Tribune reporter, the only correspondent with the expedition, and 190 men and scouts. Custer went into the battle with companies C, L, I, F, and E, of the Seventh Cavalry, the staff and the non-Commissioned staff of his regiment, and a number of scouts, and only one Crow scout remains to tell the tale. All are dead. Custer was surrounded on every hand by the Indians, and his men and horses fell as they fought on the skirmish line or in the line of battle. Custer was among the last to fall, but when his cheering voice was no longer to be heard the Indians made easy work of the remainder. The bodies of all, save the Tribune correspondent alone, were stripped and most of them horribly mutilated. Custer's was not mutilated. He was shot through the body and through the head. Kellogg lay in the field as he fell, undisturbed. The Indians lost heavily in the battle. When Terry reached their village the camp was strewn with robes gaudily painted, with finely-dressed hides and interesting or valuable Indian trinkets. In a burial tent they left nine of their chiefs, whose spirits had flown to the happy hunting-ground arrayed most gorgeously. In the ravines the dead, were abandoned by the Indians, evidently in their solicitude for the wounded. Here was found the Crow scout who survived the battle by hiding in a ravine. He believes their loss to have been greater than the loss of the whites, for in the battle they were so much more numerous and were the assaulting party after the first dash. Col. Reno and his officers agree with this estimate. The village numbered 1,000 lodges, and many willow tepees had been added within a few days. It is believed by those who fought that the warriors must have numbered 4,000. The casualties foot up 261 killed, and 52 wounded. Thirty-eight of the wounded were brought to Fort Lincoln, and the remainder, excepting the three who died, were cared for on the field. Charley Reynolds was also killed. Reynolds, with Kellogg, De Wolf, Reed, Boston Custer, and Lord were the only citizens killed.

The Vikings.

The Northmen, in the seventh, eighth and ninth centuries after the birth of Our Lord, inhabited the great peninsula of Norway and Sweden, with branches established in Denmark, Finland, the Faroe Islands, and all about the coasts of Northern Europe. They were a wild rough and tumultuous race, so given to roving and adventure that they made their appearance, at one time or another in their history, in every part of Europe which could be reached by sea. They certainly visited the shores of the Mediterranean, and they once held such complete possession of a part of France that their name is still preserved in the title of the province of Normandy. Before the time of King Alfred, they ravaged England continually.

These people, who have left their names all over Europe, were never welcome anywhere. Even at home, they quarreled among themselves. And it would seem that when things grew uncomfortable for them in their own country, they took ship and sailed the sea, carrying destruction and terror wherever they went. The chiefs were called Jarls, or Earls, and the sons of chiefs to whom were given maritime command were called Vikings. These were usually the younger sons, who were driven out by contentions at home, as well as by their own fierce desires, to find plunder and occupation in ravaging the coasts of the rich Southlands. In course of time, these wild sea-rovers were masters of the seas of Europe. Their captains came to be known generally as Vikings. In these days we should call them pirates. Such a man was Flokko, who, in the ninth century, discovered Iceland. Pirate he may have been, but he took with him families, cattle and tools, as if intending to live like an honest man.—St. Nicholas for July.

Sultan Murad.

The new Sultan of Turkey, Murad, it appears, is only a polygamist so far as politeness and propriety require him to be. He would rather be the husband of one wife than of fifty, and would have been glad to marry a princess of some European house, if such a princess could have been found to take him. His first wife is still his favorite. She is about twenty-six years old, not pretty exactly, but distinguished-looking and intelligent, and has great influence with her husband. She has had no children, and Murad has therefore been obliged to marry two other wives, chosen for him by her. She showed her intelligence by picking out two extremely beautiful but extremely stupid young women, one of whom is the mother now of Prince Paladin, a child of 10, and the other of a princess of the mature age of 4. The mother of Murad, we may add, was a Circassian, or more probably a Cossack girl, and a Christian, who was allowed to practise her faith in the harem by Abdul Medjid. It is even whispered that the new Sultan is more than half a Christian himself, which would indeed complicate the situation.—New York Times.

THERE is a decided falling off this year in pleasure travel to Europe.

THIRTY-NINE PEOPLE DROWNED.

Terrible Fate of the Village of Rockdale, Iowa—The Town Swept Away by a Flood, and Every Inhabitant Drowned.

DUBUQUE, IOWA, July 6.—On the night of the Fourth the little hamlet of Rockdale, 3 miles southwest of the city was swept away as with the besom of destruction. Every building in the little town save the Catfish Mill was washed from its foundation and torn into a wreck that defies description. The dozen buildings—all that were located on the bottom lands of the Catfish save the mill—were carried off as if they were so many cockleshells, and whirled adown the surging and boiling current, crushing them into fragments.

Thirty-nine human beings were swept hurriedly from life into the great maelstrom of death. Men, women and children to that number, were drowned, and their stiff bodies—those of the thirty that have been rescued up to this hour—were ranged side by side along the shady side of the mill awaiting the last sad funeral rites. In one instance we saw an entire family of four all lying dead; in another every member of the family but one lay dead. The bodies of some were found in the debris of the crushed buildings near the scene of their death, while others, and the greater part of them all, were found along the banks from a few rods to a mile down the stream. Some were almost entirely hid from view by the floods of mud that had been swept along by the maddened waters, with perhaps a hand only exposed to sight, or a foot or a portion of the face, or perhaps only a small portion of their clothing. A large number of little children, boys and girls, ranging from 3 to 12 years old, were the victims of the dread avalanche, and altogether the scene was a most sickening one.

Through the day the people of the village had joined more or less in the festivities of the Centennial Fourth. In the evening the rain began to fall, and all took shelter in their homes or at the stores or saloons. At about half an hour after midnight the Catfish was discovered to have become so swollen that the streets were overflowing, and escape to the surrounding highlands cut off. Higher and higher rose the rushing waters, while the storm kept pitilessly on. Down rolled the surging water in great waves several feet high, and the smaller buildings were swept away. At about 1 o'clock a portion of the dam gave way. Now the stream had grown to 2,000 feet wide and fully twenty feet deep. As the buildings were swept into wrecks, the inmates were hurled into the surging torrent, their voices crying out for help amidst the roar of thunder and storm and crash, while lurid lightnings flashed every minute, lighting up the dreadful scene for an instant, and leaving it blacker than before.

THE DEAD.

Joseph Becker, Ellen, his wife, and two children; James Pearce, Emma, his wife, and two children; Peter Becker and five children, also his housekeeper and two children; Mrs. Carey and two children; John Klassen, wife, and five children; Peter Kapp, wife and four children; Mrs. Kingsley, Thomas Blenkiron, Oliver Blenkiron, William Bradbury, and Richard Burke—thirty-nine in all, of which thirty-two have been recovered.

Altogether, the scene was one to touch a heart of stone. Thousands of people have visited it during the day, and people are going and coming constantly. The neighbors, with kindly alacrity, opened their doors to such of the afflicted as remained, and afforded every comfort in their power. The bodies of the dead were washed by kind hands, and many of them taken into the dwellings near by. The members of the Board of Supervisors were early on the ground, working like Trojans to recover the dead and give care to the living.

LATER.

Thirty-one bodies of the drowned have been recovered. Further search will be continued until all are found. William Watters, William Coats, and the Board of County Supervisors, labored with untiring industry to aid the sufferers and to recover the dead.

Zach. as a Witness.

To appreciate the full force of the scene you should have known Zach. Wesson. He was a Yankee, unadulterated; honest, as the world goes; intelligent enough to discuss political matters, and keep a corn-score with chalk; and always ready with a pat rejoinder in badinage. It was he who, on a certain occasion, when his steps were a little unsteady, acknowledged, with much seeming sorrow, that he had the symptoms of Democracy very strong. He had a broad face, and a big mouth, and if he was not handsome, he had at least an open countenance.

Once upon a time Zach. was summoned as a witness in the case of The State vs. Joseph Pingree. This Pingree was accused of horse-stealing and sheep stealing, together with various other misdeeds. The trial was at the session of the Supreme Judicial Court in Oxford county, Maine.

Zach. was called by the prosecution, as a neighbor of the accused, to testify in regard to general character.

"Mr. Wesson," said the county attorney, "you know the defendant in this case?"

"Yaas—raything think I do."

"What is his character for truth and honesty?"

"I never knew 't he had any, sir."

"Of your knowledge, can you say that he was ever in the habit of stealing?"

"Wal, sir—I've known him to have mutton without owning a sheep, or having any money; I've known him to have plenty of fresh eggs, without ever buying or keepin' a hen; and he ken keep a good fire all the winter off 'm my wood-pile. Them's what I call strong symptoms."

"Do you not know that he has stolen wood from your pile?"

"Wal—I'll tell ye, 'Squire; I know 'at one day last winter I put a charge 'o powder into a log of my wood; and I know 't the next mornin' that ere log was gone; and I know 'at afore another night the top of Job Pingree's old stove was blowed off. That's what I call another symptom."

"That will do, Mr. Wesson."

Zach. was not cross-questioned, and in the end Job Pingree was convicted.—New York Ledger.

COUNTERFEIT PRESENTMENTS.

What Some Celebrated Faces are Worth to the Photographers.

Charles Dickens began by inviting the photographer to join him in "a little brandy and water, hot." He had only one sitting in this city, and that he gave Ben Gurney. About 25,000 copies of the picture taken then have been sold in New York alone. In 1860 the Prince of Wales sat for Gurney. He had deferred it to the last moment, and while he was sitting the military were waiting outside to escort him to the depot. Lord Lyons entered and said, "Your Highness, we have no time to spare, and there is a multitude outside anxious to see you." "Let them wait," replied the Prince: "they can see my photo when I am gone." Over 5,000 copies of this picture were sold. The Grand Duke Alexis and suite had their pictures taken on Sunday, the only day they were disengaged. The Duke was with difficulty prevailed upon to lay his cigarette aside during the sitting, and owing to his large frame was very difficult to pose in such a way that the figure might not be taken for that of a prize fighter; his face no one could mistake. About 5,000 of his pictures were sold.

Actors and actresses generally make the best pictures, because they understand the art, for it is an art, of graceful posing. Harry J. Montague, of Wallack's, has sat for Gurney, Mora and Sarony, and fully 10,000 of his pictures have been sold in New York. Lester Wallack has been sitting for pictures for over twenty years, and perhaps 40,000 copies of his photographs have found places in the albums. Of Edwin Booth's pictures, over 75,000 copies have been sold within fifteen years. Edwin Forrest's pictures never sold well.

John Brougham sells very well for a man of his age and modesty. About 10,000 copies of Capoul's portrait were bought. Of John Wilkes Booth's about 5,000 copies were sold before the killing of President Lincoln, and as many more afterward. "Humpty Dumpty" Fox, Fechter, Thorne, Stevenson, Barrymore, and Sothern sell about equally well, the limit for each not exceeding 5,000. The photographs of Parepa Rosa have had a larger sale than those of any other singer or actress who ever sat in this country. Nearly 50,000 copies have been obtained from one negative. Next to Parepa Rosa the demand has been greatest for Mrs. Scott Siddons's pictures, over 40,000 of which have been sold. Of Christine Nilsson about 30,000 have been sold. Of Adelaide Neilson about the same number; of Clara Morris 25,000; of Fanny Davenport nearly as many. Maggie Mitchell, who used to sell her own pictures while traveling, has had 25,000 of her photographs disposed of.

Of Horace Greely about 20,000 photographs were sold during the last Presidential canvass. There has always been a great demand for the pictures of Astor, Vanderbilt and Stewart.

A Mountain of Saw-Logs.

In the log-pocket of the Boom Company, about two miles above this village, may be seen a sight which, to the practical man, is worth traveling many miles to gaze upon. There are more than 100,000,000 feet of saw-logs, piled in one immense mass, an eighth of a mile in width, ten to thirty feet in depth, and three miles in length. The high water has kept crowding them down until they are pulled 15 feet high above the water's edge, and as much below it in many places. They are sticking up in every conceivable direction and shape, some of them on end, with the lower part several feet above the level of the water, and within a few feet of these you will step on the end of another which, standing straight, just protrudes over the current. It seems as if they had been piled together much as the glaciers are formed, layer upon layer and log upon log, until they have reached their present position. One can imagine the tremendous force with which this immense mass would precipitate itself down the river if anything should give way, but, fortunately, everything is firm. Something of an idea of the value of the mass may be formed when it is known that the logs are worth an average of nearly $1 each.—Menominee (Mich.) Herald.

The Cherry Tree.

When Summer breathes o'er budding leaves,
And woos the flowers to life and light,
And grassy legions throng the roads,
And linnets sing from morn till night,
Each jocund month reveals to me
New beauties in the Cherry tree.

Quaint rings, and moss, and snowy flakes,
And arms aglow with crimson gems;
I almost deem it has a soul
That trembles through its dainty stems;
For oft it shakes as if with glee,
That gnarled and cabalistic tree.

There's not a robin, blithe and brown,
Or lark that wings the upper air,
But knows its boughs as well as I,
And sings his quaintest carol there.
I ween they've spread o'er land and sea
The glory of the Cherry tree.

Well knows the plowboy, tireless elf,
The branches where the jewels cling,
And ere he milks the dreamy herd
He soars and banquets like a king.
To boy and bird alike 'tis free,
Under that old, familiar tree.

When Phœbus sinks beneath the wave,
And lilies hang their saintly beads,
While roses weep beside the gate,
And robins sleep in lofty beds,
The lover bends with reverent knee
Under that old, familiar tree.

No fervid vows that friendship pours,
Beneath his green and sheltering cope,
When moonlight tips his happy leaves,
Are ever marred or madly broke.
Oh, never faithless tryst could be
Under the staunch old Cherry tree.

When autumn comes, with haggard eyes,
And rebel winds assail his crown,
And all his kingly breast is bare,
And leaves like tears come trembling down,
Still fancy's pensive eye doth see
A martyr in the Cherry tree.

Around the Farm.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Louisville Courier Journal gives it as his opinion that the chufa will work a revolution in hog raising in the South.

AN automatic scarecrow is now offered for sale in England. It is run by clockwork, and is so arranged as to fire a gun at any desired time, or regularly at intervals. Its construction is said to be very simple.

EXPERIMENTS recently made in England indicate that wagons are most easily drawn, on all kinds of roads, when the fore and hind wheels are the same size and the pole lies lower than the axle.—Rural World.

A COMPANY has been formed here to manufacture sugar from melons, it being held that there is more saccharine matter in them than in beets, and that the establishment of the factory will furnish a market for the many hundred tons of that class of produce that are usually left to rot in the fields after the market becomes glutted.—Sacramento Record.

IN feeding oxen, it must be remembered that they are ruminating animals, and need to be fed differently from horses. Having a large stomach, an ox needs coarse food to fill it. An ox, therefore, is not refreshed by a feed of fine meal; but is by one of cut hay, or straw and meal mixed, and the noon feed for oxen should be of this kind. Give ample time for feeding and rest at the noon spell.

THERE are thousands of rocky, worthless knolls in New England that might become good property if their owners would plant them to maple, beech, oak, or birch; as there are, perhaps, an equal number of worthless acres of cold, boggy land that might be made to bear the useful needle-leafed trees. This centennial year is a good time to try some experiments in this direction.—Mirror and Farmer.

A CROW was killed recently in the orchard of Mr. Barbric, of Plymouth, Me., and upon opening his crop more than twenty nests of caterpillar eggs were found, showing that this much-abused bird had dined on about 4,000 or 5,000 caterpillar eggs. The crow is not only a scavenger, but very useful also in destroying insects and worms that prey upon crops. The damage it sometimes does to young corn is more than counterbalanced by the service it renders on the farm.

A CHEAP STAIN.—Take one gallon of strong vinegar, one pound dry-burnt umber, half-pound fine rose pink, half-pound dry-burnt Vandyke brown. Put them in and mix them well; let the mixture stand one day, and it will then be ready for use. Apply this stain to the sap of black walnut with a piece of fine sponge. It will dry in half an hour. The whole piece is then ready for the filling process. When the work is completed the stained part can not be detected, even by those who have performed the job. By this recipe wood of poor quality, and mostly of sap, can be used with good effect.

DR. LEE, a distinguished agricultural writer and chemist, said in an address before the New York Agricultural Society: "I regard it as one of the greatest discoveries of this age, that about 97 per cent. of the ingredients which make up the whole substance of wheat, rye, barley, oats, peas and beans exist in the air in inexhaustible quantities. To transmit these aeriform bodies into the plants above-named and into grass and roots at the smallest expense is the object of nearly all your hard work." This was spoken thirty years ago, and the doctor says that the views then expressed will not now be called in question.

About the House.

MILK CAKE.—One cup sugar, one-half cup butter, one cup sweet skim-milk, one teaspoonful soda, and a little seasoning. This makes a very nice cake, and very convenient, especially when eggs are scarce.

DELICIOUS BROWN BREAD.—Two coffee cups corn meal, one coffee cup molasses, one quart sweet skim-milk, one tablespoonful salt, one of saleratus, and two eggs. Stir with flour or shorts about as stiff as for cake. Bake in a pudding-dish. This is excellent, and any one testing it will pronounce it good.

FOR mending valuable glass objects which would be disfigured by common cement, chrome cement may be used. This is a mixture of five parts gelatine to one of a solution of acid chromate of lime. The broken edges are covered with this, pressed together and exposed to the sunlight, the effect of the latter being to render the compound insoluble even in boiling water.

A BREAKFAST DISH.—Grate a half dozen ears of green corn, stir in a cup of milk, add flour with which yeast powder in the proportion of two teaspoonsful to the quart have been sifted, until the whole is a thick batter. Add two or three eggs, well-beaten, and a pinch of salt. Fry as batter cakes, or bake in gem pans in a quick oven.

IT is not generally known that boiled carrots, when properly prepared, form an excellent substitute for eggs in puddings. They must, for this purpose, be boiled and mashed, and passed through a coarse cloth or hair sieve strainer. The pulp is then introduced among the other ingredients of the pudding, to the total omission of eggs. A pudding made up in this way is much lighter than where eggs are used, and is much more palatable. On the principle of economy, this fact is worthy of the prudent housewife's attention.

WHAT IS SALERATUS?—Wood is burnt to ashes, ashes are lixivated, ley is the result. Ley is evaporated by boiling, black salts is the residuum. The salt undergoes purification by fire, and the potash of commerce is obtained. By another process we change potash into pearlash. Now put these in sacks and place them over a distillery mashtub, where the fermentation evolves carbonic acid gas, and the pearlash absorbs it and is rendered solid, the product being heavier, whiter and drier than the pearlash. It is now saleratus. How much salts of ley and carbonic acid gas a human stomach can bear and remain healthy is a question for a saleratus eater. Some people say saleratus will not harm the stomach. It is a ley.—Detroit Free Press.

An Untimely June Bug.

The other night Mary Jane Jones's beau came up to see her, and invited Mary Jane out to have some ice-cream and soda-water, which has a very exhilarating effect on some people, and it proved to be the case with this young man. Just as soon as he had got that ice-cream down he began to think how nice it would be to have Mary Jane always with him, and then he began to calculate how far $10 a week would go towards supporting a family, and he concluded that with economy and management on Mary Jane's part and some self-denial on his, such as not playing billiards but once a week, and limiting himself to, say, ten cigars in that time, they might live very nicely. Provisions did not cost much, and Mary Jane's clothes could not be very expensive, say $20 a year or so, and—well, he calculated it all as he walked home with her and resolved that night to know his fate. Mary Jane noticed that he was very abstracted and guessed the reason and felt glad within herself that she had put on her white dress and new bustle, feeling quite sure that these had done the business, for what young man can resist a white dress, let alone a beautiful new bustle. When they got to the front gate they saw that the front steps were fully occupied by the residue of the Jones family, so they sat down on the horse-block under the spreading maples, and there he essayed to tell the story of his love. Just as he got to where he was going to say in conclusion, "The world is a dreary waste to me without you, Mary Jane, will you marry me and share my humble cot," a big fat June bug dropped from over head right down the back of Mary Jane's dress. She jumped up and gave a Modockian whoop and frantically clutched at the back of her neck and shouted, "catch him, o-o-o-wouch; catch him, he's killing me;" and the way she tore round there and danced up and down scared the young man nearly to death, and brought the Jones family out headed by the old gentleman who made straight for the supposed "him" and kicked him off the sidewalk, ruining his new summer clothes and causing him to go right round the first corner home. Then the neighbors helped catch Mary Jane, and some one made a raid down her back and brought forth the bug, and she wept sorely and trod it ruthlessly under foot, remembering what might have been if the bug hadn't been. Then she explained it all very clearly to those neighbors, but they sniffed their noses in the air and remarked to each other privately to the effect of its being a very likely story indeed that a June bug should stir up such a fracas, and get a young man kicked off the walk, they guessed. If the truth was known, etc. All this week Mary Jane has gone round with dishevelled locks and has attained a chronic squint from much watching through closed blinds for a form that don't come; and her young man stays within the fastness of the store and wonders and wonders, with a pain that never dies, what ailed Mary Jane, and if they always act that way, and the evenings and mornings go right on and don't answer.—Detroit Free Press.

The Expose of Spiritualists' Tricks.

A decided furore has been created in this city and Brooklyn by the performance of Mr. William Irving Bishop, at Chickering Hall, who permits clergymen and others to bind his wrists, ankles, limbs, etc., with cords as tightly and securely as they may, and then as easily removes them as if they were made of tow. He has given several exhibitions of this character, and on the last occasion the tying was done by Mr. Milton Bradley, Dr. Meredith Clymer and Mr. Clark Bell. The cord apparently rendered Mr. Bishop immovable. He released himself in the full presence of the audience, and afterwards, on being fastened a second time, performed the tricks of playing upon musical instruments, holding up bloody hands, a la Eva Fay, as openly as daylight itself. These entertainments are for the elite, and have been attended by aristocratic audiences. The lower strata can see the same thing on Broadway, near Broome street, where the exhibition of a man tightly bound with ropes releasing himself with a few contortions of the body is in hourly progress. In fact, the cabinet manifestations of the Davenport brothers, the Fays, and others, have been so thoroughly exposed that the only surprise is that apparently-intelligent people are still led astray by the claim of there being something supernatural in such entertainments.—New York Letter.

THE Bostonians are saddened by the intelligence that Dom Pedro noted in the South End a sign reading "Furnitur Moved and Gobing done."

SHOCKING TRAGEDY.

Sudden and Terrible Death of an Actress—She Falls from the Sixth Story of a Chicago Hotel.

Miss Louise Hawthorne, a well-known and popular actress, recently met with a sudden and horrible death in Chicago, where she had been playing an engagement. We glean from the papers of that city the following particulars of the awful tragedy:

What the circumstances were, or what happened before the culmination of the horror, cannot be told. So far as is known she was alone, and all that can be discovered are the bald facts of a terrible death, the details of which are heartrending and sickening. In the evening Miss Hawthorne attended the performance of the "Two Orphans," at Hooley's Theater. Returning to the Tremont House, she spent some time in conversation with friends. A little after midnight she bade them good-night and retired to her room. A few minutes before 3 the bell of her room rang in the office, and a sleepy bell-boy toiled up the six flights of stairs. Reaching the door he rapped, but there was no response. He knocked twice more, but no answer came. Then he listened and heard a groan. Startled by this he went to the tube, and calling the office asked who occupied the room. The reply came, and again he went to the door and rapped for admission. Once more he heard the groans, and then, thoroughly frightened, he went to the tube and called for Mr. Eldredge, the cashier of the hotel. That gentlemen hastened up and thundered at the door. He heard no reply, nor did the groans come in response as they had for the bell-boy. There was no time for parleying then, and Mr. Eldredge entered the room. He looked in every direction, in the closet and bath-room, but found no one. The room faces east, and there are but two windows on the east side, looking out into a narrow well or court. The southern window was closed, but the northern window was open. It was raining at the time, and the wind blew the rain into the room. There was nothing to indicate what had become of her, but the searchers felt a dread of some impending calamity. Down in the office the clerk had heard a crash out in the court, but the beating of the rain-drops on the panes and the swell and fall of the wind came right afterwards, and he forgot the crash until he saw men hurrying down, with pallid faces. From the rotunda there is a window looking out into a jog in the court. But they could see nothing from that. A door was tried, but was found to be fastened. They went around to another part of the building, and through another door. One of the party had procured a lantern, and, as they hurried across the slippery pavement of the little well, they trembled in dread of what they feared to find.

There she lay, face downward. The arms were spread, but the hands clenched as she had grasped at the air in her descent. Her hair was unbound, and the tangled meshes flowing over her head concealed the wreck the cruel pavement had made. The blood flowed fast, and, mingling with the falling rain, ran in streams. For a moment the seekers were horror-stricken. Finally one of them turned the body over gently, and as the dim light of the lantern fell upon the face, a horrible sight was disclosed. She had struck a little in front of the top of the head, and the forehead was mashed and splintered. The scalp and flesh hung in a great flabby mass. One of the eyes was gone, and the other battered out of all semblance to an eye. The whole upper part of her face was mangled, and the mouth drawn and distorted. Scattered around were the brains that had dropped out of the great, gaping wound that had usurped the place of her forehead. The blood still flowed in great gulps, lifting the blue and white pile of flesh, that rose and fell as the stream jumped out. Down through her hair, over the white wrapper it poured, and the rain coming down steadily washed it tenderly away. There was little about her face then to testify to the beautiful countenance of the woman who half an hour before had been all health and bloom. A stretcher was procured, and she was moved into the house. A pillow was placed under the remnant of the head, and a sheet spread over her to drown the horrible sight. A policeman was called in to watch by her, and a note sent to the Coroner, who arrived at 7 o'clock. Shortly after his arrival, the corpse was uncovered and a jury impaneled. She wore a gray dress, over which she had thrown a wrapper, indicating that she had not retired, though her bed was found turned down and appearing as though she had laid down upon it. The inquest was brief, and a verdict of accidental death found. The undertaker was sent for, and the body removed to his premises and packed in ice, awaiting instructions from her family or friends.

A Disappointed Claimant.

A curious case of attempted suicide occurred here the other day at the doors of the British Legation. As is well known Sir Edward Thornton, Her Brittannic Majesty's Minister, has acted for a long time past as umpire of the distracting Mixed Commission of the United States and Mexico for the settlement of claims against either of these countries by citizens of the other. The patience, ability and integrity shown by Sir Edward in this thankless task have earned him general admiration and respect; but he has naturally been obliged to pronounce adversely in many instances, and the claimants whom he has dismissed naturally think ill of him. One man, whose case was unfavorably acted upon not long ago, being driven to despair, went to an apothecary's and bought three small vials of laudanum. Armed with these, he went to the Legation, drank the contents of the three vials one after the other, rang the bell and sat down on the steps. When the servant appeared, the man asked for Sir Edward, who happened to be in the hall and came out at once. The man confronted him with a haggard face, and said, in substance: "You have ruined me by deciding against my just claims, I have no hope left in this world, and I summon you to meet me before a Judge more just than yourself, in the next. I shall be there before you, for look here"—as he spoke, endeavoring to draw the ials out of his pocket. Sir Edward, thinking the man mad, and that he was about to produce a pistol, caught his arm and shook it violently. The three vials, redolent of laudanum, fell from his hand to the ground. Sir Edward's servants by this time had called a policeman, and with his help the would-be suicide was removed to the hospital, where the prompt use of a stomach-pump restored him to life, much against his will. I am sorry to spoil the pathos of the story by adding that experts pronounce the man's claim one of the most impudent put in before the commission.—Washington Cor. New York World.

Great Shopkeepers.

In Scribner for July, Dr. Holland says that A. T. Stewart's "business was one which he did not do, and could not do, without a depressing influence upon all who were dependent upon the same business for a livelihood. His great establishment was a shadow that hung over all the others in the town. The man with ten or twenty thousand dollars; the man with a hundred thousand dollars; the man with one thousand dollars, each, alike, was obliged to compete with this man, who had millions outside of the necessities of his enormous business. The hosier, the hatter, the woman in her thread-and-needle shop, the milliner, the glove-dealer, the carpet-dealer, the upholsterer, all were obliged to compete with Stewart. If he had followed a single line of business, it would have been different; but he followed all lines. Wherever he saw a profit to be made, in any line of business that was at all congruous with dry goods, he made it. He thus became a formidable competitor with half the shop-keepers in New York. His capital made it possible for him to ruin men by the turn of his hand—to fix prices at which everybody was obliged to sell at whatever loss. However proud the New Yorker may have been of his wonderful establishment—and there is no doubt that it was pretty universally regarded with pride—it is easy now to see, in this period of unexampled depression, that our business men at large would be in a much better condition if that establishment had never existed. If all the money that has gone to swell his useless estate had been divided among small dealers, hundreds of stores, now idle, would be occupied, and multitudes of men now in straitened circumstances, would be comparatively prosperous.

"But it is said that he employed a great many people. Yes, he did; but did he pay them well? Would they not have been better paid in the employ of others? The necessities of his position, and his ambition, compelled him to pay small prices. The great mass of those who served him worked hard for the bread that fed them, and the clothes that covered them. The public bought cheaply; the outside dealers suffered; the employes laid up no money, and Mr. Stewart got rich. Under the circumstances, and under the necessities of the case, was it desirable that he should get rich? We think not; and we think that the final result of this great shop-keeping success is deplorable in every way. It has absorbed the prosperities of a great multitude of men and women. New York would be richer, happier, more comfortable, more healthy in all its business aspects, if the great store at Tenth street had never been built. Five hundred men who invest their little capital in the varied lines of business, and pay their modest rent, and devote their time to their affairs, content with profits that give them and their families a fair living and a few savings for a rainy day, are certainly better for a city than a single Stewart, who absorbs their business and leaves them in distress."

A Horrible Accident.

David Pascal Spafford, one of the oldest and most highly respected residents of this city, stepped into the mill of Todd, Haven & Co, on business yesterday, and sat down, without thinking of danger, on the table of the butting cut-off saw. The saw under or in the table upon which Mr. Spafford seated himself is worked by an improved lever, which raises half the saw instantaneously, if necessary, above the surface of the table, throws it into gear, and works it at the rate of 3,000 revolutions a minute. In a few moments after he had seated himself, his foot accidentally came in contact with the lever raising the saw until it touched him, and then, springing forward to escape from the sudden and fearful torture, he rested the entire weight of one foot on the lever, throwing the swiftly-revolving saw up, it cutting him so that one of his legs and hips was almost severed from his body. Death resulted instantly from the effect of the wounds. He leaves a wife and three children.—Minneapolis (Minn.) Cor. Chicago Tribune.

Results of Modern Warfare.

The common belief, one apparently founded in reason, is that each notable improvement in warlike weapons involves a corresponding increase in the slaughter and horrors of war, and so—or, at least, this is the theory of a certain school of philosophers—tends to the ultimate abolition of war itself. The contrary is maintained with much ingenuity by a recent essayist in England, himself a military man, who contends that while the chief feature in the military history of the past twenty years—say, since the Crimean war—has been the vast improvement, both in small arms and artillery—in firearms—the proportion of killed and wounded to combatants has been lessened as compared with the results obtained from the old-fashioned weapon. That the fire-lock or old Brown Bess should have been more deadly than the Snider-Enfield, Martini-Henry, Springfield, Chassepot or needle-gun, and the clumsy old smooth-bore cannon than the rifled Krupp or Armstrong field-gun, seems an absurdity; nevertheless the facts are these. Taking the great battles of modern European history anterior to the Franco-Austrian campaign of 1859, we find that at Talavera, 1809, one-eighth of the combatants engaged were killed and wounded; at Austerlitz, 1805, one-seventh; at Malplaquet, 1709, Prague, 1759, and Jena, 1806, one-sixth; at Friedland, 1807, and Waterloo, 1815, one-fifth; at Marengo, 1800, one-fourth; at Borodino, 1812, nearly one-third, 80,000 of 250,000 combatants falling; at Salamanca, 1812, and Leipsic, 1813, one-third, the estimate of the latter battle including only the French; at Eylau, 1807, of a total effective of 160,000, there fell or were wounded 55,000, or more than a third, while at Zorndorf, 1758, the most murderous of modern battles, 32,000 of the 82,000 Russians and Prussians engaged were stretched on the field at the close of the day, or two-fifths.

At Solferino, the first great battle in which rifled firearms were employed, the loss fell to one-eleventh, that is to say, was one-quarter less than at Talavera, the least bloody of the earlier battles recorded above, while as compared with Zorndorf less than one-fourth of the percentage of killed and wounded was maintained. At Konniggratz, where the breech-loader came into play, the loss was barely one-fifteenth of the force engaged. During the war of 1870 the loss at Worth was one-eleventh and at Sedan one-tenth, while at Gravellotte, which was properly believed to be one of the most tenaciously fought and bloody battles of modern times, it was but one-tenth. It must be remarked that in this campaign the mitrailleuse came into play, and that the part borne by the German field artillery was such as almost to amount to a revolution in field tactics.

The same proportion of decreased casualties from improved weapons is preserved in earlier history. Zorndorf was but a skirmish to Cressy, where the French lost in killed alone 30,000 men, 1,200 knights and 11 princes. On the fatal field of Cannæ 50,000 of 80,000 Romans were slain, and in the same campaign, at the battle of the Metaurus, a Carthaginian army hastening to the reinforcement of Hannibal, was literally destroyed.

The reasons for this apparent paradox are, after all, simple. In the early days of Roman or Grecian warfare, where the weapons were the pilum or spear, heavy hand-to-hand fighting was the absolute rule, followed by a massacre when one side or the other gave way and fled. In the middle ages fighting was well nigh as close and the pursuit quite as bloody, while the undefended archers or spearmen fell easily before the knights or men-at arms. When firearms were introduced, and fighting was carried on from a distance, and the end of the battle was usually the capture and loss of a commanding position, the porportion of loss was immensely diminished. Then, too, each successive improvement made in weapons has been met by corresponding alterations in tactics to obviate its results. The day of massive columns or deep formations to be mown down by fire reserved, as at Bunker Hill, New Orleans or Fontenoy, till the men "can see the white of the enemy's eyes," has gone by, and troops now engage at longer distances, in much looser order, and, above all, make more use of cover.—New York World.

Terrible Warning.

An awful example of the perils of tight-lacing and unrestricted—which means too restricted—pulling-back, is reported from London, where at a recent drawing-room a loyal fair one appeared in a costume like an umbrella-cover with a table-cloth attached to it. "Surviving, though shattered, the tumult and strife" of the angry element of fashionable females striving to reach the presence of majesty, she was at last presented to the Queen and executed that elaborate, not to say exaggerated, obeisance that the occasion demanded. Lower and lower descended her fair head, more and more remarkable became the sinuosity of her spine, till at length her curtsey was achieved and she arose; that is, she tried to rise. Alas! she was in the predicament of the old-time exquisite who hadn't come prepared to dance, and quite like the ancestral camel, who, according to popular legend, got his back up at some disparaging remark offered by Noah as he was boarding the ark, and was never thereafter able to get it down again—a fact which accounts for the anatomical peculiarity of the race from that day to this. She couldn't straighten herself, and, had it not been for the assistance afforded her by a couple of officials, would have tumbled forward on her pretty nose, helpless as a dismounted knight in armor of old time, or a turtle that has been keeled over, or else have remained till this day—

Like St. John Nepomuc in stone, or Lot's wife in salt, a terrible warning to all her sisters to shun the flowing pull-back.

Defaming the Dead.

A curious trial occurred in Paris recently. Some time ago a young man named Ollivier was killed in a duel at Longevy by M. Feuilherade, and, on examination, it was found that he wore a metal belt, calculated to serve as defensive armor. There was much talk about it, especially as the deceased was a professional duelist, and has been engaged in five contests. His mother brought action against M. Feuilherade for defaming her son, and [illegible] the belt had been worn for years by medical advice. Her openly-expressed grief deeply impressed the tribunal, and the defendant was condemned to pay a fine of 250 francs and costs.

AN officer of the first French Empire founded a singular banquet in 1867, which has since been celebrated annually. The peculiarity about it is that the guests to be qualified must be at least 80 years of age. Each year some of those present on the previous occasion are found to be missing, but their places are taken by others who have arrived at the required age. At the last banquet held recently twenty-five persons were present, the oldest one being 98 years of age.

An Unmusical People.

It is a curious fact that of written music there is in the Turkish Empire a total absence. Every song or march, or piece of dance music, is learned by ear, first by the compeser himself, then by those who intend to perform the piece after him. There are no names even for musical notes, and thus it is by memory the most popular airs are saved from oblivion. A foreign musician, however, Mlle. de Shippo, has at last accomplished the task of representing, in a written form, by the usual notation, a great number of the most popular Turkish airs.

Pretty Serious Facts About the President of the United States.

Mr. H. T. YARYAN, a special agent of the Treasury Department, was recently removed from office, against the wishes and judgment of his superiors in the department at the instance of the President of the United States.

What was the cause of the removal of Mr. YARYAN? It has been published, and stands uncontradicted, that he was removed because he himself had previously procured the removal of another revenue officer named W. B. MOORE a friend and favorite of Gen. GRANT. This explanation of the removal of Mr. YARYAN is universally accepted as true. Under these circumstances it becomes of interest to inquire what manner of man is this W. B. MOORE and what service he has rendered to so endear himself to the President of the United States. The authentic documents which we lay before our readers this morning throw a flood of light upon this subject and fully answer this pertinent inquiry.

In the year 1871, when the conduct of the President of the United States in attempting to acquire San Domingo was undergoing investigation by Congress, the President and his friends were apprehensive of very damaging testimony from one RAYMOND H. PERRY, a citizen Rhode Island. It was deemed important to get this witness out of the way. Charges of various crimes were alleged as having been preferred against him in Texas and on this allegation, a requisition from the Governor of that State was obtained for his rendition Fearing that this requisition might not be complied with, or that a writ of habeas corpus might rescue PERRY from the clutches of the officers a further plan was concocted to seize him and forcibly abduct him from the State of Rhode Island—to kidnap him, in other words—and put him out of the way of testifying. W. B. MOORE, aided by ORVILLE E. BABCOCK, planned this scheme, and undertook to carry it into execution. The letters, which we print, fully establish these startling facts.

The first of these documents is a note written at the Executive Mansion bearing date the 18th of February, 1871, signed by ORVILLE E. BABCOCK the confidential secretary of the President, introducing W. B. MOORE to Col. WHITLEY Chief of the Treasury Secret Service. In this note BABCOCK says to WHITLEY MOORE "wishes your assistance in a matter of interest to us all," The "matter of interest to us all," as fully appears by the subsequent correspondence of MOORE himself turns out to be the kidnapping and forcible abduction of a citizen to prevent his testifying against the President. The "all" to whom it was of interest of course included the President.

The second document bearing the same date with the first is a letter from MOORE to WHITLEY inclosing BABCOCK'S note of introduction saying that he is in pursuit of PERRY, and assigning as a reason that the integrity of the President is in question through what he calls PERRY'S misrepresentation.

The third document is another letter from MOORE to WHITLEY proposing that papers be "carefully detached" from one requisition and attached to another and recommending, "to avoid interference with writs of habeas corpus that the arrest be made in Washington rather than in Rhode Island.

The fourth document is a third letter from MOORE to WHITLEY, acknowledging a telegram from WHITLEY, and stating that as soon as it was received, the writer, MOORE, "went to the Executive Mansion" to ascertain if a new requisition could be obtained. This letter contains the following precious intruction as to the course to be adopted by the Chief of the Secret Service toward a citizen of this free republic:

"If we cannot arrest and hold, make arrest anyhow and take chances."

The fifth document is a fourth letter from MOORE to WHITLEY, from which it appears that a part of the scheme was to decoy PERRY into the District of Columbia where, as had been stated in a previous letter, they had no fear of habeas corpus.

The sixth document is a letter from NETTLESHIP, a deputy of WHITLEY, to WHITLEY. NETTESHIP had been sent on to seize PERRY, and force him away; but he became alarmed, and concluded that PERRY was "Nobody's fool.

We thus find that the President of the United States has removed a faithful public officer, to reward a person for attempting to kidnap a citizen who threatened to testify before a committee of Congress against the President.

What sort of civil service is this?

We learn that the Butler "News" has turned Democratic. It seems that our editors over there can be turned in almost any shape. 'Pull on the gee line!'

I am determined to get on a farm this fall and therefore if you wish to get your clothing for less than first cost, call on A. Lauferty, in John Hebel's new building.

We were called upon by a large amount of laboring men, who are about to strike, because of lack of work. We are reliably informed that former business men, who keep up the cry of "Patronize Home Industries" during their whole career of business, have gone back on it, and to-day, because they have advanced slightly, have entirely forgotten the days gone by. Several brick structures are now in progress, which the contracts are given to men abroad, and the same work could be done at home for thirty cents less on the thousand, by our home brick masons, who spend their money with us and pay taxes in the town and county. Is this right, gentlemen. If it is we will, if not look to the future and see if some different arrangements can not be made to uphold and encourage home industry. If you expect to have mechanics remain in our town give them a chance, but you can never do it by paying thirty cents more on a thousand to foreign men, for the same work you could have done at home The Courier to-day, as for the last several years, stands by the town and the county of DeKalb. We are in earnest in what we say, and would like to know why partiality is shown, because of a little bad luck on the part of some of our home contractors. We have several brick masons who nature has made natural geniuses. They has done everything that could be expected for the town, and always donate liberally to every enterprise that comes before the people, which benefits the town or county. We have neglected to mention this important point, and, as we say above, hope it will be differently conducted in the future.

Cedar Creek, Garrett &c.

We took a trip to the above place last Saturday, to witness a balloon ascension, fire-works, foot race and a bower dance. The balloon did go up. but the foot race didn't go up—or down either. The anvils fired and the fire works in the evening were good. J. C. Reed conduced the bower dance in good shape, but there was room for only two sets to dance at a time, making it "kinder tiresome" for some who was waiting to shake the fantastic toe. We give Cedar Creek credit for the enterprise, although dollars and cents were worth far more to many of them than a good advertisement would be abroad.

Next we came to Garrett, following the balloon from Cedar Creek. We met many of our old friends there, among them Jack Brown, just around the corner, Theo. Sargent, of the popular hotel Christ, the dutch saloon keeper, on Cowen street, Putt Bros., of the "News," and others too numerous to mention.

Mothers.

Many a discouraged mother folds her tired hands at night and feels as if she has, after all, done nothing altho' she has not spent an idle moment since she arose. Is it nothing that your little helpless children have some one to come to with all their childish griefs and joy? Is it nothing that your husband is "safe when he is away to his business, because your careful hands direct everything at home! Is it nothing when his business is over, that, he has the blessed refuge of home, which you have that day done your best to brighten and refine? O, weary and faithful mother, you little know your power when you say, "I have done nothing!" There is a book in which a fairer record than this is written over against your name.

The glorious fourth was ushered in by rain and guns with rain predominating This state of affairs continud until quite late in the morning, and it was well on toward noon before the clouds broke away and things assumed a more cheerful aspect. The programme which had been annc'd was abandoned in the forenoon, and the procession, did not form until 1 o'clock P. M. At that hour the Garrett Sunday School with a beautiful banner, and the Avilla band and quite a large number of citizens marched to the grove, and the exercises which had been announced previous were complied with. An old gentleman (Mr. Koons) whose memory we presume reaches far back to the early history of this country, delivered a very appropriate prayer and Dr. Sherman read the Declaration of Independence. P. V. Hoffman Esq., delivered the oration which was highly appreciated by the audience.—Garrett News.

The 18th day of July will be long remembered in the annals of Auburn for on that day one of the greatest shows on the earth will give a grand holiday exhibition to our citizens. On that day the famous John Robinson's World's Exposition will pitch its tents, and present to the public the vast wonders of a grand Menagerie Aquarium and complete Circus. Old John Robinson's name and fame are too well known to require much notice, but this season he has gone so far ahead of all prior efforts, that we yield him our personal indorsement knowing how well he merits it. He seems to spend his immense wealth with a generous hand, and has this season lavished over sixty thousand dollars more upon his mammoth show, which has already cost over one million of dollars. The intrinsic merit of his vast concern made him a success and the old adage that "success makes success" is fully proved by his lifelong experience and the liberal indorsement of ministers and families as well as the public in general. He has lately added several new features to his Caravan including Giraffes an immense Rhinoceros Sea Lions, Labrador Seals a giant Ostrich the largest performing Elephant in America, Asiatic and African Lions forty new cages and dens of wild beasts from every quarter of the globe and also added many new thorough-bred horses to the Circus, and engaged some of the best riders and gymnasts of Europe and America. The entire show is so vast that a pen description can not do it justice, but we advise the public to go and see it on Tuesday July 18th and the day will be ever after remembered with pleasure The grand street parade which is said to excel anything in the United States, will take place on the morning of the exhibition. Remember the day Tuesday July 18th at Auburn. One day only.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

Washington, D. C. July 10, 1876.

Dear Courier—You may imagine how refreshing it is, on awakening in the morning, after a hot, restless night, to find that a most horrible murder has been committed but a few yards from your peaceful abode. Its a change from the monotony of every day life, but I prefer the monotony in every thing except this oppressively warm weather. Back on an alley not far distant is a long row of poor, dilapidated buildings occupied by the colored folks. In fact you can see patches of low, dirty buildings scattered here and there in almost any part of the city, the aristocratic portion not being entirely free from their presence. These are usually jammed full of colored people, as was the case in this instance. A very black repulsive looking negress of about thirty-five, married to a man about seventy, determined to rid herself of the incumbrance by chopping him into mince-meat. First she cut off his head and then unjointed his legs at the knees and hips, and arms at the elbows, when her knowledge of surgery seems to have been exhausted. She buried the parts in an ash heap in the back yard, and then went to Alexandria. These little evidences of love and affection add a charm and zest to conversation over the breakfast table, though not generally regarded as good appetizers.

The Brave Custer.

There was intense excitement here over the announcement of the slaughter of Gen. Custer and his brave boys. Now that it has been confirmed by the saddest of details, there is a desire to blame some one, and give it a political bearing. I do not think anyone is to blame It is known that Custer was a firm, dashing, reckless General, and depending too much upon his prowess as an Indian fighter, and animated with a desire to pass from under a cloud that had lately fallen upon him as he supposed, through the administration, he had resolved to make a dash without exactly knowing the number of the foe with which he had to contend. He was brave to a fault, but not always discreet. Of an impetuous and haughty nature, he was not always popular with the boys. In a conversation with Capt. Doyle, the other day, who served on the plains with the General, he told me many incidents to show the rigid character of the man.

Starting easterly with his command across the plains one morning in August he ordered his men to fill their canteens as they would not be allowed to stop on the way for water. They traveled all day long under the burning sun and passed several streams of water, but no one was permitted to break ranks to get a supply. At night they camped near a stream, but before they dismounted the General ordered that not a man should leave camp, but that a regular detail would be made for that purpose The boys were indignant, and the officers not caring much, many slipped out and went to the stream for water. It was discovered by the General, who called to one or two officers to follow him, and went down to the river and fired upon the men killing two or three. There was considerable noise made over the matter, and a court martial was threatened, but it was finally hushed up. He loved flattery, and if a favor was wanted of him, that would gain it. An officer of the regiment wanted a furlough. The General was down on furloughs, but he liked to play poker. The officer challenged him to a game one afternoon, and let him win a few dollars and then declared he could play no more with one who was universally recognized as the finest poker player in the country, &c. He got his furlough. The General was disposed to be high-toned sometimes and he often had the band ordered out to play for him while he ate his meals. "'Tis but a little faded flower," and other like songs were great favorites with him, and these affairs always create much amusement in the regiment. But for all this he was a gallant General, and was regarded as one of the best Indian fighters in the army.

Washington, July 6.—The sensation of to-day is the battle with the Indians, in which General Custer and other brave officers and three hundred soldiers were killed. During the day great eagerness was manifested to learn additional particulars, but it was impossible to obtain any reliable information on the subject. Many persons were disinclined to believe the report as published in the morning papers, and though, as previously stated no authentic date could be obtained, enough was learned later in the day to convince everybody that an ugly fight with the Indians had occurred, in which the whites were seriously worsted. The official dispatches thus fas received by the Secretary of War confirm in all essential particulars the reports published, and but little more of detail has as yet been learned. The event is discussed with considerable animation in army circles, where the worth and character of the officers and companies engaged in the fight are well known. Civilians seem to think there was fault upon the part of the commanders of other forces which should have come to the support and rescue of Custer's command. But military men combat this idea with their belief that, as General Custer has been somewhat under a cloud lately, he was probably unnecessarily daring in his exploit, and, in his desire to cover himself with glory, he dashed in headlong, with the hope of whipping the Indians with his own meagre force, unassisted by the other detachment embraced in the expedition. No intelligence has yet been received upon which sound opinions can be based, except that which was evident from the first, namely, that the expedition was badly managed.

Tilden and Hendricks.

One of the grandest ratification meetings ever held in the city came off last Thursday evening. The Republicans had given one a few days before, but they were completely eclipsed by the Democracy, not through the lavish expenditure of money, but by the spontaneous outpouring and enthusiasm of the people. It was the liveliest gathering I ever saw, and made Republicans admitted it to be much more of a success than their own. And that is the way the campaign will end. I believe Tilden and Hendricks, although strong now before the people, will still grow stronger, and will march to sure victory on the day of election. Why see here what the editor of the "Capitol" says, and when you remember that this is the same man who edited the 'Mac-a-cheek' Press, of which our neighbor Bro. Weaner, was foreman, it will have some force. He says:

> "Out of the disgrace of the National Republican party Mr. Bristow arose to punish the vicious and give heart to the virtuous; out of the shamefulness of New York Democracy Mr. Tilden sprang up to fill with more encouragement and better success the role of a reformer. Both of these statesmen based their claims for preferment on the novel ground of personal and political integrity. When the Cincinnati convention refused to nominate the late Secretary of the Treasury, and Republican party refused to endorse his crusade against official corruption, and declined to follow in the leadership of a man who would carry the sword of justice in one hand and the olive branch of peace in the other.
>
> In nominating Gov. Tilden for the Presidency the St. Louis delegates, for themselves and for the Democracy, enlisted the whole party, North, South, East and West, in the school and cause of the men and the principles that have redeemed the great city and State of New York from the rule of the most powerful ring that ever depleted the treasury of wealthy community as fast as it could be filled by the most burdensome and unjust taxation. Tilden and the Democracy must be regarded as synonymous with reform and economy, and reform and economy are the hope of the good, the necessity of the poor and the safety of the country."

Now, look out for more bayonet rule in the south. They are talking about it here already. They have hired a mean-spirited skalawag by the name of Hill, formerly in the rebel army, to write up as many lies as his excessive brass permits him to do. The Republican here gives publicity to his sickly emanation, as it does to everything of an unfair, bitterly partizan character.

In the pending Presidential campaign the reconstructed States are the key of the position; and unless the Republicans can defeat the Democrats in three or four of the States now held by the latter they have no hope of escape. Hence, they look upon Mississippi, Arkansas, Louisiana, and Alabama with a covetous eye; and if violent counsels prevail they will resort to the desperate expedient of the bayonet for recovering their lost ground in the South.

Well, let them try it. Then, when it is too late to profit by the fast, they may learn that an influential body of Republicans in the North will not tolerate further attempts to carry elections in the South by stuffing ballot boxes according to martial law, nor look quietly on while peaceable citizens are denounced as banditti because they protest against such outrages. Nevertheless it becomes more and more apparent that the Republicans, hard pressed by the emergency, contemplate a raid of violence in the coming canvass in four or five of the reconstructed States.

I was glad to meet J. S. Barns, Esq., who was here with his wife several days They were on their way to the Centennial, and I regret that I did not see more of them here.

C. A. O. McClellan, Esq., and son, called in last Thursday, after spending some time at Philadelphia. Mrs, M. stopped over at Baltimore to visit friends until their return.

CENTENNIAL BELLS.

BY B. F. TAYLOR.

Ye belfry'd blacksmiths in the air,
  Smite your sweet anvils good and strong!
Ye lions in your lofty lair,
  Roar out from tower to tower, along
The wrinkled coasts and scalloped seas,
Till winter meets the orange breeze
From bridal lands that always wear
The orange-blossoms round their hair.
  Centennial Bells, ring on!

Pour out, ye goblets, far and near,
  Your grand melodious iron flood,
Till pine and palm shall think they hear
  The axes smite the stately wood,
Nor dream the measured cadence meant
The clock-tick of the continent!
The foot-fall of a world that nears
The field-day of a hundred years,
  Centennial Bells, ring on!

Ye blossoms of the furnace fires,
  Ye iron tulips, rock and swing.
The People's Primal Age expires,
  A hundred years the reigning King
Strike one, ye hammers overhead,
Ye rusty tongues, ring off the red,
Ring up the Concord Minute Men,
Ring out old Putnam's wolf again.
  Centennial Bells, ring on!

Where prairies hold their flowery breath
  Like statues in the marble ledge—
Where mountains set their glittering teeth
  Through wide horizon's rugged edge,
And hold the world with granite grip
As steady as a marble lip,
And here, and there, and everywhere,
With rhythmic thunder strike the air.
  Centennial Bells, ring on!

Ring down the curtain on To-day
And give the Past the right of way,
Till fields of battle red with rust,
Shine through the ashes and the dust
Across the Age, and burn as plain
As glowing Mars through window-pane,
How grandly loom like grenadiers
These heroes with their hundred years!
  Centennial Bells, ring on!

Ring for the blue-eyed errand boy
  That quavered up the belfry stair,
"They've signed it! Signed it!" and the joy
  Rolled forth as rolls the Delaware.
The old man started from a dream,
His white hair blew, a silver stream,
Above his head the bell unswung
Dumb as a morning-glory hung;
The time had come awaited long,
His wrinkled hand grew young and strong,
He grasped the rope as men that drown
Clutch at the life-line drifting down,
The iron dome as wildly flung
As if Alaska's winds had rung.

Strange that the founder never knew,
When from the molten glow he drew
That bell, he hid within its rim
An anthem and a birthday hymn.

So rashly rung, so madly tossed,
Its old melodious volume lost,
Its thrilled horizon rent and cleft,
Of sweet vibration all bereft,
And yet, to hear that tocsin break
  The silence of a hundred years,
Its rude discordant murmurs shake
  And rally out the soul in cheers
Would set me longing to be rid
Of sweeter voices, and to bid
  Centennial Bells be dumb!

Although no mighty Muscovite,
  No iron welkin rudely hurled,
That bell of Liberty and Right
  Was heard around the Babel world
Land of the green and golden robe!
  A three-hours journey for the Sun,
Two oceans kiss thee round the globe,
  Up the steep world thy rivers run
From geologic ice to June.
A hundred years from night to noon!
  In blossom still, like Aaron's rod!
The clocks are on the stroke of one,
  One land, one tongue, one Flag, one God!
    Centennial Bells, ring on!

THE STORY OF THE SIGNING.

In the days of the Continental Congress the delegates used to travel to the capital, at the beginning of each session, from their several homes, usually on horseback; fording streams, sleeping at miserable country inns, sometimes weather-bound for days, sometimes making circuits to avoid threatened dangers, sometimes accomplishing forced marches to reach Philadelphia in time for some special vote. There lie before me the unpublished papers of one of the signers of the great Declaration, and these papers comprise the diaries of several such journeys. Their simple records rarely include bursts of patriotism or predictions of national glory, but they contain many plaintive chronicles of bad bed and worse food, mingled with pleasant glimpses of wayside chat, and now and then a bit of character-painting that recalls the jovial narratives of Fielding. Sometimes they give a passing rumor of "the glorious news of the surrendering of the Colonel of the Queen's Dragoons with his whole army," but more commonly they celebrate "milk toddy and bread and butter" after a wetting, or "the best dish of Bohea tea I have drank for a twelvemonth." When they arrived at Philadelphia, the delegates put up their horses, changed their riding gear for those habiliments which Trumbull has immortalized, and gathered to Independence Hall to greet their brother delegates, to interchange the gossip of the day, to repeat Dr. Franklin's last anecdote or Francis Hopkinson's last gibe; then proceeding, when the business of the day was opened, to lay the foundation for a new nation.

"Before the 19th of April, 1775," said Jefferson, "I had never heard a whisper of a disposition to separate from the mother-country." Washington said: "When I first took command of the army (July 3, 1775), I abhorred the idea of independence; but I am now fully convinced that nothing else will save us." It is only by dwelling on such words as these that we can measure that vast educational process which brought the American people to the Declaration of Independence, in 1776.

The Continental Congress, in the earlier months of that year, had for many days been steadily drifting on toward the distinct assertion of separate sovereignty, and had declared it irreconcilable with reason and a good conscience for the colonists to take the oaths required for the support of the Government under the Crown of Great Britain. But it was not till the 7th of June that Richard Henry Lee, of Virginia, rose and read these resolutions:

"That these United Colonies are, and of right ought to be, free and independent States; that they are absolved from all allegiance to the British Crown, and that all political connection between them and the State of Great Britain is, and ought to be, totally dissolved.

"That it is expedient forthwith to take the most effectual measures for forming foreign alliances.

"That a plan of confederation be prepared and transmitted to the respective colonies for their consideration and approbation."

These resolutions were presented under direct instructions from the Virginia Assembly, the delegates from the colony selecting Mr. Lee as their spokesman. They were at once seconded, probably after previous understanding, by John Adams, of Massachusetts—Virginia and Massachusetts being then the leading colonies. It was a bold act, for it was still doubtful whether anything better than a degrading death would await these leaders, if unsuccessful. Gage had written, only the year before, of the prisoners left in his hands at Bunker Hill, that "their lives were destined to the cord." Indeed, the story runs that a similar threat was almost as frankly made to the son of Mr. Lee, then a schoolboy in England. He was one day standing near one of his teachers when some visitor asked the question: "What boy is that?" "He is the son of Richard Henry Lee, of America," the teacher replied. On this the visitor put his hand on the boy's head and said: "We shall yet see your father's head upon the Tower Hill"—to which the boy answered: "You may have it when you can get it." This was the way in which the danger was regarded in England; and we know that Congress directed the Secretary to omit from the journals the names of the mover and seconder of these resolutions. The record only says, "Certain resolutions respecting independence being moved and seconded, Resolved, That the consideration of them be deferred until to-morrow morning; and that the members be enjoined to attend punctually at 10 o'clock, in order to take the same into consideration."

On the next day the discussion came up promptly and was continued through Saturday, June 8, and on Monday, June 10. The resolutions were opposed, even with bitterness, by Robert Livingston, of New York, by Dickinson and Wilson, of Pennsylvania, and by Rutledge, of South Carolina. The latter is reported to have said privately "that it required the impudence of a New Englander for them in their disjointed state to propose a treaty to a nation now at peace; that no reason could be assigned for pressing into this measure but the reason of every madman, a show of spirit." On the other hand, the impudence, if such it was, of John Adams, went so far as to defend the resolutions as stating "objects of the most stupendous magnitude, in which the lives and liberties of millions yet unborn were intimately interested;" as belonging to "a revolution, the most complete, unexpected and remarkable of any in the history of nations." On Monday the resolutions were postponed, by a vote of seven colonies against five, until that day three weeks; and it was afterward voted (June 11), "in the meanwhile, that no time be lost, in case Congress agree thereto, that a committee be appointed to prepare a Declaration to that effect." Of this committee, Mr. Lee would doubtless have been the Chairman, had he not been already on his way to Virginia, to attend the sick-bed of his wife. His associate, Thomas Jefferson, was named in his place, together with John Adams, of Massachusetts, Benjamin Franklin, of Pennsylvania, Roger Sherman, of Connecticut, and Robert R. Livingston, of New York.

This provided for the Declaration; and, on the appointed day, July 1, 1776, Congress proceeded to the discussion of the momentous resolutions. Little remains of us of the debate, and the best glimpse of the opening situation is afforded to the modern reader through a letter written by Mr. Adams to Mercy Warren, the historian—a letter dated "Quincy, 1807," but not printed until within a few years, when it was inserted by Mr. Frothingham in the appendix to his invaluable "Rise of the Republic of the United States." The important passage is as follows:

"I remember very well what I did say; but I will previously state a fact as it lies in my memory, which may be somewhat explanatory of it. In the previous multiplied debates which we had upon the subject of independence, the delegates from New Jersey had voted against us; their constituents were informed of it and recalled them, and sent us a new set on purpose to vote for independence. Among these were Chief Justice Stockton and Dr. Witherspoon. In a morning when Congress met, we expected the question would be put and carried without any further debate; because we knew we had a majority, and thought that argument had been exhausted on both sides, as indeed it was, for nothing new was ever afterward advanced on either side. But the Jersey delegates, appearing for the first time, desired that the question might be discussed. We observed to them that the question was so public, and had been so long discussed in pamphlets, newspapers, and at every fireside, that they could not be uninformed, and must have made up their minds. They said it was true they had not been inattentive to what had been passing abroad, but they had not heard the arguments in Congress, and did not incline to give their opinions until they should hear the sentiments of members there. Judge Stockton was most particularly importunate, till the members began to say, 'Let the gentlemen be gratified,' and the eyes of the assembly were turned upon me, and several of them said: 'Come, Mr. Adams; you have had the subject longer at heart than any of us, and you must recapitulate the arguments.' I was somewhat confused at this personal application to me, and would have been very glad to be excused; but, as no other person rose, after some time I said: 'This is the first time in my life when I seriously wished for the genius and eloquence of the celebrated orators of Athens and Rome; called in this unexpected and unprepared manner to exhibit all the arguments in favor of a measure the most important, in my judgment, that had ever been discussed in civil or political society, I had no art or oratory to exhibit, and could produce nothing but simple reason and plain common sense. I felt myself oppressed by the weight of the subject, and I believed if Demosthenes or Cicero had ever been called to deliberate on so great a question, neither would have relied on his own talents without a supplication to Minerva, and a sacrifice to Mercury or the God of Eloquence.' All this, to be sure, was but a flourish, and not, as I conceive, a very bright exordium; but I felt awkwardly.

"I wish some one had remembered the speech, for it is almost the only one I ever made that I wish was literally preserved."

"John Adams," said Jefferson long afterward to Mr. Webster and Mr. Ticknor, "was our Colossus on the floor. He was not graceful, nor elegant, nor remarkably fluent, but he came out occasionally with a power of thought and expression that moved us from our seats." It seems a pity that no adequate specimen remains to us of this straightforward eloquence. And yet it is cause for congratulation, on the whole, that the only speech fully written out after that debate, was the leading argument for the negative. Long years have made us familiar with the considerations that led to national independence; the thing of interest is to know what was said against it; and this is just what we happen to know, through the record of a single speech.

After any great measure has been carried through, men speedily forget the objections and the objectors, and in a hundred years can hardly believe that any serious opposition was ever made. How utterly has the name of John Dickinson passed into oblivion!—and yet, up to the year 1776, he had, doubtless, contributed more than any one man, except Thomas Paine, to the political emancipation, so far as the press could effect it, of the American people. The "Farmer's Letters" had been reprinted in London with a preface by Dr. Franklin; they had been translated into French, and they had been more widely read in America than any patriotic pamphlet, excepting only the "Common Sense" of Paine. Now their author is forgotten—except through the college he founded—because he shrank at the last moment before the storm he had aroused. Who can deny the attribute of moral courage to the man who stood up in the Continental Congress to argue against independence? But John Adams reports that Dickinson's mother used to say to him: "Johnny, you will be hanged; your estate will be forfeited or confiscated; you will leave your excellent wife a widow," and so on; and Adams admits that if his wife and mother had held such language, it would have made him miserable, at least. And it was under this restraining influence, so unlike the fearless counsels of Abby Adams, that Dickinson rose on that 1st of July and spoke thus:

"I value the love of my country as I ought, but I value my country more; and I desire this illustrious assembly to witness the integrity, if not the policy, of my conduct. The first campaign will be decisive of the controversy. The Declaration will not strengthen us by one man, or by the least supply, while it may expose our soldiers to additional cruelties and outrages. Without some prelusory trials of our strength, we ought not to commit our country upon an alternative, where to recede would be infamy, and to persist might be destruction.

"No instance is recollected of a people without a battle fought, or an ally gained, abrogating forever their connection with a warlike commercial empire. It might unite the different parties in Great Britain against us, and it might create disunion among ourselves.

"With other powers, it would rather injure than avail us. Foreign aid will not be obtained but by our actions in the field, which are the only evidences of our union and vigor that will be respected. In the war between the United Provinces and Spain, France and England assisted the provinces before they declared themselves independent; if it is the interest of any European kingdom to aid us, we shall be aided without such a Declaration; if it is not, we shall not be aided with it. Before such an irrevocable step shall be taken, we ought to know the disposition of the great powers, and how far they will permit one or more of them to interfere. The erection of an independent empire on this continent is a phenomenon in the world; its effects will be immense, and may vibrate round the globe. How they may affect, or be supposed to affect, old establishments, is not ascertained. It is singularly disrespectful to France to make the Declaration before her sense is known, as we have sent an agent expressly to inquire whether such a Declaration would be acceptable to her, and we have reason to believe he is now arrived at the Court of Versailles. The measure ought to be delayed till the common interests shall in the best manner be consulted by common consent. Besides, the door to accommodation with Great Britain ought not to be shut, until we know what terms can be obtained from some competent power. Thus to break with her before we have compacted with another, is to make experiments on the lives and liberties of my countrymen, which I would sooner die than agree to make. At best, it is to throw us into the hands of some other power and to lie at mercy, for we shall have passed the river that is never to be repassed. We ought to retain the Declaration and remain masters of our own fame and fate."

Those were the opinions of the "Pennsylvania Farmer," as condensed by Bancroft from Mr. Dickinson's own report, no words being employed but those of the orator. In the field, some of the bravest men were filled with similar anxieties. It was thus that the new Adjutant General, Joseph Reed, described the military situation:

"With an army of force before, and a secret one behind, we stand on a point of land with 6,000 old troops, if a year's service of about half can entitle them to this name, and about 1,500 raw levies of the province, many disaffected and more doubtful; every man, from the General to the private, acquainted with our true situation, is exceedingly discouraged. Had I known the true posture of affairs, no consideration would have tempted me to take part in this scene; and this sentiment is universal."

This statement was not laid before the Congress, to be sure, but one from Gen. Washington, conveying essentially the same facts, was read at the opening of that day's session. In spite of this mournful beginning, and notwithstanding the arguments of Mr. Dickinson, the opinions of the majority in Congress proved to be clear and strong; and the pressure from their constituencies was yet stronger. Nearly every colony had already taken separate action toward independence, and, on that 1st day of July, the Continental Congress adopted, in committee, the first resolution offered by the Virginia delegates. There were nine colonies in the affirmative, Pennsylvania and South Carolina voting in the negative, the latter unanimously, Delaware being divided, and New York not voting, the delegates from that colony favoring the measure, but having as yet no instructions. When the resolutions came up for final action, in convention, the next day, the state of things had changed. Dickinson and Morrison of Pennsylvania had absented themselves and left an affirmative majority in the delegation; Cæsar Rodney had returned from an absence, and brought Delaware into line; and South Carolina, though still disapproving the resolutions, joined in the vote for the sake of unanimity, as had been half promised by Edward Rutledge, the day before. Thus, twelve colonies united in the momentous action; and New York, though not voting, yet indorsed it through a State Convention within a week. The best outburst of contemporary feeling over the great event is to be found in a letter by John Adams to his wife, dated July 3, 1776. He writes as follows:

"Yesterday the greatest question was decided which ever was debated in America, and a greater, perhaps, never was nor will be decided among men. * * * When I look back to 1761, * * * and recollect the series of political events, the chain of causes and effects, I am surprised at the suddenness as well as greatness of this revolution. Britain has been filled with folly and America with wisdom. * * * It is the will of Heaven that the two countries should be sundered forever. It may be the will of heaven that America shall suffer calamities still more wasting and distresses still more dreadful. * * * But I submit all my hopes and fears to an overruling Providence, in which, unfashionable as the faith may be, I firmly believe. * *

"The 2nd day of July, 1776, will be the most memorable epocha in the history of America. I am apt to believe that it will be celebrated by succeeding generations as the great anniversary festival. It ought to be commemorated as the day of deliverance, by solemn acts of devotion to God Almighty. * * * from one end of the continent to the other, from this time forward for evermore.

"You will think me transported with enthusiasm, but I am not. I am well aware of the toil, and blood, and treasure that it will cost us to maintain this Declaration, and support and defend these States. Yet, through all the gloom, I can see the rays of ravishing light and glory; I can see that the end is worth all the means. And that posterity will triumph in that day's transaction, even though we should rue it, which, I trust in God we shall not."

John Adams was mistaken in one prediction. It is the Fourth of July, not the 2nd, which has been accepted by Americans as "the most memorable epocha." This is one of the many illustrations of the fact that words as well as deeds are needful, since a great act may seem incomplete until it has been put into a fitting form of words. It was the vote of July 2 that changed the thirteen colonies into independent States; the Declaration of Independence only promulgated the fact and assigned its reasons. Had this great proclamation turned out to be a confused or ill-written document, it would never have eclipsed in fame the original resolution, which certainly had no such weak side. But this danger was well averted, for the Declaration was to be drawn up by Jefferson, unsurpassed in his time for power of expression. He accordingly framed it; Franklin and Adams suggested a few verbal amendments; Sherman and Livingston had none to offer; and the document stood ready to be reported to the Congress.

Some of those who throng to Philadelphia, this summer may feel an interest in knowing that "the title-deed of our liberties," as Webster called it, was written in "a new brick-house out in the fields"—a house still standing, at the southwest corner of Market and Seventh streets, less than a quarter of a mile from Independence square. Jefferson had there rented a parlor and bedroom, ready furnished, on the second floor, for thirty-five shillings a week; and he wrote the Declaration in this parlor, upon a little writing-desk, three inches high, which still exists. In that modest room we may fancy Franklin and Adams listening critically, Sherman and Livingston approvingly, to what was for them simply the report of a committee. Jefferson had written it, we are told, without the aid of a single book; he was merely putting into more systematic form a series of points long familiar; and Parton may be right in the opinion that the writer was not conscious of any very strenuous exercise of his faculties, or of any very eminent service done.

Nothing is so difficult as to transport ourselves to the actual mood of mind in which great historic acts were performed, or in which their actors habitually dwelt. Thus, on the 7th day of that July, John Adams wrote to his wife a description of the condition of our army, so thrilling and harrowing that it was, as he says, "enough to fill a humane mind with horror." We fancy him spending that day in sackcloth and ashes; but there follows on the same page another letter, written to the same wife on the same day—a long letter devoted solely to a discourse on the varieties of English style, in which he urges upon her a careful reading of Rollin's "Belles Lettres," and the Epistles of Pliny the Younger. Yet any one who has ever taken part in difficult or dangerous actions can understand the immense relief derived from that half hour's relapse into "the still air of delightful studies." And it is probable that Jefferson and his companions, even while discussing the title-deed of our liberties, may have let their talk stray over a hundred collateral themes, as remote from the immediate task as were Pliny and Rollin.

During three days—the 2nd, 3d, and 4th of July—the Declaration was debated in the Congress. The most vivid historic glimpse of that debate is in Franklin's consolatory anecdote, told to Jefferson, touching John Thompson, the hatter. The amendments adopted by Congress have always been accounted as improvements, because tending in the direction of conciseness and simplicity; though the loss of that stern condemnation of the slave trade—"a piratical warfare against human nature itself"—has always been regretted. The amended document was finally adopted, like the Virginia resolution, by the vote of twelve colonies, New York still abstaining. If Thomas McKean's reminiscences, at 80, can be trusted, it cost another effort to secure this strong vote, and Cæsar Rodney had again to be sent for, to secure the Delaware delegation. McKean says, in a letter written in 1814 to John Adams: "I sent an express for Cæsar Rodney to Dover, in the county of Kent, in Delaware, at my private expense, whom I met at the State House door on the Fourth of July, in his boots; he resided eighty miles from the city, and just arrived as Congress met." Jefferson has, however, thrown much doubt over these octogenarian recollections by McKean, and thinks that he confounded the different votes together. There is little doubt that this hurried night-ride by Rodney was in preparation for the 2nd of July, not the Fourth; and that the vote on the Fourth went quietly through.

But the Declaration, being adopted, was next to be signed; and here again we come upon an equally hopeless contradiction in testimony. This same Thomas McKean wrote in 1814 to ex-President Adams, speaking of the Declaration of Independence, "No man signed it on that day"—namely, July 4, 1776. Jefferson, on the other hand, writing some years later, thought that Mr. McKean's memory had deceived him, Jefferson himself asserting, from his early notes, that "The Declaration was reported by the committee, agreed to by the House, and signed by every member present, except Mr. Dickinson." But Jefferson, who was also an octogenarian, seems to have forgotten the subsequent signing of the Declaration parchment, until it was recalled to his memory, as he states, a few years later. If there was a previous signing of a written document, the manuscript itself has long since disappeared; and the accepted historic opinion is that both these venerable witnesses were mistaken; that the original Declaration was signed only by the President and Secretary, John Hancock and Charles Thompson; and that the general signing of the parchment copy took place on August 2d. It is probable, at least, that fifty-four of the sixty-six names were appended on that day; and that it was afterward signed by Thornton, of New Hampshire, who was not then a member, and by McKean, who was then temporarily absent.

Jefferson used to relate, "with much merriment," says Parton, that the final signing of the Declaration was hastened by a very trivial circumstance. Near the hall was a large stable, whence the flies issued in legions. Gentlemen were in those days peculiarly sensitive to such discomforts by reason of silk stockings; and when this annoyance, superadded to the summer heat of Philadelphia, had become intolerable, they hastened to bring the business to a conclusion. This may equally well refer, however, to the original vote; flies are flies, whether in July or August.

American tradition has clung to the phrases assigned to the different participants in this scene: John Hancock's commentary on his own bold handwriting, "There, John Bull may read my name without spectacles;" Franklin's, "We must hang together, or else, most assuredly, we shall all hang separately;" and the heavy Harrison's remark to the slender Elbridge Gerry, that, in that event, Gerry would be kicking in the air long after his own fate would be settled. These things may or may not have been said; but it gives a more human interest to the event, when we know that they were even attributed. What we long to know is, that the great acts of history were done by men like ourselves, and not by dignified machines.

Even those who look with the greatest pride and hope upon the present and future of this nation, must admit that the Continental Congress contained in 1776 a remarkably large proportion of able and eminent men. The three most eminent delegations, naturally, were from what were then the three leading States—Virginia, Massachusetts, and Pennsylvania. Virginia contributed Thomas Jefferson, who framed the Declaration; Richard Henry Lee, whose resolutions preceded it; Francis Lightfoot Lee, his brother; Wythe and Braxton, who had stood by Patrick Henry in the old House of Burgesses; Nelson, who had first proposed organizing the colonial militia of Virginia, and who later, as a General in the field, bombarded his own house at Yorktown, and Harrison, afterward the father of a President. Massachusetts sent Hancock, the President of the Congress; Samuel Adams, who shared with Hancock the honor of being excepted from a royal pardon; John Adams, "our Colossus on the floor;" Elbridge Gerry, afterward Commissioner to France and Vice President of the United States, and Robert Treat Paine, who had acted as public prosecutor after the Boston massacre. Pennsylvania contributed Dr. Franklin, "the Genius of the Day and the patron of American Liberty;" Robert Morris, "the financier of the Revolution," by whose sole credit the Continental army was sustained in its closing campaign, and who was afterward a prisoner for debt; Morton, who had been a member of the "Stamp Act Congress;" Ross, the mediator between the colonists and the Indians; Dr. Rush, renowned for science and for humanity; Clymer, soldier, student, writer, and prison reformer; the Irish-born Taylor and Smith, and the Scotch Wilson.

Yet the other Colonies were represented by delegations hardly less eminent. New York sent Livingston, of "Livingston's Manor," the correspondent of Edmund Burke, and one of the framers of the "Address to the People of Great Britain," in the first Continental Congress; Lewis, the Welsh merchant, to whom the British Government had given 5,000 acres of land for his services in the French and Indian war; Floyd, who, during the greater part of the Revolution, was an exile from his home, leaving it in the hands of the British; and Morris, afterward succeeded in Congress by his more famous brother, Gouverneur. New Jersey sent Hopkinson, lawyer, wit and poet—the author of "The Battle of the Kegs;" Dr. Witherspoon, the Scotch clergyman, President of Princeton College; Stockton, a patriot, and the ancestor of patriots; Clarke, known as "The Poor Man's Counsellor;" though not a lawyer, and "honest John Hart." New Hampshire had chosen Dr. Bartlett, the first to sign the parchment roll; Dr. Thornton, who succeeded Gov. Wentworth, and became acting-Governor of New Hampshire; and Whipple, who rose from a cabin boy to be a General commanding with Stark at Bennington, and under Gates at Saratoga. Connecticut sent Roger Sherman, shoemaker, lawyer and judge, who had studied while working at his bench, and had become a profound lawyer on borrowed law books; Huntington, afterward President of Congress, and Wolcott, who defended the Connecticut coast against Tryon, and, later, made peace with the Six Nations. Rhode Island sent Hopkins, who had introduced a bill into the Rhode Island Assembly to abolish slave importation, and had, at the same time, emancipated his own slaves; and Ellery, whose house was burned by the British army as soon as it took possession of the island.

Delaware had elected Rodney, who rode eighty miles, as already stated, to be present at the vote for independence; Read, who had roused his colony to contribute for the sufferers by the Boston Port bill, and McKean, the only man who served in a Congress through the whole Revolutionary war. The South Carolina delegates, forming at first the only delegation which had united in opposing independence, were equally united in finally approving and practically sustaining it, Middleton losing his fortune in the cause, Hayward being scarred for life by a gunshot wound, and both, with Rutledge, being imprisoned for a year at St. Augustine by the British; while young Thomas Lynch, who had come from the London Temple to espouse his country's cause, escaped the dangers of war only to be lost at sea at 30. These were all natives of the colony from which they came; but North Carolina and Georgia were honorably represented by what we should now call "carpet baggers." North Carolina sent Hooper, a Massachusetts man, who had studied law under James Otis; Hewes, the New Jersey Quaker, and Penn, the Virginian, who afterward rallied the mountaineers of his adopted State against Cornwallis. Georgia, again, sent the Virginian, Walton, who had learned to read by the light of pine knots when a carpenter's apprentice; the English Gwinnett, and Hall, of Connecticut, who at first came alone to the Congress, and was admitted to represent his district before the young colony had made up its mind. Finally, Maryland was represented by Chase, who, as Judge upon the bench, afterward said to a timid Sheriff doubtful about getting some rioters to jail, "Summon me, Mr. Sheriff, and I'll take 'em;" by Paca, who said, after his first session, that the Virginia gentlemen alone seemed able to carry on the Government, so that no one else was needed; Stone, one of the committee that afterwards framed the Articles of Confederation, and Charles Carroll, who, lest some namesake should share his risks, added "of Carrollton" to his name.

This is the story of the signing. Of the members who took part in that silent drama of 1776, some came to greatness in consequence, becoming Presidents, Vice Presidents, Governors, Chief Justices or Judges; others came, in equally direct consequence, to poverty, flight or imprisonment. "Hunted like a fox by the enemy;" "a prisoner twenty-four hours without food;" "not daring to remain two successive nights beneath one shelter"—these are the records we may find in the annals of the Revolution with respect to many a man who stood by John Hancock on that summer day to sign his name. It is a pleasure to think that not one of them ever disgraced, publicly or conspicuously, the name he had written. Of the rejoicings which, everywhere throughout the colonies, followed the signing, the tale has been often told. It has been told so often, if the truth must be confessed, that it is not now easy to distinguish the romance from the simple fact. The local antiquarians of Philadelphia bid us dismiss forever from the record the picturesque old bellringer and his eager boy, waiting breathlessly to announce to the assembled thousands the final vote of Congress on the Declaration. The tale is declared to be a pure fiction, of which there exists not even a local tradition. The sessions of Congress were then secret, and there was no expectant crowd outside. It was not till the 5th of July that Congress sent out circulars announcing the Declaration; not till the 6th that it appeared in a Philadelphia newspaper; and not till the 8th that it was read by John Nixon in the yard of Independence Hall. It was read from an observatory there erected by the American Philosophical Society, seven years before, to observe the transit of Venus. The King's arms over the door of the Supreme Court room in Independence Hall were torn down by a committee of the volunteer force called "Associators." These trophies were burned in the evening in the presence of a great crowd of citizens, and no doubt amid the joyful pealing of the old "Independence" bell. There is also a tradition that on the afternoon of that day, or possibly a day or two earlier, there was a joyful private celebration of the great event, by Jefferson and others, at the garden-house of a country-seat in Frankford (near Philadelphia), then occupied by Dr. Enoch Edwards, a leading patriot of that time.

It is certain that a portion of the signers of the Declaration met two years after, for a cheery commemoration of their great achievement, in the Philadelphia City Tavern. The enjoyment of the occasion was enhanced by the recent deliverance of the city from the presence of Gen. Howe, and by the contrast between this festival and that lately given by the British officers to him. A brief glimpse at the patriotic occasion, from the hitherto unpublished diaries of William Ellery, may well close this narrative.

"On the glorious Fourth of July (1778), I celebrated in the City Tavern, with my brother delegates of Congress and a number of other gentlemen, amounting, in the whole, to about eighty, the anniversary of Independency. The entertainment was elegant and well conducted. There were four tables spread; two of them extended the whole length of the room, the other two crossed them at right angles. At the end of the room, opposite the upper table, was erected an orchestra. At the head of the upper table, and at the President's right hand, stood a large baked pudding, in the center of which was planted a staff, on which was displayed a crimson flag, in the midst of which was this emblematic device: An eye, denoting Providence; a label, on which was inscribed, 'An appeal to Heaven;' a man with a drawn sword in his hand, and in the other the Declaration of Independency, and at his feet a scroll inscribed, 'The declaratory acts.' As soon as the dinner began, the music, consisting of clarionets, hautboys, French horns, violins, and bass viols, opened and continued, making proper pauses, until it was finished. Then the toasts, followed by a discharge of field-pieces, were drank, and so the afternoon ended. In the evening there was a cold collation and a brilliant exhibition of fireworks. The street was crowded with people during the exhibition.

"What a strange vicissitude in human affairs! These, but a few years since colonies of Great Britain, are now free, sovereign and independent States, and now celebrate the anniversary of their independence in the very city where, but a day or two before, Gen. "The Sick Man."

The almost historical phrase applied to the Empire of Turkey of "the sick man," is not modern or new. If any one will refer to English history, they will find that a certain Sir Thomas Roe, Ambassador from England in the time of James II., to Constantinople, said in dispatches which have often been quoted since, "Turkey is like the body of an old man, crazed with vices, which puts on the appearance of health, though near its end." But, as has been said, threatened empires, like threatened men, may live long. Two centuries ago the Empire of the Sultan, to an intelligent observer, looked as near its end as it does now. The ruler was an absolute tyrant, spending on palaces and women the means wrung from an over-taxed peasantry. There was no restraint upon him, except the one terror of an Oriental monarch—a sudden uprising of the religious classes, who might transfer the throne to his nearest male relative. There is in Turkey no Parliament, no impeachment, no charter, no opportunity for the people to present their wrong to the thrnoe. The only remedy is violent outbreak and sudden murder. This sword hangs over the harem of every Sultan. His wild pleasures and forgetfulness of justice may suddenly be punished in blood. This species of popular justice worked well in early Turkish history.

There can be very few royal houses in Europe with such a continued history as that of the present Sultan. For at least five centuries the faithful and submissive Turks have followed the crescent of the house of Othman, and, though they have murdered generation after generation of the royal debauchees, they have still kept on the throne descendants of the family which led them through such careers of blood and conquest as no other nation ever trod. The founders of the family were men of might. The present representatives are voluptuaries, cowards and tools of skillful Ministers.—New York Times.

Not Commonly Known.

The origin of the terms "6 penny," "10 penny," etc., as applied to nails, though not commonly known, is involved in no mystery whatever. Nails have been made a certain number of pounds to the 1,000 for many years, and are still reckoned in that way in England, a 10d. being 1,000 nails to 10 pounds, and 6d. being 1,000 to 6 pounds, a 20d. weighing 20 pound to the 1,000, and having jus one-half the number of nails to the 10 pounds of the 10d., and in ordering the buyer calls for the 3 pound, 6 pound, or 10 pound variety, etc., until, by the Englishman's abbreviation of pun for pound, the abbreviation has been made to stand for penny instead of pound, as originally intended; and when it comes to less than one pound to the 1,000, such as tacks, brads, etc., they are reckoned 6 ounces, 8 ounces, 12 ounces, etc., and the manufacturer who would make less than 1,000 nails to 10 pounds for a 10d. nail would be looked upon as a cheat, as in former times the difference in the cost of the manufacture of one pound of small nails over the larger sizes was much greater than now. As nails are now made and sold, the dealer only asks for the sizes needed by the usual designation, and the fact that there are now but about two-thirds of the number of nails formerly called for in the pound does not lessen the value.

LITTLE BY LITTLE.

"Little by little," the torrent said,
As it swept along its narrow bed,
  Chafing in wrath and pride,
"Little by little," and "day by day,"
And with every wave it bore away
A grain of sand from the banks which lay
  Like granite walls on either side.

It came again, and the rushing tide
Covered the valley far and wide,
  For the mighty banks were gone.
A grain at a time they were swept away;
And now the fields and the meadows lay
  Under the waves, for the work was done.

"Little by little," the tempter said,
As a dark and a cunning snare he spread
  For the young unwary feet,
"Little by little," and "day by day,"
I'll tempt the careless soul astray,
Into the broad and flowery way,
  Until the ruin is made complete.

"Little by little," sure and slow,
We fashion our nature of bliss or woe
  As the present passes away.
Our feet are climbing the stairway bright
Up to the region of endless light,
Or gliding downward into the night,
  "Little by little," and "day by day."

THEY were talking of a death, when one man asked: "What were his last words?" "He didn't say anything," was the reply. "That's just like him," said the first man, with an approving nod. "There was no gas about him. He was all business."

THIS memorandum, evidently poetic, was picked up in Fairmount Park last week: "Her dome uprears—flood of tears—twine the laurel wreath—Washington's teeth—strong as their springs, and as their ivory pure—hewer, fewer, skewer—gone to lunch."

AN old '49-er entered a barber shop, the other day, and, taking off his coat, said: "Yes, I do want a shave, and I don't keep a bottle in the shop, nor I don't want the hair on the back of my neck shaved; so you chaps look live and go slow, or I'll multilate you."

"CIRCUMSTANCES alter cases, you know," remarked a Scotch lawyer to an old farmer client. "Verra true, sir," replied the farmer, "and cases alter circumstances as weel; for, man, I mind when ye were young and had but few cases, your circumstances werna ower braw."

COL. BEN WILSON, of West Virginia, noted for politeness and debate, was informed by his physician that his end was near. "Of course, you know, doctor," said the invalid, "but may I inquire on what you predicate your theory?" The funeral was postponed.

JONES says he seldom has felt a like degree of un-equanimity and a desire to break a commandment and some one's head, as when to-day his next door neighbor brought back a buffalo robe he had borrowed last January; and asked Jones if he had got a spare thermometer.

THE new cook has been strongly recommended; but the first three dinners have been something too dreadful, and the mistress has ventured on a few words. Cook—"Well, mem, I dessay you think you're right; but, wherever I've been cook before, they in general found it best to take things as I give'em 'em."

OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES says that it is not by his permission that a part of his latest poem has been changed to read:

From flounces frothed with creamy lace
Peeps out the pug-dog's smutty face,
Or spaniel rolls his liquid eye,
Or stares the wiry pet of Skye—
Oh woman, in your hours of ease
How fond you are of purps and—fleas!

THE editor of the Brooklyn Argus is unmarried, and the Detroit Free Press says he thinks muslin dresses are cut out with a lawn mower. Such ignorance is painful. Some one should inform him that muslin dresses are knit, after the manner of a pair of stockings.—Norristown Herald. And yet—but, then, we are as ignorant as Argus himself—isn't there a kind of women called grass widows whose lawn dresses are laundressed by machines like lawn mowers? We merely ask for information.—Philadelphia Bulletin.

More Trouble for Farmers.

A new enemy to the growing crop of corn has been discovered this spring, which is committing considerable destruction in some sections of the country. It is a peculiar black worm, which can scarcely be crushed on the loose earth, as it is incased in a suit of armor difficult to break. They operate in the corn-hills by eating off the young plants. As many as ten or twelve worms are found in one hill. The cutworm has hitherto been of great annoyance, but this new pest is said to be even more destructive. In some townships farmers are busy replanting cornfields that have been thus devastated. Paris green has been found to be as efficacious in exterminating these worms as it is in destroying the potato-bug. Powdered white hellebore is said to be very efficacious.—Reading (Pa.) Times.

GROWTH OF THE TELEGRAPH.

The Old and the New, the Past and the Present.

[From the Philadelphia Press.]

Telegraphy was born in 1844. The name itself is of more recent date. The first message of importance transmitted was that of Silas Wright, written at his seat in the Senate to the Baltimore Convention, in June of the year we name, declining the nomination for the Vice Presidency which the convention conferred upon him. At that time the only telegraphic line in the world was between Washington city and Baltimore, and the first practical use of it was the transmission of messages to and from the Democratic Convention sitting in Baltimore.

In 1848 the nomination of Van Buren and Adams at Buffalo, on the Free Soil platform, was sent over the wires as far as they reached.

The nomination of Franklin Pierce, in 1852, was known throughout the greater part of the Union within a few minutes of the time it was made, and, as details came from the convention, almost simultaneously telegrams were received of the enthusiasm with which the nomination was hailed and of the salutes fired in the East, the South and the West in rejoicing over it.

In 1856 the nomination of Fremont and Dayton, in our own city, was telegraphed to every State in the Union. Being on the spot, and the marvelous invention being no longer a novelty, telegraphy left no particular impression of its use on that occasion upon us. But in November of that year the Presidential election for the first time was held in all the States on the same day, and the definite result was known about forty-eight hours after the polls had closed. During all of the first day following anxious crowds thronged Third street to hear the hourly dispatches from all sections of the vote of the previous day.

News of Mr. Lincoln's nomination in 1860 was received in this city about 3 p. m. The same night some thousands of ardent Republicans, unorganized, paraded the streets with music, torches, Roman candles, and Bengal lights, shouting for "The Flatboatman of the Mississippi!" That Mr. Lincoln was, or had been, a hard-working man, everybody knew, and it mattered little whether he was a "flatboatman" or a "rail-splitter." Either was evidence of his being of the true type of the American self-reliant, progressive character. Since his nomination, most of our readers easily remember how, quadrennially, Presidential nominations and the results of elections have been quickly known by the electric wires. In the deep interest shown yesterday around all the bulletin boards, as the news from Cincinnati was posted, there was none of the wonder that characterized the crowds twenty years ago, when telegraphy was a novelty. Familiar as all are with the operations and the infinite value of this modern application of science, still, on occasions like yesterday and to-day, when, in a moment, a few clicks will inform millions who is to be the next President, most reflecting minds give a thought to the genius of Morse, and the amazing outgrowth and application of his invention of 1844. As we sat by the recording battery in our office receiving news of the stock markets and produce markets of the country, news from the convention sitting at Cincinnati, then intelligence from London that Winslow was released, then, by a few more clicks, that the candidates were being placed in nomination, we, for moments, thought more of Morse than Maine's bright and bold statesman.

A Snake on Shipboard.

Mr. Frank A. Nash writes to the London Times: Will you kindly allow me to give your readers a short description of an interesting event which occurred at the London docks on Thursday, being the capture of a large boa-constrictor, on board the ship Surprise, which has just arrived from Port Natal, laden with wool and hides. It appears that, while at the Port, she went within the bar to load, being a small vessel, and consequently was close to the bush. One evening, after her cargo had been shipped, while the crew were having a little jollification among themselves, one of the sailors, who happened to have a concertina, was playing various tunes for the amusement of his companions. It is supposed that the music attracted the "boa" on board, and, being disturbed, it must have found its way into the hold, as the hatches were open at the time, and concealed itself among the cargo, as it was not discovered until the ship was well on her voyage home. When she arrived in dock the question arose as to how it was to be captured, but, with the assistance of Mr. Jamrach, it was successfully accomplished. I have seen the reptile, and I should think it is about eight or nine feet in length, and as thick as the calf of a man's leg. It has existed during the voyage on rats and other vermin, with which, I am informed, the vessel swarmed while at Port Natal, and now there is not a rat to be seen in any part of the vessel, so that in future it may be thought desirable to ship a "boa-constrictor" instead of other animals to catch the vermin.

The Black Hills Victims.

Speaking of the Black Hills bubble, the New York World says: "It must be recorded, to its shame, that the press has been the chief agency through which the heartless swindle has been wrought." This confession is candid and just. Some papers published gorgeous descriptions of the Black Hills regions, its resources and attractions, in the pure spirit of sensationalism. Others have "written up" the new diggings from the most sordid and mercenary motives. At Sioux City and Cheyenne there are a multitude of tradesmen, railroad agents and hotel-keepers, who, for the purpose of making money out of the wretched victims of the excitement, have acted the part of Barnegat wreckers who lure incoming ships to destruction by false lights on the shore. It is a fact not to be denied that journals in these localities have not hesitated, in the interests of their patrons, to publish stories about the wealth of the Black Hills country as false and as fatal to all who have been deceived by them as the songs of the sirens. These piratical papers have suppressed all unfavorable reports, have manufactured the most stupendous falsehoods, and have incurred the sin of blood-guiltiness by luring thousands of credulous dupes to their destruction, in order that the merchants, stage-owners and tavern-keepers of their localities might reap a blood-bought harvest.—San Francisco Chronicle.

Watching the Rosebush.

Over the ruins of a house, which was half burned, on a dreary, unpaved street in the eastern part of the city, a rosebush is slowly climbing. It is so small yet that the passer who glances at the blackened beams and rafters would not notice it, but for months it had no one to cut away the rank grass, give it water and help it in its struggle to hide the sad work of fire. One day a little lame girl discovered the stunted bush, and her eyes filled with joy. A father buried beyond the sea—a mother in Elmwood—she lived in a cottage near the rosebush with a queer old couple, whose hearts felt kindly toward the orphan, but who saw nothing in the rosebush beyond what they might have seen in a weed. It was early spring when the child found the bush, and she carried it rich earth, lifted the poor twigs with tender hands, and talked to it as if it were a playmate. Rough boys soon discovered why she visited the ruins, and at first they were a mind to pull up the bush to see her weep over their work. They remembered that she was lame, and they went in and helped her move the blackened timbers. Day by day the lame girl watched the bush. When the wind moaned loudly she trembled for fear it would injure the bush, and when the raindrops fell she hoped they would not strike the leaves too harshly. No watcher was ever more vigilant, faithful, and patient. She told no one her plans. One morning a week ago she found a bud. Every day, for days and days, she had peered among the leaves to see if a bud was forming—each day she had been disappointed, and a less brave and hopeful heart would have despaired. She smiled with joy when she found the bud, and she nestled in the grass beside the bush and watched it. The bud grew and swelled, and by and by it opened a bit and the lame girl's heart sang a joyful song. Yesterday morning, when she hurried down to see the rosebush, the bud had blossomed, and a deep red rose smiled at her. There was but one bud—only one rose—it was nature's reward for the child's patient care and long watching. She carefully plucked it, and that morning people driving in Elmwood saw a lame child tenderly drop a deep-red rose on a "poor folk's" grave. No other ornament—no other flower. It sunk among the green grass and sparkled and shone like a star of night, and when the tears of the child fell upon it its lustre was that of a diamond. For days and weeks and months she had tended the rosebush, and watched over it to secure a flower for the grave without mark or name—a grave so like the thousand others that only love could have told the child that a mother's heart was mouldering there.—Detroit Free Press.

A Neat Swindle.

The latest Parisian swindle is clever. A well-dressed woman called on a prominent mental physician and implored his aid in curing her son, who was laboring under the delusion that some one owed him 30,000 francs for diamonds which he had sold. "Bring him here in an hour, and I will see him alone," said the doctor. The woman went at once to one of the best jewelers and, choosing 30,000 francs worth of diamonds, asked the proprietor to send his assistant with them to Dr. J.'s, who was her husband and would pay for them. The name was well known, and the clerk was sent to the doctor's with her. In the anteroom she said: "I will see if my husband is at home." She then told the doctor that her son was without, and the doctor said, "Send him in here." So she sent the clerk, telling him to leave the diamonds with her. Arrived in the doctor's room, the clerk was politely seated and courteously asked after his general health and habits. After replying to these questions for some time, the young man hinted that he was rather pressed for time, and would be glad if the doctor would kindly pay him for the diamonds. "Ah, true," said the doctor. "The 30,000 francs. Well, by and by." Then ensued a funny scene, which finally ended in both parties going in search of the "mother," and finding that she had got tired of waiting and had gone, forgetting to leave the diamonds.

Liver and Blood Diseases.

By R. V. PIERCE, M. D., Author of "The People's Common Sense Medical Adviser."

A healthy liver secretes each day about two and a half pounds of bile, which contains a great amount of waste material taken from the blood. When the liver becomes torpid or congested, it fails to eliminate this vast amount of noxious substance, which, therefore, remains to poison the blood, and be conveyed to every part of the system. What must be the condition of the blood when it is receiving and retaining each day two and a half pounds of poison? Nature tries to work off this poison through other channels and organs—the kidneys, lungs, skin, etc., but these organs become overtaxed in performing this labor in addition to their natural functions, and cannot long withstand the pressure, but become variously diseased.

The brain, which is the great electrical center of all vitality, is unduly stimulated by the unhealthy blood which passes to it from the heart, and it fails to perform its office healthily. Hence the symptoms of bile poisoning, which are dullness, headache, incapacity to keep the mind on any subject, impairment of memory, dizzy, sleepy, or nervous feelings, gloomy forebodings, and irritability of temper. The blood itself being diseased, as it forms the sweat upon the surface of the skin, it is so irritating and poisonous that it produces discolored brown spots, pimples, blotches, and other eruptions, sores, boils, carbuncles, and scrofulous tumors. The stomach, bowels, and other organs cannot escape becoming affected, sooner or later, and we have, as the result, costiveness, piles, dropsy, dyspepsia, diarrhœa. Other symptoms are common, as bitter or bad taste in mouth, internal heat, palpitation, teasing cough, unsteady appetite, choking sensation in throat, bloating of stomach, pain in sides or about shoulders or back, coldness of extremities, etc., etc. Only a few of the above symptoms are likely to be present in any case at one time. The liver being the great depurating, or blood-cleansing organ of the system, set this great "housekeeper of our health" at work, and the foul corruptions which gender in the blood, and rot out, as it were, the machinery of life, are gradually expelled from the system. For this purpose, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, with very small doses daily of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets, is pre-eminently the articles needed. They cure every kind of humor from the worst scrofula to the common pimple, blotch, or eruption. Great eating ulcers kindly heal under their mighty curative influence. Virulent blood poisons that lurk in the system are by them robbed of their terrors, and by their persevering and somewhat protracted use the most tainted systems may be completely renovated and built up anew. Enlarged glands, tumors, and swellings dwindle away and disappear under the influence of these great resolvents.

A GENTLEMAN afflicted with the chronic rheumatism says, "No description of my case can convey the vast amount of benefit I have received from the use of Johnson's Anodyne Liniment. I believe it is the best article in the world for rheumatism."

IF life and health is worth anything, take Dr. J. H. McLean's Strengthening Cordial and Blood Purifier. It will impart vitality and strength, renovate the system and purify your blood. Dr. J. H. McLean's office, 314 Chestnut street, St. Louis, Mo.

WHY suffer with Ague when Shallenberger's Pills will cure you for one dollar?

Schenck's Sea Weed Tonic.—In the atmosphere experienced here during the summer months, the lethargy produced by the heat takes away the desire for wholesome food, and frequent perspirations reduce bodily energy, particularly those suffering from the effects of debilitating diseases. In order to keep a natural, healthful activity of the system, we must resort to artificial means. For this purpose Schenck's Sea Weed Tonic is very effectual. A few doses will create an appetite and give fresh vigor to the enervated body. For dyspepsia, it is invaluable. Many eminent physicians have doubted whether dyspepsia can be permanently cured by the drugs which are generally employed for that purpose. The Sea Weed Tonic in its nature is totally different from such drugs. It contains no corrosive minerals or acids; in fact, it assists the regular operations of nature, and supplies her deficiencies. The tonic in its nature so much resembles the gastric juice that it is almost identical with that fluid. The gastric juice is the natural solvent which, in a healthy condition of the body, causes the food to be digested; and when this juice is not excreted in sufficient quantities, indigestion, with all its distressing symptoms, follows. The Sea Weed Tonic performs the duty of the gastric juice when the latter is deficient. Schenck's Sea Weed Tonic is sold by all Druggists.

The Medicine that Cures — IS — VEGETINE.

Taking into consideration the character of its vouchers, the history of its cures, and the immense increasing demand, VEGETINE may be fairly entitled the leading medicine of the age.

For Scrofula in the blood, VEGETINE is an infallible remedy, and no person need suffer from tumors, ulcers, and all diseases arising from impure blood, if VEGETINE is used according to directions. There is not a case of Scrofula in existence that VEGETINE will not cure, provided, however, the vital functions have not lost their power of action, all that may be said to the contrary notwithstanding.

VEGETINE is pleasant to the taste, mild in its influence, and absolute in its action on disease, as the following unquestionable evidence will show.

Paid Nearly $400.

January 3, 1876.

H. R. STEVENS, Esq.:

Dear Sir—When about six months old I was vaccinated. The person who was vaccinated from the same virus died from the humor. The humor spread over me to such an extent that I was obliged to bandage to prevent it from scratching my person. The disease finally settled in my head. I remained in this condition about twenty years, troubled all the time with sores breaking in my head and discharging corruption from my ear. At this time a small kernel appeared on my neck, gradually increasing in size until a tumor formed of such immense size I could see it by turning my eyes downward. All this time, I was taking various remedies for my blood without any substantial benefit.

I then went to a prominent physician in Boston, who, during his treatment of six months, lanced the tumor eight times, which cost me nearly $400. This left me with a rough, aggravated sore, without at all diminishing the size of the tumor, and in a sickly, feeble condition. I consulted another physician in Natick, who, after considerable time, succeeded in healing the sore without reducing the size. At this point I commenced to use VEGETINE, through the earnest persuasion of a friend. After I had taken this medicine about one week, I experienced wonderful sensations. My whole body seemed to be undergoing a radical change, until, finally, the tumor broke and discharged frightful quantities. From this time it decreased in size, until the bunch disappeared, but my neck still bears the ugly scars of the sore and lance. I am now healthy and strong, and able to work every day.

I will also mention that I have been an acute sufferer from inflammatory rheumatism ever since I can remember, until commencing the use of VEGETINE, when almost immediately all rheumatic pains ceased. This statement I volunteer for the purpose of benefiting other suffering humanity, and you will confer a favor by giving it as much publicity as thought proper.

Very gratefully,
O. M. SAVELS,
Ashland, Mass.

The Enemy of Disease, the Foe of Pain to Man and Beast, Is the Grand Old MUSTANG LINIMENT, WHICH HAS STOOD THE TEST OF 40 YEARS. THERE IS NO SORE IT WILL NOT HEAL, NO LAMENESS IT WILL NOT CURE, NO ACHE, NO PAIN, THAT AFFLICTS THE HUMAN BODY, OR THE BODY OF A HORSE OR OTHER DOMESTIC ANIMAL, THAT DOES NOT YIELD TO ITS MAGIC TOUCH. A bottle costing 25c., 50c. or $1.00, has often saved the life of a human being, and restored to life and usefulness many a valuable horse.

"THE VIBRATOR" 1000 SOLD LAST SEASON WITHOUT ONE FAILURE OR REJECTION

This is the famous Threshing machine that has "swept the field" and created such a revolution in the trade, by its MATCHLESS GRAIN-SAVING AND TIME-SAVING principles.

THE NICHOLS, SHEPARD & CO. "VIBRATOR"

THE ENORMOUS WASTAGE of grain, so inevitable with other styles of Threshers, can be SAVED by this Improved Machine, sufficient, on every job, to more than pay all expenses of threshing.

FLAX, TIMOTHY, MILLET, HUNGARIAN and like seeds are threshed, separated, cleaned and saved as easily and perfectly as Wheat, Oats, Rye or Barley.

AN EXTRA PRICE is usually paid for grain and seeds cleaned by this machine, for extra cleanliness.

IN THE WET GRAIN of 1875, these were substantially the ONLY MACHINES that could run with profit or economy, doing fast, thorough and perfect work, when others utterly failed.

ALL GRAIN, TIME and MONEY wasting complications, such as "Endless Aprons," "Raddles," "Beaters," "Pickers," etc., are entirely dispensed with; less than one-half the usual Gears, Belts, Boxes, and Journals; easier managed; more durable; light running; no costly repairs; no dust; no "litterings" to clean up; not troubled by adverse winds, rain or storms.

FARMERS and GRAIN RAISERS who are posted in the large saving made by it will not employ inferior and wasteful machines, but will insist on this improved Thresher doing their work.

FOUR SIZES made for 6, 8, 10 and 12 Horse Powers. Also a specialty of SEPARATORS, designed and made EXPRESSLY FOR STEAM POWER.

TWO STYLES OF HORSE POWERS, viz.: our improved "Triple Gear," and our "Spur Speed" (Woodbury Style), both "Mounted" on four wheels.

IF INTERESTED in Threshing or Grain Raising, apply to our nearest Dealer, or write to us for Illustrated Circular (sent free), giving full particulars of Sizes, Styles, Prices, Terms, etc.

How to Make Mischief.

Keep your eye on your neighbors. Take care of them. Do not let them stir without watching. They may do something wrong if you do. To be sure you never knew them to do anything very bad, but it may be on your account they have not. Perhaps if it had not been for your kind care they might have disgraced themselves long ago. Then do not relax in your efforts to keep them where they ought to be. Never mind your own business—that will take care of itself. If you find any symptoms of any one passing out of the path of duty tell everyone else what you see, and be particular to see a great many. It is a good way to circulate such things though it may not benefit yourself or any one particularly. Do keep something going—silence is a dreadful thing. It is said there was silence in heaven for the space of half an hour. Do not let any such thing occur on earth. It would be to much for this mundane sphere.

Insult Added To Murder.

There is no excuse for the horrible butchery of the Black Hills and the most dastardly portion of this deplorable bloody event is the care the political tools are taking to find excuses and throw mud upon the memory of the noble and gallant General Custer. It behooves every soldier, every patriot, every citizen, in fact every man who can be called such and has a grain of honor and honesty in his heart to investigate this matter and throw back to the vile calumniators the dirt they are trying to heap upon the valiant dead, to cover up their arrant imbecility and cowardice. We cannot say fools: kanves is a better name. It seems to us Grant must find it difficult to rest easy when the grim specter of those 300 murdered braves rise before him in dreams when his ears may in imagination hear the vails of the innocent widows and the plaintive cries of the orphans. Result of hatred such can be called the Indian massacre, and we stop here at this time, for our blood boils and our mind revolts at the dirty action of those confounded sneaks.

What is Grant About.

Ever since the Centennial Convention the country has been congraulating itself on the fact that in less than a year the presidency of Grant will terminate. But it seems like every day renders his incumbency harder to be borne. If the Republican party could cast him off and refuse to register in the Senate his edicts scandalous indecencies in administration might be checked. But they indorse and sustain him. He is part and parcel of the Republican party, and they shoulder his doings without the slightest complaint. The promotion of his son, Fred Grant, out of regular order of army promotions, over thirty or forty senior officers is as reckless a disregard of public opinion as was ever attempted. As his term draws to a close he seems determined to make the most of it. The possession of the least sense of the common proprieties of life would have forbidden such an act. Fred Grant has been nothing but an ornamental appendage to the army since he left West Point. He has done no service and is scarcely ever at his post. He is simply pensioner upon the government. It is to be hoped that the Senate will have the manliness to refuse to confirm the promotion.

We are sorry to announce to the readers of the Post that Whitley county is about to lose one of the very best teachers ever within its bounderies. Mr. W. S. Gandy, who for twelve terms has been principal of the Churubusco Graded Schools is about to go from our midst, and take charge of the schools at Auburn. "It is ill wind that blows good to no one," but we are sorry to see that Auburn is to get the good this time while Churubusco suffers the ill. Mr. Gandy is a gentleman of culture, of genial disposition of an appearance that commands the respect of his scholars, and of a ready tongue and fluent language, rendering it extremely easy for him to teach his pupils to learn. No town will ever regret having Mr. Gandy in its midst; and with him in it the cause of education is sure to be advanced. Mr. Gandy leaves for Auburn the first of August. God speed you and bring you back to us.—Columbia City Post.

There is a law of Congress which provides that the elections of Congressmen shall be held on the same day of November in all the State; and the Constitutions of Ohio and Indiana fix the period of Congressional elections in October. Here is a conflict growing out of the intermedling of Congress with matters in which it had no legitimate concern. Mr. Morton is of the opinion that the elections in Ohio and Indiana in order to be legal must be held in October. In other words he holds that a State contitution is of higher authority than the supreme law of the land.

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

THE EAST.

CASTLE GARDEN, the famous old wooden structure whereat millions of immigrants landing in New York have first set foot on the shores of America, has been destroyed by fire.

THE potato-bug, which has been busily at work in New York and Pennsylvania during the early part of the season, is now literally destroying the potato crop in Connecticut and in some other parts of New England.

MANY cases of sunstroke are reported in Eastern cities, attended by fatality to an alarming degree.... The number of immigrants landed at New York last month was 35,008 less than during June of last year. The total last month was only 10,558, as against 45,566 in June, 1875.

DR. J. C. AYER, the millionaire patent-medicine druggist, of Lowell, Mass., has lost his reason, and is now an inmate of Dr. Choate's private insane asylum in Westchester county, N. Y., the institution in which the lamented Horace Greeley died.

THE first legal battle over the estates of the late A. T. Stewart has been won in the New York courts by the executrix and executor, Mrs. Stewart and Judge Hilton, as against the alleged heirs-at-law, who have contested the validity of the probate of Mr. Stewart's will.... A tragedy almost without a parallel, and resulting in the death of seven persons, occurred the other day at Newark, N. J., the particulars of which, as furnished by telegraph, are about as follows: It appears that three Germans, brothers, named Thielborn, who have been known as desperate characters for years, were arrested by Police Officers Dickerson and Elsden for disorderly conduct. As the officers attempted to march them off, the men drew revolvers and shot Elsden dead and fatally wounded Dickerson. Escaping, the desperadoes ran up street to T. W. Dawson's tannery on River street, where they formerly worked. There they called for Mr. Meyer, the foreman, who had discharged them, but not finding him they commenced an indiscriminate firing on the shop, which resulted in the killing of John Albens, assistant foreman, and the wounding of two workmen. The employes turned out en masse, and chased the murderers towards the river. In pursuit the workmen used stones and knives, striking the murderers several times before they reached the river. The latter leaped into the water and attempted to escape across, but were stoned to death by the outraged workmen. The deaths number seven—Policemen Elsden and Dickerson, the three Thielhorns, Albers and a workman. Most intense excitement prevailed in the city, and the summary action of the workmen was generally commended. During the excitement F. W. Dawson, proprietor of the factory where the shooting occurred, was robbed of $2,230 in checks, which he was about to deposit.

THE WEST.

CROP reports from 238 points in Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Kentucky and Tennessee are published in the Cincinnati Gazette. From these reports it appears that the season thus far has been very propitious for growing most kinds of grain, but just as the harvest approaches there is threatened disaster from continued rains, from all points except Tennessee and Southern Kentucky. Fears of the destruction of a portion of the crops from this cause are entertained. As the crops now stand, wheat promises a yield of two-thirds; oats less than an average crop; corn, an unusually large crop; hay in abundance, but rank and weedy, and wheat suffering considerably from the ravages of the weevil.

THE feeling of excitement and indignation over the massacre of Gen. Custer and his comrades is intense throughout the West, particularly in the Territories, and thousands of men are eager to organize for the punishment of the red devils. There is a general feeling that the Indians ought to be wiped out.... The movement to organize a force of volunteers to take part in the Indian campaign has assumed a definite shape in Utah. A regiment of 1,200 frontiersmen, armed to the teeth with weapons which they know how to use, well mounted and equipped, will be tendered to the Secretary of War, and, if accepted, the regiment will be recruited without delay and put in readiness to march against the hostile Sioux. ....Jacob Rehm, the arch-conspirator of the Chicago whisky ring, has been sentenced to six months' imprisonment in jail and ordered to pay a fine of $10,000. His punishment was light in consequence of his having turned State's evidence.

ANOTHER daring railway robbery took place in Western Missouri on the night of July 8. The express train which left Kansas City on the Missouri Pacific railway at 4:45 o'clock on the evening named was boarded by highwaymen near Otterville Station. The bandits seized the United States Express messenger, and, with pistols pointed at his head, compelled him to open the safe. They robbed the safe of all the money and valuables it contained, some $15,000, and after dumping their plunder into a sack, which one of the robbers carried, quietly left without interfering with any of the passengers. As they were leaving the leader said to the passengers: "If you see any of Allen Pinkerton's men, tell them they had better come and find us." There were eight of the bandits, and they are believed to be a part of the notorious Younger gang. Parties were organized, and at last accounts were in hot pursuit of the bandits.... The reinforcements ordered to join Crook and Terry will give each of these commanders at least 2,000 effective fighting men—a force that should suffice, under judicious handling, to give a good account of any bands of Indians they may encounter.

THE propeller St. Clair, from Duluth to Ontonagon, was burned on Lake Superior, off Fourteen-Mile point, on the 10th inst. The fire caught in the hold, and in less than five minutes the boat was enveloped in flames from one end to the other. Owing to the rapidity with which the flames spread but one boat was launched. Life-preservers were brought on deck, and all succeeded in putting one on, when a rush was made for the yawl, which was swamped six or seven times. The water was very cold, and it was not long before all but one of the passengers, sixteen in number, perished, together with ten of the crew. When the boat caught fire she was about five miles from shore.... The Crow scout heretofore reported as having escaped massacre at the Custer charge proves to be the only survivor of that terrible slaughter. He was in the fight, but escaped to the river, washed off his Crow paint, changed the dress of his hair, put on a Sioux blanket, and charged with the Sioux, escaping, however, when an opportunity presented. He says the Sioux completely enveloped Custer, who killed his horses, using their remains for breastworks, and fought desperately, the Indians charging his position time and again, losing heavily, the Crow believes more than Custer. One company, that of Capt. Smith, tried to cut its way to the rear, but all were killed and their bodies lay some rods from Custer, all in a little knot. Custer was among the last to fall. Col. Cook, with his heavy, flowing beard, was the last one standing that the Indian recognized. Custer and command were all killed within an hour. Custer's command having been finished, the Indians gathered their entire force about Reno, leaving the squaws to mutilate the dead and torture any who proved to be living. The remains bear many evidences of torture. The tortures practiced upon some were of an unmentionable nature. The heads of nearly all had been crushed with stone clubs, while in other cases their heads were severed from the body. The entrails had been taken, and from many the limbs were chopped off. Other bodies were partially burned, a few were not found, but clothing belonging to them was found and recognized. ....Advices from the grasshopper region of Minnesota are to the effect that the troublesome pests have taken wings and are flying away in a northwestern direction. The farmers are represented as happy over the unexpected turn of affairs, and calculate upon at least an average yield of grain....Sioux City, Iowa, is red hot for war. The city tenders the Government, for the Indian service, 1,000 men, with horses and bridles, and a transportation train, to be ready to move within ten days after their acceptance.

THE agency Indians along the upper Missouri, who have received an account of Custer's fight through some hostile Indians who took part in it, say that Custer shot three Indians with his pistol, and killed three others with his saber, when he fell, shot through the head by "Rain-in-the-Face," a chief whom Custer had forcibly arrested some time ago for murder. The Indians lost seventy killed, among them many noted chiefs. The fight was hand-to-hand. The Indians say they did not fear the pistols as much as they did the sabers. They are nearly out of ammunition, and will not fight again until they get a supply from the agencies....A Fort Sully special says the Indians who were in the fight with Custer's troops assert that his remains were shockingly mutilated; his heart torn out, placed on the end of a pole, and a war-dance held around it, and that the chief Rain-in-the-Face still has possession of it.

POLITICAL.

GOV. CONNOR, of Maine, has appointed Mr. Blaine, to succeed Mr. Morrill in the United States Senate from that State.

POSTMASTER GENERAL JEWELL has left the Cabinet at the request of the President, and Mr. Tyner, of Indiana, late Assistant Postmaster General, has been appointed to succeed him. Mr. Jewell resigned at the request of the President, and the change was a genuine surprise to almost everybody in Washington. Mr. Jewell called at the Executive Mansion on the evening of the 11th inst., to transact some business with the President, when the latter, much to his surprise, informed him that his resignation would be desirable. Mr. Jewell immediately wrote the following letter of resignation, which is all the correspondence that transpired upon the subject:

SIR: I hereby tender my resignation of the office of Postmaster-General. Your obedient servant,

MARSHALL JEWELL.

To the President.

Gov. Jewell asked no questions of the President, and is therefore not aware of the reason for the request, and members of the Cabinet also say that they are alike ignorant of the motives that controlled the President. It is asserted, however, in some circles, that, in addition to political considerations, the President was influenced by Gov. Jewell's avowed friendliness to Mr. Bristow. On the same day Commissioner of Internal Revenue Pratt tendered his resignation, to take effect on the 1st of August. There appears to have been a disagreement between Mr. Pratt and the President touching the appointment of revenue officers. President Grant has removed D. P. Dyer from the office of United States Attorney for the Eastern District of Missouri.

THE Democrats of the Third Indiana District have nominated George A. Bicknell for Congress, to succeed Speaker Kerr, the latter having declined a re-election.....Monroe Heath (Rep.) has been elected Mayor of Chicago.... Henry Watterson, of the Louisville Courier-Journal, has accepted the Democratic nomination for Congress from that city, to fill the vacancy created by the death of Mr. Parsons.

THE following letter has been sent to ex-Secretary Bristow by the President:

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
WASHINGTON, July 12, 1876.

To the HON. B. H. BRISTOW:

DEAR SIR—Through the press, I learn that the committee of Congress investigating whisky frauds have summoned you as a witness, and that you, with great propriety, as I think, have declined to testify, claiming that what occurs in the Cabinet or between a member of the Cabinet and the Executive officially, is privileged, and that a committee of Congress have no right to demand an answer. I appreciate the position you have assumed on this question, but beg to relieve you from all obligation of secrecy on this subject, and desire not only that you may answer all questions asked relating to it, but wish that all members of my Cabinet and ex-members of the Cabinet since I have been President may also be called on to testify in regard to the same matters. With great respect, your obedient servant, (Signed) U. S. GRANT.

THE Republican Convention of North Carolina, in session at Raleigh last week, nominated Judge Thomas Settle for Governor....The Prohibitionists of Illinois have nominated Dr. James S. Simpson, of Green county, for Governor.

WASHINGTON.

A WASHINGTON dispatch of the 8th says: "Gen. Sherman arrived here last evening, and, in company with several prominent army officers, had a consultation with the President. It is decided that there is but one course to pursue, and that is to make a more active warfare against the rebellious Sioux until they are severely punished and made to live upon their reservation."

THE recent hot weather in Washington has alarmed members of Congress, and there is expressed among them a general desire to get away from the capital as soon as possible.

THE House Judiciary Committee met the other day to continue their investigation into the matter of the Fort Smith and Little Rock Railroad bonds, but postponed it, so far as Mr. Blaine's connection with it is concerned, on account of the receipt of two dispatches stating that perfect quiet is desirable and, perhaps, necessary to insure his recovery. Warren Fisher, Jr., and James Mulligan were, therefore, discharged from further attendance until the next session of Congress. This action of the committee was unanimous.

THE Washington correspondent of the Chicago Times gives this partial explanation of the causes that led to the retirement of Postmaster General Jewell: "On Saturday last, Jewell said to a friend that he had submitted to Grant's interference in his department long enough, and at the next Cabinet meeting, meaning the one to be held on Tuesday, July 11, he intended to beard the lion in his den and make an issue in the presence of the other members of the Cabinet. Of this Grant was advised on Monday, and, being opposed to discord in his Cabinet, concluded not to allow Jewell to exercise his temper in the presence of the Cabinet."....An unusually-large number of members of Congress are sick, several of them seriously, owing to the effects of the heat.

GENERAL.

TWELVE companies of troops have been ordered west, to reinforcement Gen. Terry.

THE purser of the steamship Tybee, from San Domingo, has forwarded to the Secretary of State, from the American Consulate at that port, the details of an insult to the American flag. It seems that the Tybee, when on the way from New York to San Domingo, took on board, as a passenger at Cape Haytien, Gen. Pablo Villanueva, the ex-Minister of War and Marine under President Gonzales, of San Domingo. When the Tybee was lying at the latter port she was boarded by armed soldiers, who, despite the remonstrances of the American Consul and the Captain of the vessel, seized Villanuera and carried him ashore.... Western Congressmen are urging on the War Department the acceptance of State volunteers for the Indian war as the most effective and economical plan for the speedy subjugation of the hostile tribes.

UP to the 11th inst.—two months—2,076,106 persons had visited the National Centennial Exposition at Philadelphia, and the total cash receipts were $684,530....Dom Pedro, the Emperor of Brazil, and the most sensible "great man" from abroad who has ever honored this country with a visit, sailed from New York last week for Europe.

A DISPATCH from Augusta, Me., says: "Mr. Blaine, owing to the very-excessive heat of the past few days, has not improved. The effect of the heat on his condition has fully confirmed his physicians in the belief that the original trouble was of the nature of a sunstroke."

FOREIGN.

A SERVIAN victory of considerable importance is announced in the cable dispatches. After ten hours of desperate fighting at Rachka, the Turks fled, and the place fell into the hands of the Servians....The Americans in Constantinople enthusiastically honored the Fourth. Horace Maynard, American Minister, presided, read the Declaration of Independence, and made a speech.

THE war upon which the Servians were in such haste to enter, has been rather disastrous to them thus far, if the accounts of recent engagements are to be believed. Dispatches from Belgrade admit a loss of 700 in the fight on the line of the Drin, and other accounts assert that the Turks were also victorious in a battle at Novi Bazar, where the Servian loss was 1.500 in killed and wounded.

A COLLIERY explosion near Saint Aroid, Germany, recently, killed forty-two and wounded forty-seven miners.

THE most important news from Europe is a report from Berlin to the effect that Russia, with an understanding with the other great powers, will not interfere in the present Servian-Turkish war, and that, therefore, there is at present no danger of a general European war over the "Eastern question."

FORTY-FOURTH CONGRESS.

FRIDAY, July 7.—Senate.—Windom introduced a bill extending and continuing for a period of ten days the act recently passed to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government. ....A bill was passed providing for the sale of the Fort Kearney military reservation in Nebraska.... There was an acrimonious partisan debate in the Senate on the general subject of appropriation bills. Morrill, Logan and Morton bitterly assailed the course of the House in adhering to its reductions, which they claimed would cripple the Government, and amounted virtually to nullification and revolution. Thurman and Bogy replied with great warmth, and defended the action of the House in reducing expenses, arguing that the Senate had no right to assail the motives of the lower house. That body, they claimed, had acted in obedience to the voice of the people. New conference committees were then appointed upon the General and Sundry Civil Appropriation bills....A bill was passed to remove the political disabilities of G. T. Beauregard, of Louisiana....Paddock introduced a bill authorizing the President to accept the services of volunteers from the Territories, to be employed against the Indians, limiting the number to five regiments and the term of enlistment to three months....The impeachment trial was resumed. Belknap's counsel changed their tactics, and sharply cross-examined the witnesses, but no new facts were elicited. The managers appeared especially anxious to prove the receipt of the money by Belknap, and they succeeded.

House.—Bills were passed establishing the rank of Paymaster General in the army, repealing the law authorizing the appointment of civil engineers in the navy, and compelling the Pacific railroads to set apart out of their earnings a sum to apply in the payment of their debt to the Government.

SATURDAY, July 8.—Senate.—A bill continuing for ten days the act recently passed to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government was passed; also a bill extending for the same time an act authorizing the Congressional Printer to continue the public printing....Logan moved to take up the House bill to equalize the bounties of soldiers who served in the late war for the Union. Lost; yeas, 20; nays, 25. Logan gave notice that he would move to take up the bill every morning, and he would call for the yeas and nays on the motion.... Sherman introduced a bill providing for the completion of Washington monument....A message was received from the House announcing the death of Edward Y. Parsons, of Kentucky, and, on motion of McCreery, the Senate, as a mark of respect, adjourned until 11 o'clock on Monday.

House.—The House was engaged the greater part of the day in debating the bill reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs, declaring the country north of the North Platte river and east of the summit of the Big Horn mountain, in Wyoming Territory, open to exploration and settlement....Knott announced the sudden and unexpected death of his colleague, Edward Y. Parsons, and offered resolutions for the appointment of a committee to superintend the funeral and to attend the remains to Louisville. The resolutions were adopted, and Blackburn, Hopkins, Hartzell, Walker, Fort, Lawrence and Clark were appointed such committee.

MONDAY, July 10.—Senate.—Wright, from the Committee on Judiciary, reported a bill to extend the duration of the court commissioners of Alabama claims until Nov. 1 next....After the transaction of some unimportant business the impeachment trial was resumed. The witnesses examined were Mr. Reid, the editor of the New York Tribune, Mr. Marsh, the original post-trader of Fort Sill, on whose testimony before a House committee the impeachment of Belknap was based, and Gen. Hazen, who was instrumental in the exposure of the Fort Sill rascality. Their testimony was very damaging to Belknap.

House.—The House passed a bill continuing for ten days the act defraying temporarily the ordinary and necessary expenditures of the Government.... Banning offered a resolution calling on the Secretary of War for information in regard to the object of the military expedition under Gens. Terry, Crook and Gibbon against the Northwestern Indians. Adopted....The Speaker pro tem. laid before the House a telegraphic dispatch from the Governor of Maine stating that Mr. Blaine, having accepted the vacant Senatorship from that State, had resigned his seat as a member from this day....Bills were introduced and referred, as follows: By Scales, appointing a commission to visit the Indian Territory, and report the condition and management of the Indians; by Garfield, appropriating $10,000 for preparing and publishing a brief history of the several surveys and scientific expeditions made during the century just closed; by Steele, of Wyoming, authorizing the President to enlist recruits for the army, to serve no more than six months, to aid in suppressing the hostility of certain bands of Sioux Indians... Singleton, from the conference committee on the Diplomatic and Consular Appropriation bill, reported that the committee had not yet been able to agree. After an animated debate a new conference was appointed....Holman moved to suspend the rules and adopt a resolution instructing the Committee on Banking and Currency to report for consideration and amendment a bill to repeal so much of the Resumption act as provides for the resumption of United States notes with coin. Negatived—yeas, 105; nays, 96; not two-thirds in the affirmative.

TUESDAY, July 11.—Senate.—Allison, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported with amendments the River and Harbor Appropriation bill....Mr. Thurman, from the Committee on the Judiciary, moved that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House to the bill to amend the Bankrupt act, and ask for a committee of conference. So ordered.... The impeachment trial was resumed, and after the examination of two or three witnesses, the managers for the prosecution announced that they were through, with the exception of two witnesses, Evans and Fisher, and he thought it probable that one of them would do.

House.—The House was not in session, having adjourned out of respect to the memory of one of their members recently deceased—Parsons, of Ky.

WEDNESDAY, July 12.—Senate.—The Chair laid before the Senate the House bill to amend the Pacific Railroad acts, which was read by Mr. Little. A lively contest occurred over the reference of the bill. Edmunds and Thurman opposed its reference to the Railroad Committee on the ground that this committee was hostile to the bill, and favored its reference to the Judiciary Committee. West and Mitchell repelled the charge of favoritism toward the Pacific railway. The bill was finally laid over....The joint resolution to authorize the President to accept the services of volunteers to aid in suppressing the Sioux Indian hostilities in the Northwest was taken from the table and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs....The impeachment trial was resumed, and many witnesses were produced and examined by the defense, to prove the previous good character of Belknap. Ex-Gov. Ralph B. Low, of Iowa, Senators Allison and Wright, Gen. Ruger, Gen. S. V. Benet, Gen. A. A. Humphries, Gen. R. B. Marcy, Judge Advocate General Dunn, Associate Justice Miller, of the Supreme Court, and the Hon. John A. Kasson all testified to the integrity and ability of the late War Secretary.

House.—The House passed a bill for the establishment of two additional military posts on the Yellowstone river, in the region of the hostile Indians....Haines, Chairman of the Committee on Elections, reported a resolution on the Louisiana contested-election case, declaring Darrell, the sitting member, entitled to a seat...The bill providing for the sale of the Fort Kearney military reservation, Nebraska, was passed.... Hewitt, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported back the resolution declaring the action of Robert C. Schenck, while United States Minister to England, in becoming a Director of the Emma Mine Company, and his operations in connection with shares of said company and venders thereof, as ill-advised, unfortunate and incompatible with the duties of his position. Adopted without discussion or a division.

THURSDAY, July 13.—Senate.—Nothing was done in the impeachment trial, owing to the absence of a witness, Evans, the post-trader at Fort Sill....The Chair laid before the Senate a message from the President transmitting reports from Gen. Sherman and Major General Terry, in response to the resolution calling for information in regard to the trouble with the Sioux.... A new conference was appointed on the Consular and Diplomatic Appropriation bill....The bill to provide for the construction of two military posts on the Yellowstone river was passed....The River and Harbor Appropriation bill was discussed and amended.

House.—The conference report on the Silver bill was adopted....A resolution to adjourn July 25 was introduced and referred.....Thompson, from the Committee on Elections, reported a resolution in the South Carolina contested-election case, declaring that neither Butts, the contestant, nor Mackey, the sitting member, were lawfully elected to Congress. Ordered printed.... Sparks, from the conference committee on the Indian Appropriation bill, reported that the committee had been unable to agree. The same committee was reappointed, the Senate conferrees being also the same....Wait, from the select committee to investigate the charges preferred by White (Ky.) against Adams, Clerk of the House, for interfering to influence legislation, reported that there was no foundation whatever for the charge....Lynde, Lord, and Frye were appointed a committee of conference on the Bankrupt bill.

HAYES.

His Letter Accepting the Nomination for the Presidency.

COLUMBUS, O., July 8.

The Hon. Edward McPherson, the Hon. William A. Howard, the Hon. Joseph H. Rainey, and others, Committee of the Republican National Convention:

GENTLEMEN—In reply to your official communication of June 17, by which I am informed of my nomination for the office of President of the United States by the Republican National Convention at Cincinnati, I accept the nomination with gratitude, hoping that, under Providence, I shall be able, if elected, to execute the duties of the high office as a trust for the benefit of all the people.

I do not deem it necessary to enter upon any extended examination of the declaration of principles made by the convention. The resolutions are in accord with my views, and I heartily concur in the principles they announce. In several of the resolutions, however, questions are considered which are of such importance that I deem it proper to briefly express my convictions in regard to them.

The fifth resolution adopted by the convention is of paramount interest. More than forty years ago a system of making appointments grew up, based upon the maxim, "To the victors belong the spoils." The old rule—the true rule—that honesty, capacity and fidelity constitute the only real qualifications for office, and that there is no other claim, gave place to the idea that party services were to be chiefly considered. All parties, in practice, have adopted the system. It has been essentially modified since its first introduction; it has not, however, been improved. At first the President, either directly or through the heads of departments, made all the appointments. But gradually the appointing power, in many cases, passed into the control of the members of Congress. The offices in these cases have become not merely rewards for party services, but rewards for services to party leaders. This system destroys the independence of the separate departments of the Government. It tends directly to extravagance and official incapacity; it is a temptation to dishonesty; it hinders and impairs that careful supervision and strict accountability by which alone faithful and efficient public service can be secured; it obstructs the prompt removal and sure punishment of the unworthy; in every way it degrades the civil service and the character of the Government; it is felt, I am confident, by a large majority of the members of Congress, to be an intolerable burden and an unwarrantable hindrance to the proper discharge of their legitimate duties; it ought to be abolished. The reform should be thorough, radical and complete. We should return to the principles and practice of the founders of the Government, supplying by legislation, when needed, that which was formerly established by custom. They neither expected nor desired from the public officer any partisan service. They meant that public officers should owe their whole service to the Government and to the people. They meant that the officer should be secure in his tenure as long as his personal character remained untarnished, and the performance of his duties satisfactory.

If elected, I shall conduct the administration of the Government upon these principles, and all constitutional powers vested in the Executive will be employed to establish this reform:

The declaration of principles by the Cincinnati Convention makes no announcement in favor of a single Presidential term. I do not assume to add to that declaration, but, believing that the restoration of the civil service to the system established by Washington and followed by the early Presidents can be best accomplished by an Executive who is under no temptation to use the patronage of his office to promote his own re-election, I desire to perform what I regard as a duty in stating now my inflexible purpose, if elected, not to be a candidate for election to a second term.

On the currency question I have frequently expressed my views in public, and I stand by my record on this subject. I regard all the laws of the United States relating to the payment of the public indebtedness, the legal-tender notes included, as constituting a pledge and moral obligation of the Government which must in good faith be kept. It is my conviction that the feeling of uncertainty inseparable from an irredeemable paper currency, with its fluctuations of values, is one of the great obstacles to a revival of confidence and business, and to a return of prosperity. That uncertainty can be ended in but one way—the resumption of specie payments; but the longer the instability connected with our present money system is permitted to continue, the greater will be the injury inflicted upon our economical interests and all classes of society. If elected I shall approve every appropriate measure to accomplish the desired end, and shall oppose any step backward.

The resolution with respect to the public school system is one which should receive the hearty support of the American people. Agitation upon this subject is to be apprehended until, by constitutional amendment, the schools are placed beyond all danger of sectarian control or interference. The Republican party is pledged to secure such an amendment.

The resolution of the convention on the subject of the permanent pacification of the country, and the complete protection of all its citizens in the full enjoyment of all their constitutional rights, is timely and of great importance. The condition of the Southern States attracts the attention and commands the sympathy of the people of the whole Union. In their progressive recovery from the effects of the war, their first necessity is an intelligent and honest administration of government which will protect all classes of citizens in all their political and private rights. What the South most needs is peace, and peace depends upon the supremacy of law. There can be no enduring peace if the constitutional rights of any portion of the people are habitually disregarded. A division of political parties resting merely upon distinction of race, or upon sectional lines, is always unfortunate, and may be disastrous. The welfare of the South, alike with that of every other part of the country, depends upon the attractions it can offer to labor, to immigration, and to capital. But laborers will not go, and capital will not be ventured, where the Constitution and the laws are set at defiance, and distraction, apprehension and alarm take the place of peace-loving and law-abiding social life. All parts of the Constitution are sacred and must be sacredly observed, "the parts that are new no less than the parts that are old." The moral and material prosperity of the Southern States can be most effectually advanced by a hearty and generous recognition of the rights of all by all, "a recognition without reserve or exception."

With such a recognition fully accorded, it will be practicable to promote, by the influence of all legitimate agencies of the general Government, the efforts of the people of those States to obtain for themselves the blessings of honest and capable local government. If elected. I shall consider it not only my duty, but it will be my ardent desire, to labor for the attainment of this end. Let me assure my countrymen of the Southern States that if I shall be charged with the duty of organizing an administration, it will be one which will regard and cherish their truest interests, the interests of the white and of the colored people, both, and equally, and which will put forth its best efforts in behalf of a civil policy which will wipe out forever the distinction between the North and South in our common country.

With a civil service organized upon a system which will secure purity, experience, efficiency, and economy, a strict regard for the public welfare, solely, in appointments, and the speedy, thorough, and unsparing prosecution and punishment of all public officers who betray official trusts; with a sound currency; with education unsectarian and free to all; with simplicity and frugality in public and private affairs; and with a fraternal spirit of harmony pervading the people of all sections and classes, we may reasonably hope that the second century of our existence as a nation will, by the blessing of God, be pre-eminent as an era of good feeling and a period of progress, prosperity, and happiness. Respectfully, your fellow-citizen,

R. B. HAYES.

NEWSPAPER TITLES.

An Interesting Chapter on Journalistic Nomenclature.

[From the Centennial Newspaper Exhibition.]

The publication's of all kinds described in the "American Newspaper Directory" for 1876 are represented by 7,626 titles. In many cases several editions are issued from the same establishment, under substantially the same name, and in the figures just stated such several editions are counted as but one. The Journals are the most numerous, there being 487. Next in favor stand the Times. These number 310. There are 302 Heralds. The News number 298. The total of the Gazettes is 276. The Democrats come next in point of numbers, 268. To offset the Democratic phalanx there are 211 Republicans. The Advertisers number 92, and are naturally most frequent in localities where the populace is the most enlightened and progressive. There are 122 Advocates. This name appears to be a favorite of the religious publications, and at least three-fifths of the total are borne by religious papers. There are 60 papers known as the Argus, and with this quantity of professed eye-power, it is amazing that the frauds heretofore existing for years were not sooner discovered. There are 58 Bulletins, which are undoubtedly perused with care by the 51 Citizens described in the "Directory." Of Chronicles there are 89, while 143 Couriers stand in expectancy, ready to depart with 34 Dispatches. There are 89 Enterprises, most of them being located in the West. There are 45 Expresses, 34 Farmers, and 20 Globes. One of the latter is the Flint Globe of Michigan, and another the Golden Globe of Colorado Territory. Just 133 papers keep on the safe side by being Independents, though 49 Leaders are ready to direct them. There are 34 Ledgers, 47 Observers, and 16 Pilots. One of the latter is the Storm Lake Pilot of Iowa, and another the Lone Rock Pilot of Wisconsin. Each of these is remarkably coincident in respect to the name of the place and the name of the paper. There are 59 Posts, 122 Registers, and 95 Reviews. The country enjoys the guardianship of 144 Sentinels, one of which is the Lone Tree Sentinel of Iowa. There are 76 Standards, 84 Stars, 50 Suns, and 93 Tribunes. Among the unusual or striking titles are the Bistoury (Elmira, N. Y.), Jimplecute (Jefferson, Tex.), Luxapitilan (Fayette C. H., Ala.), the Card Basket—a society paper—of Washington, the Hope Star of Hope (Ark.), Thistleton's Illustrated Jolly Giant (San Francisco), China Mail and Flying Dragon, the Elm Leaf (East Hartford, Conn.), the Eulenspiegel (Owl's Mirror) of Chicago, Jefferson Republican, the Southern Cross—a Catholic paper—of Savannah, the Egyptian Press (Marion, Ill.), Hoosier Patron and Lady Granger (Indianapolis), Hoosier State, Union Spy—there is only one, Condenser, Meschacebe, Wide Awake—a literary paper, Iron Home (Ishpeming, Mich.), Morgan's Watchtower (Mt. Pleasant, Mich.), the Ricochet (Oxford, Miss,), Blatter und Kladderadatsch, the Schnedderdengg, Freedman's Monitor and Workingman's Looking Glass (Philadelphia), the I. C. B. U. Journal (also in Philadelphia), the Four Counties of Richmond, Texas, the Ventilator and Golden Rul (Mannington, W. Va.), Eurhetorian Argosy (Sackville, Ont.), Stylus, Lady Elgin (Elgin, Ill.), Over the Country, Pajaronian, Aurora Brazileira, Neighbor's Home Mail, Psyche, Madisonensis, and the Alpine Chronicle of Silver Mountain, Cal. To these may be added the Toledo Blade, Burlington Hawk-Eye, Cape May Ocean Wave, Broad Ax of Freedom, Sentinel on the Border, Unterrified Democrat, Spirit Lake Beacon, Homer's Iliad, Horsehead's Journal, Painted Post Times, Roman Citizen, and many others. Names popularly supposed to be frequent are in fact rare. It occasionally happens that the prominence attained by a single paper with a certain name brings the name so much before the people that it grows familiar to the public mind, though there may really be but few papers with the same designation. What the journalistic fancy of the Centennial year will devise in the way of newspaper titles is uncertain.

Paid in His Own Coin.

A few evenings since a young couple called upon a clergyman at Oneida, Wis., and stated that they wished to be united in the holy bonds of matrimony. Before the ceremony commenced the young lady excused herself from the room, saying that she would return in a few moments. She handed the minister a note which he read soon after her departure. It was as follows: "Arthur—"You will wait for me in vain, for the longer you wait the further away I'll be, I shan't marry you to-night. You went back on me a year ago, and I'll get even with you now." The bridegroom took the hint, bade the clergyman good-by, and started for home.

A CANADIAN Senator has resigned his seat for a peculiar reason. He has never been willing to trust himself on a railroad train, and last winter traveled from Quebec to Ottawa in his own sleigh to attend the session of Parliament. The fatigues and hardships of the trip were so great that he will not encounter them again, and so he has determined to retire from public life.

IN view of the recent diabolical outrage on the L., C. & S. W. road, by which the fireman, engineer, and conductor of a freight train were killed, the railroad men of Logansport, Ind., propose to raise a purse for the discovery of the men who placed the rail on the track and to prosecute them if found.

KAISER WILHELM.

He Writes an Autograph Letter to the President.

Mr. Schlozer, the German Minister to the United States, on the 4th of July presented to President Grant an autograph letter of congratulation from the Emperor of Germany. Mr. Schlozer, in presenting the letter, stated that he was instructed by His Majesty to deliver upon the 4th day of July to the President, in person, an autograph letter of congratulation upon the occasion of the Centennial anniversary, and wished to add his personal good wishes for the United States. The President briefly replied, assuring him of his satisfaction in receiving this evidence of good feeling on the part of His Majesty; that his kind expressions for the United States were fully appreciated, and that the letter should be properly acknowledged. A translation of the letter is as follows:

William, by the Grace of God Emperor of Germany, King of Prussia, etc., To the President of the United States of America—GREAT AND GOOD FRIEND: It has been vouchsafed to you to celebrate the Centennial festival of the day upon which the great republic over which you preside entered the rank of independent nations. The purposes of its founders have, by a wise application of the teachings of the history of the foundation of nations, and with an insight into the distant future, been realized by a development without a parallel. To congratulate you and the American people upon this occasion affords me so much the greater pleasure, because since the treaty of friendship which my ancestor of glorious memory, King Frederic II. who now rests with God, concluded with the United States, undisturbed friendship has continually existed between Germany and America, and has been developed and strengthened by the ever-increasing importance of their mutual relations, and by an intercourse being more and more fruitful in every domain of commerce and science. That the welfare of the United States and the friendship of the two countries may continue to increase is my sincere desire and confident hope. Accept renewed assurance of my unqualified esteem.

BERLIN, June 9, 1876. WILLIAM.

Why Long Branch is a Failure as a Summer Resort.

Long Branch was too near New York. The reporters, lynx-eyed, sleepless, and as numerous as the great American grasshopper, were always swarming down from the city. Above all, there came in what Ben Butler called the "she correspondent," who put a new face on the politico-social question. This addition to our current army of meddlers has played such havoc this last season in Washington that no politician or political woman can henceforth hope to hide his or her inner soul from the public. Until the she correspondent lit on the political perch there was always some immunity for the social side of the most dastardly politician. He used to say: "Interview me, expose me, defame me as much as you please while I am in my bureau or office, but when I shut that official door let me alone." And, as a rule, he was let alone, until within a few years. Now he not only has his public transactions turned inside out, but his private emotions as well. If his wife gets a little present of a diamond necklace, there are sure to be half a dozen of keen women with pencils in their hands at his reception, or sitting on the fences of Pennsylvania avenue, waiting for him to drive by. If he gets tripped up, his wife's tears, her wardrobe, underclothes, her false teeth, her glove bills, her whole physiognomy become public property.—Cor. New York Herald.

The Postal Appropriation Bill.

By a section in the Post Office Appropriation bill, relating to third-class matter, all transient papers, magazines, books, all printed matter with the exception of circulars, unsealed, are restored to the former rate of 1 cent for every two ounces, while merchandise and unsealed circulars will remain at the present rate. The bill appropriates for the transportion of mails $15,837,581. That embraces the "Star" routes and steamship lines, at $6,737,851, and railroad routes at $9,100,000, against the estimates of the department of a little more than $17,500,000. The reduction upon the item of transportion of mails is $1,662,149. There is nothing in the bill which affects the fast mails, such being run by special arrangement between the Postmaster General and the railroads.

CHARLES W. CHURCH, a real estate broker of Glastenbury, Conn., having been convicted of obtaining money by false pretences, carried his case up to the Supreme Court, but he died, and the Supreme Court, not having heard of his death, granted him a new trial.

Truant Madge.

The shadows lie sleeping on field and hill;
The cows came home an hour ago;
The bees are hived, and the nests are still;
Where can the child be lingering so?

Oh, where can the little laggard stay,
So swift of foot as she ever has been?
It is not so far, by the meadow way,
To the lane where the blackberry vines begin.

Her mother stands in the doorway there,
Shading her eyes from the setting sun,
And up and down, with an anxious air,
Looks for a trace of the truant one.

Has she wandered on where the swamp flowers blow
In the darkling wood and lost her way?
Has she slipped in the treacherous bog below
That hides under mosses green and gay?

Nay, timorous mother, spare your fears!
Your little maiden is safe the while,
No marsh bird screams in her startled ears;
Nor forest mazes her feet beguile.

She is only standing amid the rye,
There at the end of the clover plain,
And pulling a daisy star, to try
Whether her love loves back again;

And Will bends over the bars beside—
Two heads are better than one, forsooth!—
Leaning and looking, eager-eyed,
To see if daisy tells the truth!

Around the Farm.

Farmers should not be dependent on the market for the sale of products of their farms. Corn, potatoes, hay, oats, and vegetables can be condensed into other articles which will keep until they will sell.

We are told from time to time that forests have a wonderful effect upon climate, increasing or decreasing rain falls, but the arguments offered pro and con are founded mainly upon theories. —Moore's Rural.

I have found out one thing about potatoes that you perhaps don't know, that is, potatoes need thinning to insure a good, early, marketable crop. At the second hoeing you pull out all the tops except from one to four, taking the small and weakly ones, and you will see the benefit of it.—Maine Farmer.

Unless great care is used, butter is always of different colors before the first working (after salting). Some portions will have little or no salt, and be of a lighter color, and the dairywoman should work so as to mix these portions with that thoroughly salted, or she will have streaky rolls or tubs of butter. A very little care, when working the second time, will prevent this result.—Practical Farmer.

A fast-walking tea, mthat would go over one-quarter more ground in a day, would, in a short time save enough to the farmer to pay the additional cost of such a team over a slow-walking one. Another advantage in fast-walking teams and improved implements is, one can get over the ground oftener, and thus keep the weeds under, when they would otherwise get the start and ruin the crop.

The following recipe for a cement is one of the best for the farm and household: Take four parts gum arabic, three parts starch and one part sugar. Reduce to a fine powder and mix well. The powder should be kept in a well-corked bottle, and when required for use mix a little of the powder with water to every ounce of which ten drops of glycerine have been added.

Apples ought to have as sweet an air in their winter home as any other kind of food. They take in, very readily, the musty odors of close, moist cellars, that are little better than vegetable pits; and the difference between a crisp, high-flavored apple, and one that is flabby and poor, is often simply the difference in the storage which they have had. This fruit needs gentle handling, a cool, dry room, just safely above the freezing point, and distance from all rank vegetables or unpleasant odors.

An exchange, remarking on the chafing of the breasts of horses, says: "The common practice of using pads of sheepskin under the collar is objectionable, especially in warm weather, because it accumulates heat and makes the breast tender. A better way is to take a piece of thick and smooth leather, cut it just the size of the collar, or a little wider, and let it lie flat on the neck and shoulders of the horse. This will lie still and smooth on the horse's neck, while the collar itself moves about, and so it will prevent chafing. In addition to this, let the breasts of working horses be washed off every night with clean water."

"There is a vast difference," says an exchange, "in the flavor of eggs. Hens fed on clear, sound grain, and kept on a clean grass run, give much finer-flavored eggs than hens that have access to stable and manure heaps, and eat all kinds of filthy food. Hens feeding on fish and onions flavor their eggs accordingly, the same as cows eating onions or cabbage, or drinking offensive water, impart a bad taste to the milk and butter. The richer the food the higher the color of the eggs. Wheat and corn give eggs the best color, while feeding on buckwheat makes them colorless, rendering them unfit for confectionery purposes."

About the House.

Potato Cheesecakes.—Four ounces, of mashed potatoes, butter, flour, and sugar, and two eggs; mix all together with a fork, and bake in tins lined with puff paste.

To Brighten Black Kids.—You can polish up old black kids nicely by putting them on your hands and rubbing the surface with black ink, using it more freely on the most faded spots. When dry, they will look quite bright and fresh.

Eggs with Anchovy Sauce.—Boil some eggs hard, cut them in halves, take out the yolk and pound it in a mortar with a little anchovy paste; then replace this in the cup formed by the white of the egg, and garnish the dish with a little water-cress.

To Remove Ink from the Hands.—Rub them with vinegar and corn meal. If that does not answer, take half a teaspoon of oxalic acid in a basin of water and wash your hands. But rinse them well, or the poisonous acid makes them rough.

Cheese Pudding.—Grate three ounces of cheese, five ounces of bread, warm one ounce of butter in a quarter of a pint of milk, and mix with the above, then add two well-beaten eggs, a little salt, pepper, and mustard; mix all well together, and bake in a piedish for half an hour.

Soak over night one cup of oatmeal in one cup of cold water and a little salt; in the morning, add one cup of sour milk, one tablespoonful of sugar, one teaspoonful of soda, and fine oatmeal enough to make them as stiff as fritters (wheat flour will do to thicken it, but oatmeal is better). This will make two cakes if you wish to bake it like "Johnny cake"—we like it that way.

A correspondent of the Boston Cultivator says: For kitchen and pantry floors there is nothing better than a coat of hard paint; the cracks should be filled with putty before it is applied, and the paint allowed to dry at least two weeks before using. Then it is easily kept clean by washing (not scrubbing) with milk and water; soap should never be allowed to touch it. Red lead and yellow ocher I prefer for coloring; the former makes a hard paint that wears well.

French Pancakes.—Half a pint of milk, two ounces of butter, two ounces of loaf sugar, two ounces of flour, two eggs. Put milk, butter and sugar into a saucepan to dissolve (not boil), beat eggs and flour together till quite smooth, then add the other ingredients and well mix. Divide this quantity and put it in four saucers to bake for twenty minutes; lay two pancakes on a dish, spread preserve over, and cover with the other two pancakes. Serve hot.

EGYPT AND ABYSSINIA.

Termination of the War—The Horrors of the Campaign—An American's Sufferings in the Hands of the Abyssinians.

[From the New York Times.]

From a private letter from an officer of the Khedive's army in Egypt we take the following: The result of the fighting in Abyssinia between the Egyptian troops and King John's army, the Government at first, it appears, feared to have known—certainly feared to publish the truth, and not without good reason. Perhaps it was a continuation of her traditional Oriental policy which has worn a rut out of which she can't lift herself, but must sooner or later be jolted. A part of the Egyptian forces met King John's army and gave battle, the fighting continuing three days. At the end of this time King John had lost nearly half his army in killed, wounded and missing; the killed, wounded and missing of Egyptians totalling about the same as the killed and wounded of the opposing forces, which were variously estimated at from 50,000 to 100,000 fighting men. More than this, the day after the last day's fight, King John's army fell back one march and sent in a flag of truce asking for an armistice. He said he had lost a great many of his people in battle, as he supposed we had also; that he did not wish to see any more blood shed; that he was a friend of the Khedive and wished to live in peace with him. He thought terms of peace could be agreed on if the armistice should be granted. It was granted and fighting ceased. The greater part of the troops have returned, and peace practically has been restored, though some of the details in winding up may not yet have been concluded.

As it was publicly known and proclaimed to the Abyssinians that their territory was not coveted by Egypt; that the war was made only against King John and his followers, by the powers of whom it had been inaugurated, it is incomprehensible why the general facts—the results of the campaign—could not have been published, and confidence and respect if not credit sustained. To an American it is only necessary to say that the American staff officers connected with the expedition did their duty characteristically. Three were wounded, one by whom was captured though afterward released, after suffering some from ill treatment.

You may form some idea of his suffering, the horrors of his dreams night and day, when I tell you that he was severely wounded in the leg, then captured, stripped to the skin, arms tied behind his back until the pain from the swelling became excruciating, made to walk thus for days without meat or drink, in the unobscured sun of Abyssinia, with the full conviction that if he did not keep up with the horsemen he would be murdered. He was made to sleep without cover (naked) in the mountains, where the nights are so cold that two woolen blankets in addition to the ordinary night-clothing are but comfortable. Then, several days after capture, to see in all directions, prisoners and friends forced by the pricks of spears to flee for their lives, and then barbarously shot down, with the fear every moment that his turn would come next; yea, in the midst of the frightful massacre, to be seized by three or four Abyssinians and hurried to a neighboring hill, where the foul deed could be more privately accomplished—more in harmony with the usages of the people; and, in ascending, to be halted at a large rock, behind which he thought to say adieu to the earth, and on which two of the guardsmen and executioners sharpened their semi-circular-shaped sabers, whose grating suggested thoughts of such horrible mangling by their scimetars, dull and awkwardly wielded, as to find pleasurable emotions at the sight of an Abyssinian with a gun near by, whom he begged to shoot him. Every large rock they came to was the same thing repeated, until they got near the summit, when a horseman, it is supposed from King John, ordered their return, and our friend's escape from a barbarous death.

For two weeks he was guarded by boys whom he was obliged to follow, and who delighted in torturing him by threatening motions of mutilation and death.

Of the headquarters staff three were killed and eight wounded. Among the wounded are Col. Dye, Maj. Johnson, M. D., and Maj. Wilson, M. D. Dr. Johnson has recovered; the other two will in time. Let me assure you that if the expedition did not meet with the expectations of those persons who thought the subjugation of Abyssinia was intended, it was not the fault of Americans.

"TIME AND MY RIGHT."

Something Concerning the Brave Little Principality that has Thrown Down the Gauntlet to a Great Empire.

[From the New York Times.]

The coat of arms of the Princes of Servia is a white cross on a red field, with a drawn sword between two dates—1389-1815—and the legend "Time and my Right." A whole history is in this heraldric device. For nearly five centuries the Servians have upheld the cross on bloody fields against the Turks. Through the middle ages they were the border-guard of Europe. The date "1389" represents the year of the great battle, when the free Christian empire of Servia was broken by Amurath and Bajazet, and this brave people was trodden under foot by the Turks. The intervening centuries are long periods of oppression, servitude, and suffering, under a conqueror who never knew the meaning of the word mercy to a Christian. When we recall that in this long era the best youth of Servia were taken as children to be trained for Mohammedan slaves or janissaries, and that a Christian mother often beheld her boys carried away by violence to serve the unnatural vices of Viziers and Pashas and grow up as Mohammedan servants, and that in later years no property or harvest was safe from the rapacity of Turkish tax-gatherers and Governors—that in this long history of tyranny, religion was insulted and all rights trampled on—we may understand the deep and bitter passions which lie back of the present Servian outbreak. The date "1815" is the year of Servian independence, won by the valor of the people; and, though a nominal tribute has been paid to the Porte, Servia since that year has been a free and self-governing state. Her progress and freedom, the happiness and courage of the peasantry, the advance of public improvements, are a perpetual model to the subject Sclavonic provinces in their servitude and barbarism of what they would be, freed from the tyranny of the Turks.

"Time and my right" is the legend which expresses the ambition of the Servian people, as well as of the ruling house. More than four centuries of defeat and disaster have not quenched the passion to be revenged on the Moslem and to restore the "right" of the Servian empire. Before 1389 the Servian monarchy extended from Belgrade to the Black Sea, from the Danube to the Adriatic, and even over Macedonia and Thessaly. Montenegro is still a cliff from that primitive formation, standing over the later drift of the Mohammedan invasion. Bosnia and Herzegovina are only fragments of that ancient Sclavonic state. The Servians have waited almost five centuries to avenge Kassowa, to advance the cross again over bloody fields, and to drive the crescent from Europe.

It might be thought that a little state like Servia, with only a million and a quarter of inhabitants, could hardly venture to throw down the glove to a great empire like Turkey. But it should be remembered that the population of this state is particularly warlike, and animated by the most bitter taaditional hatred against the Turks. The militia has been trained to arms and is remarkably numerous for so small a community—numbering, it is stated, some 90,000. The whole Turkish regular force in all European Turkey is reported to be only 60,000. Then the territory of Servia and all the surrounding provinces has been fought over and over again in the incessant wars with the Ottomans. Every feature has been studied in a stragetic view. So natural are the battle-grounds that history repeats some of the battles, generation after generation. The Servians and the insurgents know their ground. Then, just outside of Servia is Bulgaria, with a population of some 6,000,000 of kindred race, flaming in insurrection and burning with resentment at the recent cruelties of the Mohammedans. To the west are Bosnia and Herzegovina, the kinsmen of Servia, and holding their own against their former master. Little Montenegro is but another Servia, and we doubt if any jealousies of the princely houses can keep her brave army from the fray when Servia declares war.

In European Turkey are eight or nine millions of Sclavonians; in Austria, close by the scene of war, four millions more of the same race. Still beyond is the great Sclavonic empire, with millions burning with ardor to aid their Southern brethren in their unequal struggle with the ancient enemy of their faith and race. Despite the inequality, we should be inclined to predict the success of the weaker combatant, if it were not for one peculiarity of the Turkish race. The Turks, in their degeneracy, preserved one of the qualities of a once commanding race, the "staying" power. They do not know when they are beaten. And, if put on the last defensive, they may hold their lines of communication with Constantinople and protract the war for years. They have repudiated practically their debt, and can now fight on with all they can wring from an oppressed people. The new softa, or devotee faction, ought to have something of the ancient fanaticism, and therefore should fight to the end. The European powers will counterbalance one another, and the crescent and the cross fight their own battles on the historic fields of the Danube, as they have so often done before.

The Biggest Bear Story.

The Reno (Nev.) Gazette repeats it thus: "I've fought 'em standin' and runnin', but the toughest citizen I ever lit into was a black 'un. He was sittin, in the chapparal eatin' manzantia berries, when my dog smelt him and went home. I sneaked up and began agravatin' him by shootin' at his ears and feet. I then took around him, and with three shot cut off his tail. Old Blacky heerd me shootin', and turnin' around see his tail layin' there. He picked it up and looked at the trademark, and I see in a minute that war was comin'. I lit out for a tree, with only two cartridges left and him a comin'. Well, to make a long story short, I shot twice, hittin' him both times, and he begun to git hot, so he took up the tree after me, I knocked him down three times before my gun broke. He started on the fourth trip, and I didn't know what to do till I thought of my derringer which shot a four-ounce ball. I drew her out, and tied a string to the trigger, and as old Blacky came up with his mouth wide open, I dropped her in. He hadn't time to spit her out, and so he swallowed and I pulled the string. Off went the gun and so help me, I never see anything of bear or pistol since."

FRIGHTFUL CALAMITY.

How Twenty-two Young Women were Burned to Death at Ayr, Scotland.

The Glasgow News gives the following account of the recent burning of the mill at Ayr, Scotland, by which twenty-two young women perished:

"Within the third story of the second block of buildings from Fort street, the fatal spark was kindled. The operatives resumed work after breakfast as usual, and all went on smoothly till James Barr, a laborer in the worsted department, was alarmed by a "young lass" (as he describes her) exclaiming in a state of excitement that there was a fire in the room. The girl had been working at a wool-teaser, and soon it was perceived that the wool had taken fire, apparently from friction. Barr immediately called his neighbors who gathered in large numbers. Three extincteurs kept in the establishment for emergencies of this kind were produced, and an effort made to subdue the flames, but without effect. No sooner was water poured on one corner than the fire spread to another, defying the utmost efforts of all present to keep it within bounds. Some one at an early period called for a sheet with which to "smother" the fire; but with such alarming rapidity did it spread that any attempt in that direction would have been useless or worse than useless. In a few minutes those who had gathered round the spot where the fire originated were compelled to flee for their lives, leaving portions of their clothing and all they possessed in the mill behind. So far all was right, in respect that no damage resulted to life, but the sequel of the event which had just been inaugurated was disastrous and appalling. In the garret overhead of the room described, James Barr aged 50 years, and father of the man named above, was working with 25 young women under his charge, and there the great loss of life took place, James Barr, it is alleged, on hearing the screams in the flat beneath, and on being informed that there was a fire, made an endeavor to keep the cries of those who were apparently terror-stricken beneath from penetrating his own department and causing greater consternation than was necessary. He then ran downstairs, saw the imminent danger of the whole establishment, rushed up again and gave the alarm, but was too late to effect an escape for himself or others as the staircases were all "ablaze," and the smoke and fire were such as no one could pass through and live. A scene more easily imagined that described followed. The young women rushed to the windows and called for that aid which could not be afforded them. They gesticulated and screamed and sobbed in the presence of death, and implored those outside to save their lives. Meanwhile the fire spread rapidly, the buildings one by one were enveloped, the flames shot high in the air, and before long the spot where the helpless females had been vainly seeking for succor was reduced to ruins, and those who occupied it were lost beyond hope of recall. Several most painful incidents are reported in connection with this event. The old man Barr was, before the fire obliterated everything, seen at one of the windows waving his hands apparently calling for rescue, and a large number of the girls were holding by him in the last lingering hope of having their lives spared. One young woman, named Catherine McKinnon, jumped from the height of four stories and fell heavily on the ground beneath. She was taken up insensible, placed on a mattress, and removed to the Ayr Hospital. She was alive when the hospital was reached, but expired in a few minutes. The poor girl, who was 16 years of age, fell on her forehead. Her skull was fractured, her arm broken, and other injuries sustained, so that all the skill which could be brought to bear could not save her life. Another young girl, named Simpson, residing in High street, came to a window screaming. Her sister, who happened to be beneath at the moment, called out, "Jump out, or you'll be killed," and the little girl instantly leaped over. The sister endeavored to catch her, but as the height from which the leap was taken was very great both came into violent contact and were thrown down. The sister escaped unhurt, a fact which is marvelous, but the young girl was a good deal bruised, it is feared seriously so. Her hair was burned with the flame, which just before her leap was devouring all before it. Those who had found an exit from the works now made the best of their good fortune and ran from danger, while the unfortunate persons left behind were at the mercy of the devouring element. Mothers appeared on the scene in terror, asking for their daughters; brothers and sisters looked everywhere for their relatives, who, alas! could not be saved. It was impossible to say who were and who were not among the unfortunate victims till well on in the evening, when the fire had been subdued. Hoping against hope, parents expected that their children might return at the usual hour, and waited with eager anxiety their appearance."

A Western Fat Boy.

A Western fat boy was transferred last Friday from the Erie broad-gauge to a narrow-gauge train of the Lehigh Valley road at Waverly. His name is David Navarre, and he hails from Illinois. He was on his way to the Centennial, where he will be exhibited. His parents, who are both small people, accompanied him. This Western fat boy is 14 years and 6 months old, and weighs 475 pounds. He is 6 feet and 7 inches tall, measures 3 feet and 4 inches across his shoulders, and girts 6 feet and 7 inches around his hips. He occupied the whole aisle as he walked through the car, and it was too warm for any other passenger to sit in a seat with him. A flat car with a spring platform wagon on it would have been the proper equipage for him. He will be a bigger show than the $10,000 ox would have been had he lived to reach Philadelphia.—Binghamton (N. Y.) Republican.

SELF-SLAUGHTER.

A Suicide Elaborately Planned and Accomplished—Seven Different Ways of Facing Death.

A young man named Frederick Addison Jeffery, aged 24 years, called at the Palmer House, Chicago, on the 3d of July, and engaged a room, paying for it until the morning of the 6th. At half-past 12 on that day a chambermaid noticed the gas burning in his room and gave notice of the fact, when a man was sent to see about it and presumably to request the sleeping, and it may have been intoxicated, occupant to turn it out. But after continually rapping and receiving no response the messenger procured a ladder and looked through the transom into the room. A sight met his gaze which made him shudder, for, dangling from a rope so suspended as to hold it in the middle of the bath-tub, was the body of a man evidently quite dead. Assistance was called, the door opened, and the scene of horror exposed to view, and that terrible sight proved to the astonished beholders that Chicago, which has furnished so many wonderful incidents to the history of the nation, had in this tragic episode contributed the prize centennial suicide to the annals of death.

Upon investigation the corpse proved to be the body of Frederick Addison Jeffery, presumably a member of the firm of Wyckoff & Jeffery, general agents for the "American plaiting machine," of Peoria, Ill. Further disclosures in reference to the melancholy affair tend to show that the suicide is one of the most remarkable, if not the most remarkable, ever on record, both from the motive which prompted it, the number of deadly agents employed, their wonderfully ingenious arrangement, and above all for the cool deliberation and elaborate preparation which was apparent in every detail of the work of self-destruction.

Ordinary mortals, seduced into tasting of the unknown joys or sufferings opened out by an indulgence in euthanasia, are apt to depend upon one or at most two agents of death to accomplish their purpose, but this young man successfully experimented upon his unfortunate body in no less than four ways separately, namely, those of hanging, poison, shooting and throat-cutting, and would have indulged in a fifth—stabbing to the heart with a small dagger—had time permitted. In addition to this he had saturated all his clothing with alcohol, and had placed alcoholically-saturated cotton on some soft substance upon secured wires running lengthwise of the bath-tub, to which he intended to set fire, and thus render his remains a charred and unrecognizable mass. The deceased had taken three slats from the bedstead, and had carefully, as is plainly seen from the ingenious knotting, bound them together with several thicknesses of fine cord. He had screwed a hook into the center of this improvised gallows beam so that the cord which should terminate his life should not slip from its place, but would be kept exactly in the center. He had soaped the line so that it should slip up quickly and tight. This beam he had placed between the edge of the bath-room partition and the wall of the room, tilting it up against the wall of the room somewhat so that it might not slip. On one side of him hung a blood-smeared razor, depending from the beam by a string, and on the other side, attached in the same way to the beam, hung a small pistol, which, upon examination, was found to have been fired off. Upon the little side-table were two small vial bottles and a glass, around the rim of which a long string had been tied. Both bottles were empty, as was the glass, and it is supposed from the fumes from the bottles that one contained whisky and the other chloroform. A small bit of looking-glass hung upon a nail, evidently placed there by the deceased, for it was ingeniously wired so as to hang straight, and had doubtless been used to aid him in making a fearful gash in the throat at the proper and most fatal place. The bath-tub was nearly full of water, and in it the corpse hung suspended by the cord to the beam, having evidently taken poison first, gashed his throa with the right hand, and fired off the pistol into his body with his left one, then slipping from the sides of the bath-tub upon which he stood, had been jerked into the water by the fatal noose he had previously arranged about his neck.

Jeffery left two letters, one addressed to the clerk of the hotel, and the other, which is a description of his plans in prose and verse, addressed to the Chicago Times. He was undoubtedly insane, though the manner of his taking-off was methodical enough. He gave no reason for going to his death save that he was too happy to continue in this state of life. Directions were left by the deceased as to the disposition of his remains and effects, which were fully complied with by the proprietor of the hotel.

The poem addressed to the Chicago Times is written in a plain, legible hand. Herewith an extract is given:

If you respect one's dying wish,
Then bury not my corpse;
But let it then dissected be
In Buffalo, by R. V. Pierce, M. D.,
Who wrote with common sense
The People's Medical Adviser.
To him an order I have sent,
That he my body may procure,
What worse can come to it
Than that I will have done?
Will I not hang the body up
To poison, stab, and shoot?
To carve a bit as well,
'Twill burn until the cord give way
And lets it fall into the tank,
Where it will scald and drown.
The flesh you could not recognize,
So let him hack away,
And do with that just as he will,
But save the bones, I pray.

Into the earth they must not go
I cannot, will not, have it so,
I want my skeleton to stand
Where now I might have stood.
The frame that's carried me about,
To-day I want with you,
To-morrow will be soon enough
To put it out of sight.
If this is done—and I do beg
That you will let it be—
Then dirt will never cover bones
That were inside of me.
To-morrow you can never catch;
'Twill always be to-day,
To-day and I together then
Will outlive all the world;
Of use my bones you'll surely find,
If you'll but let them stay,
But weak shall Jefery ever be
If you turn them into clay.
May curses rest upon the head
Of him who would my will deter;
May Heaven's fittest blessing fall
To those who will my wish confer.
In a moment now all ties I'll sever
Faithful friends, farewell forever.

Specie Exports.

According to the last quartely report of the Bureau of Statistics at Washington, just issued, the amount of gold and silver coin and bullion exported from New York for eleven weeks, ending with June 10, 1876, was $12,779,336, of which sum $7,906,111 was in American gold coin. This indicates a total export of specie for the year of about $60,000,000. With such an enormous annual outflow of the precious metals from this port alone, adding to it the export of $10,000,000 or $15,000,000 from San Francisco, it must be apparent that all the talk about "specie resumption" is the flimsiest sort of humbug.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C. July 17, 1876.

DEAR COURIER—The heated term has created a desire for cool drinks, and as a consequence a resolution was introduced into the House instructing the committee on accounts to furnish lemonade in the cloak rooms for the members. This has been the custom heretofore, and the Senate side is now enjoying that luxuery. The resolution was adopted on a "vina voce" vote, the name of each member not being called. When the vote was announced, the tall form of "Blue Jeans" Williams, chairman of the Committee, rose in the back part of the House, "Let us have the yeas and nays on that," he said. The demand was seconded, and when result was made known only about thirty had voted its favor. Many of them were willing to vote for it, as long as their names did not go upon the record, but the moment their vote was to be recorded, they agreed with Uncle Jimmy, that it was a useless expenditure. So you see its a good thing to have the right man in the right place. Over twelve hundred dollars was spent for lemonade last congress, which is saved by the unflinching honesty of our candidate for Governor. There has been a good deal of sport made of him, because of his refusal to favor expenditures like these, but as one of the Republican papers here says: "Position assumed by Mr. Williams is sound as well as economical. Gentlemen in private employ, who are every way the peers of Representatives in Congress, are accustomed to pay for such personal refreshments as they may need, in hot as well as cold weather, out of their own pockets, and there is no good reason to be adduced why gentlemen in the public service should not do the same. There is no patent of nobility in office holding which requires other people to pay the personal expenses of those who are favored in that way. Besides, it is said that the use of lemons and lemonade is destructive to teeth. Congressmen who board at establishments where chuck steaks are furnished should not fool with their teeth. The gentleman from Indiana knows what he is about."

Those who want an honest, fearless economical administration of our State affairs, will vote for Mr. Williams, as against Mr. Orth, who is now charged with having been connected with jobs and peculations, while a member of Congress. The New York Herald of the 13 says: "The Foreign Affairs Committee of the House have damaged him by evidence, mostly his own, which showed that while he was a member of Congress and of that committee in the Forty-first Congress, the committee reported favorably upon the Venezuela claims; that Mr. Orth thereupon appeared before the next Congress, of which he was not a member, as the attorney of Stillwell, Minister in Venezuela, who had $30,000 of these claims, and Talmadge, the American Commissioner, who audited the claims, and, according to Mr. Orth's account, owns a larger amount than Stillwell. Mr. Orth was elected to the Forty-third Congress in October, 1872, and after his election and during the winter of 1872-3 he came to Washington, in the service of the same persons, to lobby and act through Congress, ratifying the final awards of the commission, for which he received $7,000 and his expenses. This is forbidden by section 1,781 of the Revise Statutes, which makes such services performed by a member of Congress a penal offence. It is said here that when the report on the Venezuela business is made public it will need something more than the appointment of Mr. Tyner as Postmaster General to strengthen the party in Indiana.

There has been considerable excitement here over the recent change in the Cabinet. Postmaster General Jewell, was asked to resign, the other day, and he promptly replied, Mr. Tyner, of Indiana, taking his place. Jewell was known to be a Bristow man, and he was available no longer. Pratt, of our State, Commissioner of Internal Revenue is to resign at the end of this month, and in fact all those who assisted in prosecuting the whisky rings, are having their heads cut off.

The republican organs and friends of Mr. Hayes, who claim to be in favor of reform within the party, pretend to be indignant at the action of the President in turning reformers like Jewell and honest men like Yaryan and Dyer and Bluefond Wilson out of the public service. This is pure and naked hypocrisy and deceives no one. The journals who talk in this strain, who mildly censure the President, are secretly delighted at his course, because they know the removals are made in the sole interest of their candidate, and that unless the whole power and influence of the administration are put to work he can not be elected in November. While prating about reform and honesty and the purification of the civil service, they quietly look on without a word of honest, sincere protest at the wholesale slaughter of officials, whose only crime is that they strove to do their duty and save the treasury from the theives who were robbing it. To help Hayes the theives are to be set free and probably restored to their old places under the government, while the honest men who brought them to punishment are driven from public life into obscurity.

There is the most thorough agreement between Grant and Hayes, and every move made by the administration at the present time is done with a view toward his election next fall. Grant is managing Hayes' campaign—Grant and the senatorial ring at Washington. If it were deemed advisable to keep Bristow in the cabinet, Bristow would have been retained. But Grant and Hayes knew that as long as he remained at the head of that department there would be no chance to organize whisky rings, levy blackmail on the treasury employees and swindle the revenue service to raise money for the campaign. The Postoffice Department is capable of being made an immense political machine in the hands of a postmaster general who is willing to make it a citadel of fraud and corruption as Creswell did and as Jewell refused to do. The ex-Postmaster General honestly endeavored to conduct it on business principles, and he is removed because of "political considerations." In other words, the postmasters must be made to understand that their first duty, from now until election day is not to the government, but to Mr. Hayes. They must subscribe money for him, electioneer for him, or be turned out. Jewell refused to do this, and his head has been taken off and his place given to a subservient tool and politician who will have no scruples or compunctions as to what is expected of him.

Hayes is completely in the hands of Grant and the senatorial cabal, and is as much responsible for what they do as they are themselves. Grant is seeking to perpetuate his power through him and the responsibility thus imposed upon him he cannot in any way evade. He owes his nomination to Grant, for had it not been for the effective work of the Secretary of War, Mr. Cameron, he would not have been chosen as the republican standard-bearer. Grant helped him then, and he is helping him now. He is sending honest men to the rear, and calling the rings and corruptionists to the front to help him. He is reorganizing the Treasury Department on its old basis of fraud and rottenness to help him. He is preparing the way to pardon McKee, and Joyce, and Avery, and McDonald to help him. He has turned out Jewell to help him. He has given his honest Commissioner of Internal Revenue Pratt notice to quit to help him. He has given orders to every official in the government that the Spencers, the Kelloggs, the Packards, the Caseys, the Shepherds and the Babcocks shall again have full controll of the departments to help him. Grant's friends are the strongest supporters of Hayes to-day, and if he shall go into the Executive Mansion next March, Grant will bequeath them as the councilors and guides of his administration. All that they were to Grant they will be to Hayes and all that Grant was to them will Mr. Hayes become. This is the position he stands in to-day as the republican reform candidate for the presidency. His promises and pretensions are a mockery a delusion and a snare.

Mr. Baker addressed the House last Friday on a contested election case in Massachusetts. If I were permitted to say so I think the speech was delivered more for the benefit of certain Republicans in the district, who have had some doubts as to the "true blue" republicanism of their representative. It is partizan enough I should think, because the Republican here commends it, and that is the worst radical sheet I know of. I am inclined to the opinion that Holman and he have dissolved partnership. I regret that a legislative career so brilliantly begun, in the name of honesty and reform should terminate in so short a time.

Hon. J. A. Woodhull, of Angola, called to see me last Friday. He is on a flying visit to the capitol, via. Centennial.

A fight took place at the Saginaw Depot last Monday between A. Spach, Conductor Baker. They both got some small "specks" over their eyes, but it took two of them to make Al's. "speck" Sheriff Meese was called and the parties were called before 'Squire Walborn, but no suit was had. Baker kicked him while he was getting off of his train, was what started the rumpus.

Freeman Kelley stated in his speech before the congressional convention at Goshen, that he was ready to meet Hon. John H. Baker in a joint discussion at any time and any place that might be fixed upon. Kelley says he means business, this time; in fact he doesn't allow that little 58 majority to interfere a particle with his onward march to Washington.

Grant is beginning to prove a very troublesome elephant on the hands of our Republican brothern. His relentless warfare upon the honest men in the public service fills them with consternation. The leaders say he is playing the d—l with the party by his singular course at the opening of the presidential contest.

The new twenty-cent pieces are likely to prove a great annoyance. They are so near the size and so closely resemble the silver twenty-five cent pieces as to require uncomfortable scrutiny to detect the difference. The boys are already counting on the numberless five cents they will make passing the new coins for quarters.

An exchange wants ladies to take off their hats in church, but as long as half the ladies go to church for the purpose of displaying their hats, it is hardly possible that the suggestion will be adopted—unless a glass case is placed along side of the pulpit for their accommodation, and the name of the owner is promenently affixed to each hat.

This is the way the New York "Witness," which strongly reports Hayes and Wheeler, talks of our "Irish Roman Catholics and atheistical Germans."

"Had the hordes of priest-ridden Irish Roman Catholics and atheistical Germans which have since invaded the land come a century sooner, a stable republic would have been no more likely here than in Mexico; and the question arises now, how much strain can the good element in our nation bear?"

Bristow who prosecuted whisky thieves has had to resign; Yaryan who detected them has had to resign; Pratt who will not "whack in" with the thieves is to be kicked out of revenue service, and every honest man in the cabinet or in the department must get out. And mind you, Grant is not doing this, but the party demands it. The prosecution of whisky thieves hurts the party and must be stopped! This is all done by the party of high moral ideas. Bosh!

Passing down street the other day we observed Jones intent on looking at something he held in his hand. We asked him what he was looking at and he said he was looking at the son (sun). As we drew near we found he held in hand the picture of a beautiful boy and he said "is not that pretty?" We said yes with a sigh, for we had waited many years for such a sight but have not seen it. O, that it might shortly come to pass.

Now the brick contractors are on their ear. We had reference, last week, to the man who gave 30 cents more a thousand to foreign contractors than he would to have it put up at home. There is one contractor in town informed us that he made an agreement to turn in a town lot. Everybody knows his own business the best, and for our part it is imaterial, only we would think it more fair to deal among our home boys. Anything further must be written by the parties interested, and that, of course, will let us out.

Considerable quantities of wheat are finding a market at this place. We believe that the prices paid here are equally as good as those of other places, and there is no reason why our farmers should draw their grain eight or ten miles further, when they can dispose of it to as good an advantage right here. All their purchases can be made of the merchants of Auburn on as good terms as those of other towns. Farmers, look to your own interests, and learn what you can get for your grain here, before taking it elsewhere. It is to the benefit of town and county alike, that a good grain market should be built up here.

It was but a few days since that a tall Auburn-haired Republican, who was lectioneering went into a butcher store where there was piled on the head of a barrel in cone shape a lot of eggs. The granger saw the barrel without seeing the eggs and turning around sat down on the edge of the barrel. He was busily engaged in conversation and did not feel the eggs break under him nor did he notice the fact when he started off, but when he came to town again he had on another pair of pants. He treated a number to keep the papers from getting hold of it on account of his wife.

Religious Notes.

—There was no church at the Presbyterian Building last Sunday. Mr. Fowler, of Waterloo was expected but failed to be there.

—Rev. Mr. Shearer delivered the morning sermon at the M. E. Church. We learn he is about to leave our city for a position elsewhere.

—The churches were all attended largely owing to the hot weather. The M. E. congregation was very large.

—Rev. Mr. Ward we learn is now officiating at the Baptist Church.

—The M. E. Social of this place, was entertained at Pleasant Lake to-day. There seems to be a lively interest taken in our societies.

The Decorating of the Slodier's Graves a put up job.—COURIER.

The resolutions to make this part of the programme for the 4th was offered at the meeting to arrange for the celebration by a democrat, and no thought was entertained by him of "putting up a job." That gentleman was F. E. Davenport, who will sustain our assertion. —Auburn Republican.

By a democrat. That's good enough. Now, Bro. Weamer, why didn't you have some democrats on the programme? We have nothing to say against the soldiers. The proprietor of this paper has been a faithful soldier, and probably the writer would have been had he been old enough in years. We like to advise people older than we are, and our advise to you is to shut up, or sing "In the Cottage by the Sea."

Burned to Death.

CUPPS' CORNERS, July 16th, 1876.—On Wednesday 10 o'clock A. M., our quiet neighborhood was startled with the dreadful news that one of our worthy citizens was burned to death. The unfortunate one was Hally Clark, wife of Jeff. Clark and daughter of David Weaver, of your city. I visited the family in the evening and stayed with them till death closed the scene. Will give you the facts as near as I could get them from persons that saw the transaction. Nora and Pheby Moody were visiting Mrs. Clark. Hally stepped from the sitting room to the adjoining kitchen to prepare dinner for her guests. Put the kindlings in the stove, lit it with a match and burned slowly. The girl that worked for Hally said pour on some coal oil, our folks do. She reached for the can; poured on a little in front of the fire and said what a pretty blaze. Then took off the lid and poured some in on top of the fire. The can exploded and throwing contents on lower part of her person and on her arms, heard to exclaim, "Oh!" when can bursted. Flames and smoke rushed into sitting room. Feby and Nora ran out into the yard. The latter snatching a quilt from the lounge and met Hally coming around the house with the flames running far above her head burning leaves from the trees she passed under, and with arms extended toward the girls for help saying "oh, my poor baby." Nora told her to sit down and she did so, when she threw the quilt over her. Mother Walborn, who lives across the way, was back of her house in a potato lot, heard the alarm and ran over and she was burning yet. The old lady pulled off the quilt and put out the fire. But the fiend had its work well done. All her clothing was burnt off except her corset. Her person was literally roasted from her corset to the bottom of her feet and her arms from her shoulders. The flesh and nails stripped from her fingers and lay strewn around. Her intense suffering lasted about an hour. Doctors Spooner and Cowen were on hand promptly, but could not help her except to give an opiate. From this time on she grew calm and rested easy and gradually sank away. In thirteen hours she passed over the river without a struggle. How sweetly she breathed her life away. Hally left two sweet little orphan girls. The babe was crying for its mother's breast when her spirit was taking its flight. Oh, what a heartrendering scene this was. I wish I could shut it out of my mind. Hally was a kind and affectionate mother and a devoted wife. A worthy member of our society always cheerful and happy. Has a pleasant look and a kind word for all. Cut down in the bloom of youth at the age of 23 years 9 months and 6 days, she leaves many warm friends to mourn her loss. Mr. Clark was away from home when the accident happened which he regrets very much. Thinks he might have saved his wife had he been at home. This would have been utterly impossible All was done for her that could be done.

A POEM WITH A MORAL.

[The following lines were written by David Barker of the New York Post about twenty years ago, and are as admirable for their quaintness as for the important lesson they convey.]

THE LION AND THE SKUNK—A DREAM.

I met a lion in my path,
  ('Twas on a dreary autumn night),
Who gave me the alternative
  To either run or fight.

I dare not turn upon the track,
  I dare not think to run away,
For fear the lion at my back
  Would seize me as his prey.

So summoning a fearless
  Though all my soul was full of fright,
I said unto the forest king,
  "I will not run, but fight."

We fought, and as the fates decreed,
  I conquered in the bloody fray;
For soon the lion at my feet
  A lifeless carcass lay.

A little skunk was standing by
  And noted what the lion spoke;
And when he saw the lion die,
  The lion's track he took.

He used the lion's very speech,
  And stretching to his utmost height,
He gave me the alternative
  To either run or fight.

I saw he was prepared to fling
  Vile odors from his bushy tail,
And knew those odors very soon
  My nostrils would assail.

So summoning a humble air,
  Though all my soul was free from fright,
I said unto the dirty brute,
  "I'll run, but will not fight."

MORAL.

As years begin to cool my blood,
  I'd rather all would doubt my spunk
Than for a moment undertake
  To battle with a skunk.

WAITING FOR AN ANSWER.

My story? my life? Oh, it has been too uneventful, too simple in its incidents. I could tell you the sorrows of others, but my own—well, well! as you will. You shall hear. The wound has never healed, and if I put my hand above it, the place still throbs, even as it will beat and ache till kindly nature says to me, "Sleep, poor weary one, and rest." And then peacefully, trustingly, and with a simple hope of forgiveness, may I sleep that long sleep which they say so flippantly has no waking, but which has a waking, as every lesson which we learn in life persists in teaching us.

You will smile, perhaps, when I tell you that I was once what people called pretty—that this pale-hued face was once plump and rosy, these sad eyes bright, and this gray, scant hair golden-brown, long, and flowing. But why should I think you would smile? Do I not know that you must have seen the gay young plant putting out its tender leaves in spring, growing green and luxuriant of foliage in summer, ripe and ruddy in autumn, and gray, bent, and withered in age? And should I be pitied because I have but followed in the way of nature? Surely not. It is not for that I ask your sympathy, but for the blight that fell upon the young plant and seared and scratched it so that it seemed for months that it would die; but it lived, as I have lived to tell you this.

Do you know that wondrous feeling which comes in the early year, and that strange sense of keen delight, that elasticity of spirit, when, full of youth and hope, the very tears of joyous sensibility start to the eyes as you wander amidst the trees and flowers in spring? I remember how I felt, oh! so well, even though it is now forty years ago, and I was 20.

Jack and I were engaged. It was all such a simple homely, affair. We had known one another for years—the children of neighboring farmers. Jack—I still call him by the simple old pet name of those days—Jack had been away at a good school, and being bright and shrewd and clever he had won his way on, taking to engineering instead of his father's farm life, and now it had come to this that he had been staying at home for a month previous to going out to a good appointment in Melbourne.

That month in spring, how it passed! We had met again and again, and in his honest, manly way, he had asked me to be his wife.

"You know, Grace, that I have always loved you," he said; "and now I have hopes and prospects, it cannot be wrong to ask you for your promise."

We were walking by the river-side as he said this, and how well I can picture it all—the soft gliding water mirroring the trees on the opposite bank, the young, green buds just breaking from their cases, and, above all, the soft tender blue of the spring sky—the blue, he had told me, that was like my eyes.

"Do you want me to promise, Jack?" I said simply, as I looked up in his face.

"No, darling; I am satisfied," he cried, as his strong arms held me to his broad breast, and that was all. No oaths could have bound me more tightly to him. I felt that I was his wife when he should come to claim me.

We were late that evening, and entered the house shyly, for there had been so much to talk of and plan. In a month's time Jack was to sail for Melbourne; then he was to work very hard for three years, and come and fetch me to be his wife.

That month glided by, and the last day had come. It was, as I told you, spring-time—joyous spring-time, with the hawthorn's snowy blossoms, the apple-trees pink and the pear-trees pearly with their pyramids of flowers. Every meadow I passed was starred with golden butter-cups, and from every spray the birds trilled or jerked forth their merry songs of hope and love.

I could not feel sad, even though I was going to meet Jack for the last walk before he went away; but, as I said, mingled with the feelings of ecstasy there was a strange tearfulness of eye, and my breath would come at times with a sob.

He was by the stile, waiting for me—the stile down by the long mead, half-way between the two farms—and, as he took my hands in his, we neither of us spoke, but stood gazing away over woodlawn and meadow, all clad in their wondrous beauty, and listened to the birds. Now it was the soft tender coo of the stock-dove from the wood, now the jerked-out song of the linnets; then, soft and mellow, from the thick hedgerows floated towards us the fluty notes of the blackbird, while on high trilled away the larks, singing one against the other to their mates, sitting in the tall grass of the golden meads.

We could not talk, our hearts were too full, for Jack was to be off at daybreak the next morning. But there was no need for words. We loved each other in the simple, nature-taught way that has been since the world began, and we knew that every joyous song around that thrilled upon our ears meant love, and even in our sorrow we were happy.

"Only three years, darling," Jack whispered to me, "and then ——"

The tears rose to my eyes as I tried to answer him, but I could not speak a word.

"And you will let me find a long letter when I get there?" he said tenderly.

"Yes, Jack, I promise," I said, and then it was time to return, for the hours had glided by, how we could not tell.

Jack spent the evening with us at home and then he left us hurriedly, for our farewells had been said in the wood, and it was one hearty kiss, given and taken before the old people, and then good-bye.

But I saw him pass soon after daybreak and he saw me and waved his hand, for I had sat by the window all night, lest I might let him go by and I asleep.
